The Grand Cercle opened as usual on April 1, but the management has made all its engagements for its staff of artists, &c., conditional, and reserves the right to close the establishment on May 1 if the veto be put upon gaming. The latest reports are that a way out of the difficulty is likely to be found. The bonds which the Grand Cercle Company issued at 500 francs are now worth 5,000 francs. The Crédit Foncier is stated to have invested 23,000,000 francs in Aix.

Curious as it may seem, the present publicity given semi-public gambling here is the outcome of the discovery that the associations law, framed by the late M. Waldeck-Rousseau, and obviously directed against the Roman Catholic orders, was being operated in the interest of gamblers. The law, which places all corporations, civil, mercantile, pleasure, or religious, upon the same footing, provides for the formation of clubs, societies, companies, &c., when their object shall be approved by the Ministry of the Interior and the legal tax of organization—a few francs—be paid into the National Treasury.

It is a notorious fact in France, as elsewhere, that a club run by private individuals for purely social purposes, into which gambling is introduced by a minority, soon comes to grief. Under the associations law adventurers from Belgium and Italy, with small capital, formed clubs for the purpose of gambling, and soon became wealthy off their patrons, who played at the tables under the guise of members. An introduction, a card of admission, and a small membership fee—and one could easily lose all available cash, and often much more, for the foreign adventurers had no hesitation in taking notes. As the financial affairs and management of these clubs were in the hands of careful, alert business men, and as the voice of the pseudo-members was merely nominal, quite naturally the clubs prospered, and many Frenchmen, and Frenchwomen also, were ruined thereby.

There is a law against gambling in France, but it can only be operated when public morals seem placed in jeopardy. As far as clubs are concerned, it is a dead letter. The state of almost universal gambling made possible by the associations law soon attracted the attention of the Government, and a bill against private gambling was introduced in the Chamber. The Government had this alternative—it could either drive the bill through the Chambers or immediately close all clubs in which the members did not actively participate in the management by Ministerial decree. The latter M. Clemenceau threatened to do.

A howl then went up from all the pleasure resorts along the Mediterranean and elsewhere, crying that if gambling were prohibited these places would be ruined. Millions had just been expended on o "clubhouse" in Nice, which would be a total loss if the veto against gambling should be pronounced.

So M. Clemenceau held his hand, while it was intimated that a respite would be given those who had large financial interests at stake, so that they could divert their capital. Apparently the stockholders of the Grand Cercle at Aix are seeking to take advantage of the respite; hence the dissensions on the Board of Directors.

BRITAIN WELCOMES BOTHA.

Transvaal Premier Is Cheered by Great Crowds in London.

LONDON, April 13.—Gen. Botha, ex-Commander in Chief of the Boer Army, which taxed Great Britain's resources to defeat, and now first Premier of the Transvaal Colony under British rule, arrived here to-day to attend the conference of Colonial Premiers.

The reception accorded the General both at Southampton and in London was remarkably hearty.

Great crowds cheered him wherever he appeared.

At Southompton he was officially welcomed by the Mayor and Corporation of that city, and in reply to the address Gen. Botha humorously referred to the previous occasion when, on the battlefield, he had been surrounded by Englishmen against his will. The General added that he was thankful he now was in a position to allow himself to be surrounded by any number of Englishmen without fear of the consequences.

PARIS, April 13.—With the close of the horse show and the opening of the first of the two salons, Paris enters upon a new phase of the season. Owing to the threats of the "Pact of Famine," as the apparently stillborn strike of the food trades was poetically called, a good proportion of the society people who otherwise would have been back in the capital by now remain on the Riviera, but the sunny South will soon be too warm to be pleasant, and the season of social gayeties in the capital will then reach its height.

Every week brings an increased number of American visitors, not only from your side, but from Continental Winter resorts.

Mrs. Bostwick has arived from Cannes and is at the Ritz Hotel, while her son and his wife are at the Elysée Palace Hotel.

Mr. and Mrs. Isaac Stern have also come from Cannes, and will remain some weeks in Paris. Another arrival from Cannes is J. J. Van Alen, while Mr. and Mrs. B. B. Kirkland have come from Monte Carlo.

Cannes is fast losing all its Winter residents. Mrs. and Miss Anthony J. Drexel have come to Paris, while Mr. Drexel has started, with his son, Voorhis, on an automobile trip to Biarritz before coming on here. Before their departure from Cannes the Drexels gave a dinner party for the hereditary Prince and the Princess of Saxe-Meiningen. Mr. and Mrs. John Magee were also among the guests. Mr. and Mrs. Magee have gone to Biarritz, where they will meet Mr. and Mrs. P. L. Ronalds, and go with them on a trip to Spain.

A. R. Shattuck is reported passing through Avignon in his American automobile.

Mrs. Spreckels, Mrs. Alexander, and Miss Berger left Cannes in an auto at the beginning of the week.

Eugene Higgins has added 1,000 francs to his previous donation of 5,000 francs for prizes for the fencing tournament at Nice on April 22.

Mrs. Francis H. Leggett is at present in Paris, and had some friends at dinner at the Ritz Hotel on Thursday.

Mr. and Mrs. Lucien C. Chase have arived here from London. Mrs. Ernest Cunard is here and intends to remain a few weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Bourne and family of New York, Mr. and Mrs. Grosvenor Ely of Norwich, Conn., and Mrs. W. H. Burrows and Miss Burrows are among the latest arrivals at the Athenée.

Dr. and Mrs. J. Carl Schmuck of New York are making their way to Paris in an automobile by easy touring stages through the south of France and the Touraine district. Mr. and Mrs. Harris Philips are likewise making an auto trip through the chateau country.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles H. Marshall of New York have arrived in Paris from Rome.

Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin have arrived at the Elysée Palace Hotel from the Riviera with Lord and Lady Craven.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence A. Postley are expected from Monte Carlo to-morrow, and Mrs. Samuel C. Thompson is coming from Biarritz in an automobile.

Miss Fanny Reid was one of the few dinner hostesses of the week. The guests included Mme. Anna Gould, the Duchesse de la Rochefoucauld, (née Mitchell,) Mrs. Thompson, and a number of fashionable French people.

The New Yorkers here now include Mrs. David E. Bartlett, Mr. and Mrs. B. Grunnell, Stuyvesant Le Roy, and Henry B. Hersey, who is going on the Wellman polar expedition.

Mr. and Mrs. Stanley Mortimer, who postponed their departure for America this week owing to the illness of their child, will sail on the 24th.

Among the passengers on the Amerika for New York from Cherbourg are Mr. and Mrs. Henry Watterson, Mrs. Timothy L. Woodruff, Mr. and Mrs. George H. Allen, Mrs. David S. Baker, Robert Glendinning, Walter Roy Weeks, Mr. and Mrs. C. H. Worcester, Princess Ouejusoff, G. B. Palliter, W. L. Abbott, William A. Mason, cousin of the United States Counsel General here, who has passed the Winter in Egypt; James N. Jarvie, and Albert Wolfers, Vice President of the Belgian Chamber of Commerce in Paris.

Among those who sailed on the Kronprinz Wilhelm were Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Holbrook, Mr. and Mrs. G. M. Heckscher, Miss C. Boldt, and Samuel Newhouse, who was accompanied by his nieces, the Misses Kingsbury, and by Comte de la Borde.

A number of Americans are reported here and there about the Continent. Mr. and Mrs. Robert A. Van Wyck have arrived in Rome.

Mr. and Mrs. Littlefield of New York, and Jefferson Coolidge, Miss Payson, and Miss Brewer of Boston are at Pau. Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Moore of New York are at Biarritz.

Mr. and Mrs. Hanna of Cleveland, Mr. and Mrs. I. B. Johnson, and Miss Ogden Jones of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. Guilford Smith of Buffalo are in Naples.

The Americans in Florence this week were Mr. and Mrs. Winfield Scott Moody, Dr. and Mrs. W. Trow Norman, B. Ream, Mr. and Mrs. H. J. Chimery, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Macdonald, Mr. and Mrs. E. Stanton Bayer, and Mrs. John Gibb, all of New York; the Misses Ruth and Louise Richardson of Boston, Mrs. Henry C. Barrett of Baltimore, and Mrs. J. W. Emory of Washington.

Mrs. Newton Claypool, Prof. and Mrs. C. G. Rockwood, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. J. L. Huniker, Mr. and Mrs. George Stanley, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles W. Pardee, all of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. A. Loeb of Philadelphia, are at The Hague.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Head of Boston are among the arrivals at Dresden.

Mrs. M. Gordon and family, and Mrs. D. T. Earle of New York have arrived at Wiesbaden.

Mrs. Pierre Lorillard and Miss A. T. Spofford of New York, E. E. Longley and E. B. Hart of New York, and Mr. and Mrs. F. T. Bowles of Boston are at Lucerne.

A cookery exhibition opened yesterday at the Garden of the Tuileries. Henry O. Havemyer and Mrs. Henry Mumm appeared, taking a great interest in the culinary novelties.

James Stillman, the well-known New York financier, is busy with arrangements concerning the handsome house he recently purchased in the Rue Rembrandt, Parc Monceau Quarter, where he intends to pass a part of every year.

Mrs. Hoff acted as hostess at the formal social inauguration of the sudent hotel or shelter on the Boulevard Saint-Michel, which she founded, and which was really opened last December. The chief aims of the hotel, which is a branch of the Young Women's Christian Association, are to provide physical, social, intellectual, and spiritual culture for American and British girl students. Thirty girls are housed there now. Yesterday's visitors were Mr. and Mrs. James MacDonald, who are on their way back to London from the Riviera; James Stillman, Louis Aston Knight, and Princess Poniatowski.

Lady Grey Egerton has arrived in Paris for a few weeks' visit.

Mrs. Marcelin Singer and family have come from London.

Plink Fisk and H. L. Denny of New York have arrived by automobile from London. Nicholas Pullman, another New Yorker touring France by auto, was yesterday reported at Avallon with Wilson Woodsell and Mr. and Mrs. Norris Lock.

Mr. and Mrs. C. Phillips, Miss Margaret Lowe, and Miss Grace Ensey are at Pau.

Mr. and Mrs. Morris Middleton, the Misses Middleton of New York, and the Misses Lather Ferguson Moore of Chicago are at The Hague.

Henry Savage of New York, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Brill of Philadelphia, Frank Kink of Philadelphio, Mr. and Mrs. Charles Head of Boston are in Berlin.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Leslie Overstreet of Chicago are at Lucerne, where E. B. Hart and E. E. Longley arrived automobiling from Munich, though some of the roads are in bad condition. Also at Lucerne are Andrew Ryan of New York, Mr. and Mrs. F. X. Bowler of Boston, and Frederick Fosse of Indianapolis.

Garson Depew of Buffalo pulled off a handsome gold prize in the golf competition at Ragatz, starting with a handicap plus one, giving a specially fine display of skill at the last hole, where he had to negotiate a high tree with a lofty mashie shot.

Consuelo Duchess of Manchester, who has been in Biarritz throughout King Edward's visit, and who was one of His Majesty's preferred partners at bridge, took several friends to luncheon yesterday across the Spanish frontier in three automobiles. Her guests included Lord and Lady Colebrook and Mr. and Mrs. George Keppel.

ROME, April 13.—The arrival of J. Pierpont Morgan in Italy, and especially in Rome, is always an exciting event from an artistic point of view, as it produces a great stir among art dealers and collectors of all kinds. For several years whenever he has come to Rome he has occupied the same apartment on the first floor of the Grand Hotel, and, while absorbed in his beloved "solitaire," is always ready to interrupt it in order to consider any proposition in regard to antiquities and rare objects of ony kind.

However, those who think that Mr. Morgan is ready to scatter his millions or to be taken in by fakes are much mistaken, as few men of his wealth are as careful in selecting their purchases and ascertaining their authenticity.

This year Mr. Morgan bought in Florence, after employing two whole days in studying and inquiring about it, a most exquisite specimen of early eighteenth century silversmiths' art, a casket for a relic of a saint which was worn on the finger and belonged to Clement XII., a member of the Corsini family. It is about three inches high and one and a half inches squore at the top, tapering down to a hole for the finger. On one side are the Corsini arms in relief—diagonal bands crossed by a horizontal band—and on the opposite side is an exquisite relief of St. George and the Dragon. On the other sides are angels. The top is composed of a large square dark brown opaque stone, with the head of Clement XII. delicately cut in it, to be used as a seal. The stone is the cover for the cavity for the relic. It opens on invisible hinges, and reveals a velvet-lined nest, which is now empty. It is a question why St. George should have been represented on this casket, and any one who will suggest the reason will oblige the purchaser.

One of the most curious objects, indeed many say it is unique of its kind, which were presented to Mr. Morgan for inspection by an official of the royal house was a small picture, almost a miniature, nine by six inches, painted in oils on a cobweb. It represents the Madonna and Child, and bears the signature of "Strobel," with the statement that he invented the method, which must have died with him.

Mr. Morgan tells with great gusto that the other day, thinking he would like to have a look at his lato and regretted possession, the famous Ascoli cope, which he returned in Italy without asking for compensation on hear-Morgan.

"But you cannot," was the reply. "The museum is closed."

"But, surely, I may bo allowed to see it."

"No, you won't. I tell you it is closed."

Even revealing the name of Mr. Morgan had no effect on the monster, who had never heard it, and probably thought all this fuss about a piece of faded embroidery was just to annoy him.

Mr. Morgan's sister, Mrs. Burns, is also at the Grand Hotel.

ing that it had been stolen, he drove to the Corsini Palace, where it is on exhibition. On arriving his way was barred by an imposing individual in a gorgeous uniform, who asked him what he wanted.

"To see the Ascoli cope," said Mr. to the next Court, but it is reported that it will take place in the early weeks of Moy. If this report be true, the London season will be unusually early.

Two young débutantes whose introduction to the gay world is being much discussed ore Miss Drexel and Lady Dorothy Walpole. The latter is the daughter of Lord and Lady Orford, and granddaughter of D. C. Corbin of New York. Her mother, who married the fifth Earl of Orford in 1888, has lived more than half her life in England. Lady Dorothy has a long face and the marked features of the Walpoles, but her mother's golden hair and dainty complexion. She combines the literary tastes of her father with the sporting instincts of her mother. She will inherit vast wealth.

Miss Drexel's début may be postponed a little while as her mother, Mrs. Anthony Drexel, is in mourning for her sister's husband, J. H. Smith. It is said that she is going to America to be with her sister during the first days of her widowhood. The Drexels have been in Cannes all Winter and had a gay time. Mrs. Chapin has arranged to give a dance in honor of Miss Drexel's coming out, and Mrs. Carter will give a dance and dinner.

Ambassador Reid arrived at Dorchester House this evening, having made the journey from Biarritz in a motor. He looks the picture of health, and says he never felt better. Referring to the report that has had some circulation in London, to the effect that he is suffering from consumption, Mr. Reid said:

"The only consumption I know anything about takes place at my dinner table. You may deny the story with my authority."

Alfred G. Vanderbilt told me to-day that the story that Miss Schenck, a member of an old Virginia family, would ride and drive some of his horses at the International Horse Show was a canard. London papers have lately given prominence to pictures of Miss Schenck, and orticles emanating from America telling how the lady had broken with her family through her determination to take part in the show.

"The first knowledge I had that Miss Schenck was in my employ I got from the newspapers," said Mr. Vanderbilt. "There is absolutely nothing in it."

After spending the day with his horses at Red Hill Farm Mr. Vanderbilt camo back to town perfectly satisfied with their condition. He thinks his prospects at the show are very promising. He goes to New York next week for a brief stay.

Mrs. Constance Van Zandt and her two daughters spent the holidays with the girls' grandfather, Lord Avebury. The younger daughter is to be presented this season. They are a handsome pair of girls, unusually tall but extremely graceful. Their father was Ferdinand Snydam Van Zandt of New York, who died fifteen years ago. They have lived obroad ever since their father's death, but have not lost their love for Americh

Mr. and Mrs. Walter Burns will spend the season at Henry White's house in Whitoholl Court; meantime their own house in Mayfair is being beautifully redecorated and refurnished. When the Burnses go back to their own house they expect to entertain lavishly.

Like her mother, Mrs. Bentinck, Mrs. Burns is very fond of society and a thoroughly accomplished hostess. She has a very graceful figure and is extremely chic in appearance—in this respect resembling her cousins, the Misses Mills of New York. Her sister, Mrs. John Ford, who was married only a month or two before Mrs. Burns, has had a great deal of anxiety almost ever since her wedding day, her husband having been desperately ill all the time. He is now at Christ Church Hospital, a trifle better but improving very slowly.

Mrs. Potter Palmer has just left Biarritz for Paris, and her acquaintances hope she will come over from Paris soon with the intention of spending a good deal of time in England this season. Last year she saw little of her friends on account of being in mourning for her mother. Those who remember her earlier entertainments trust that she will renew her interest in society this year. She is immensely admired by English people.

Numbers of Londoners, braving the cold, dismal weather, went to Ireland for the Punchestown races, but not many Americans were there. However there was Lody Hesketh, wife of Sir Thomas Fermor-Hesketh. She is much stronger than she has been of late. She was Florence Shoron, daughter of William Sharon of San Francisco, and at one time United States Senator from Nevada. She is passionately fond of horses and is a splendid rider to hounds. She and her husband spend most of the time at their country place near Towcester.

Mr. Grace's lovely daughter, Lady Donoughmore, was also at Punchestown.

Mr. and Mrs. W. E. Carter have arrived in London. Mr. Carter plays a good deal of polo this season.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Shoemaker and their pretty daughter talk of returning to America almost immediately.

Basil Mills, Third Secretary of the United States Embassy in St. Petersburg, is in London.

John Garrett, the Second Secretary at Berlin, left London this morning for the United States.

What is regarded as the beginning of the influx of Americans this year greatly exceeds the early estimates, which were thought to be very large. The manager of one London hotel said to-night:

"In all my fifteen years of experience I never knew so many Americans to be here so early in the season."

Among the latest arrivals is Miss Van Alen, who is at the Ritz, awaiting the arrival of her father from Paris.

Lord and Lady Bateman, the latter formerly Mrs. Henry C. Knapp of New York, are at Claridge's. They will enter the social gaities early in the season.

Chauncey J. Blair, just from Paris, is also at Claridge's. At the Carlton are Oliver Harriman, Irving Cox, Hamilton J. Schlesinger, Thomas A. Heck, and Mrs. Charles R. Russell of New York, C. Fitch of Boston, Mr. and Mrs. Charles F. H. Smith of St. Paul, Pliny Fisk of New York have gone to Paris for a short stay. At the Cecil are John Major, Helbert Miles, H. B. Powers, G. W. Childs, H. M. Curtis, and D. H. Noonan of New York, Mr. and Mrs. L. F. Spinney, J. H. Nichols, Mr. and Mrs. M. H. Robbins of Boston, Sir Wilfrid Laurier and party from Canada, and Miss Melvin Jones of Toronto.

PARIS, April 13.—Sarah Bernhardt has been hurt to the quick by the allegations in a New York newspaper that she has not personally written the memoirs in course of publication. Mr. Peartree of the firm of Cachard & Co., who has charge of the suit for libel, is confident that his client will win the case, but there is considerable doubt as to her getting an award of anything like the $200,000 damages demanded. I happened to see Frederick Meyer, who is said to have written Bernhardt's memoirs for her. He denies having written a single word. He merely translated and looked after the publication.

Bernhardt writes everything personally, and, owing to her multifarious occupations, makes slow progress in the work. However, the first volume is now completed, and will be published in book form in the Fall.

All Thoughtful Englishmen Who Want the Empire to Last Are Worried Over Tariff Reform Question.

LONDON, April 13.—It makes one's hair stand on end to read what some of the newspapers say of the conference of the British Government and the Colonial Premiers which will open on Monday. Serious writers in some of the most important English journals say the fundamental issue of the conference is the severance of the relations of Great Britain and her colonies or the formation of a partnership. Even editors who don't subscribe to the proposition that the Government must accede to the demands of the colonies are not free from anxiety when they contemplate the possibility of the Premiers going home with their longings unsatisfied. They pooh-pooh when some one says that this is a perilous, tremendous moment in the life of the British Empire, but it is plain enough that all thoughtful Englishmen who want the Empire to last are more or less worried when they foresee the situation which will be created when the Government says no to the colonial Premiers' call upon Great Britain to reform her tariff and to make preferential arrangements with the colonies.

Even those who say the refusal of the British Government to meet this call will not necessarily cause an estrangement seem to rely for their opinions chiefly upon the expectation that Sir Henry Campbell-Bannerman will manage to sooth the disappointed Premiers. They profess to believe that the Premiers will humbly kiss the rod and go home to tell their peoples that they will have to jog along in the old way. The difficulty of accepting this forecast lies not only in the doubt that Campbell-Bannerman will find a syrup that will effectively soothe the Premiers, but also in the doubt that their peoples will patiently listen when advised to forget their aspirations and relapse into long suffering.

These colonial Premiers are here for business. Platitudes will not satisfy them nor social cajoleries divert them from their purposes. They shrug their shoulders when they are told that Great Britain is unalterably attached to free trade. They don't believe in unalterable things. What the British electorate said in 1905 they regard as of small importance now. It does not, they say, bind Great Britain to-day in such a way that it cannot consider the colonial propositions for better trade relations with the mother country.

One of the Premiers said to me that he honestly believed that if the British people only knew the earnestness of the sentiment in his country in favor of preferential trade relations with England they would overturn whatever declaration they made at the last election with respect to tariff reform, and instruct the home government to grant the colonial demand. Quite in line with this opinion is the belief widely prevalent that if the government lets the Premiers go home unsatisfied on the trade propositions the country will turn against it.

It is impossible to say what will happen at the conference or in what mood the Premiers will leave England, but there is not much doubt that the government will be condemned by many, who supported it at the last election if it coldly replies to the colonial petitions: "This is a free trade country; we cannot consent to any arrangement based on a change in the fiscal policy."

Whether the knowledge that such a revolt in popular sentiment had taken place would cause the colonists to hold on a while longer before undertaking to make with other countries the arrangements repudiated by Great Britain, none can tell, but the possibilities of the conference are such that they touch other countries than those directly concerned in it. America has a big interest in the meeting that will begin next week.

"WHAT'S IN A NAME?"

An Interesting Sequel to the Le Bargy Divorce Case.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

PARIS, April 13.—A nice question turning upon the Shakespearean "What's in a name?" is shortly to come before the Paris courts. A divorce was declared some time ago between M. Le Bargy, a sociétaire of the Comédie Française, who is regarded by Parisians as "arbiter elegantiarum," and his wife, who is best known to the playgoers of Paris and London by the name Mme. Simone Le Bargy.

The Monsieur now objects to Madame using the name "Le Bargy," and asserts that a divorced woman has no right to call herself by the name of her former husband. This is incontestably the general rule, but Madame contends that when a woman has created for herself under the conjugal name a reputation in art, the theatre, or literature, she has the right after divorce to keep as a pseudonym a name by which she became celebrated while using it legitimately.

BERLIN, April 13.—The discussions of the German Roentgen Society, which I cabled you last week, have provoked widespread discussions in the German press, especially the statement that the Roentgen rays are desstructive of embryonic life and produce sterility in all animal species.

It is generally admitted that, while the statements are undoubtedly true, they constitute a grave danger if applied by unscientific or criminal operators. In fact, it may be said that the X-rays can retard the propagation of all animals by rendering both sexes sterile. Prof. Foersterling of Hanover has fully verified his theories, which agree with those of Prof. Schmidt, by a long series of experiments with rabbits. Not only did he sterilize mature animals, but he retarded the growth of the young.

I have interviewed many physicians who are familiar with the effects of the Roentgen rays, including Prof. Lassar, and they all unhesitatingly confirm the statements of Prof. Schmidt.

Paris Fears Experiments.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

PARIS, April 13.—Paris specialists say that several extraordinary experiments with the Roentgen rays have been made with rabbits and guinea pigs at Nancy and Toulouse, all tending to prove the theory that the rays produce sterilization, but it is the opinion of a majority of French scientists that any further experiments in this direction are inexpedient and should be discouraged.

When, twelve years ago, a professor then unknown to fame, who had been experimenting for years in an obscure institution in remote Bavaria, discovered a new light which made the bones of a living person visible, the news about it was read with amazement, unbelief, and curiosity throughout the civilized world. Then proof came in the form of photographs of the framework of the human body, and the public was astounded and mystified.

Now and then stories have appeared in newspapers telling that some patient has been burned by the X-rays, and, possibly, has brought suit against a physician for money damages; so the people know, in a vague way, that the new agent is not always safe. More seldom, however, are the sufferings and sacrifices of the scientists described, because they are not known to many save themselves. Some persons will recall the sad case of Dr. Woigal of Rochester, who, while experimenting with the rays, was so injured that surgeons had to amputate first three fingers of his left hand, then his right hand, then his left arm at the elbow, and later at the shoulder, but were unable to save his life. That was a conspicuous instance. Scores, possibly hundreds, of other physicians have been the victims of the deleterious effects of the rays, many of them in very distressing ways. Yet of these the public has never learned.

Now, however, the results of the experiences of many men who have worked with the rays have been given out, and the public may know what the effects have been. The most startling of these effects is reported by Dr. F. Tilden Brown and Dr. Alfred T. Osgood in a paper published in The American Journal of Surgery. It is that "men by their presence in an X-ray atmosphere incidental to radiography, the therapeutic use of, or testing tubes, may, after a period of time, be rendered sterile." That statement, the physicians said, was based upon discoveries made in the study of ten X-ray workers who had consulted with them. Later the investigations of those two physicians increased the number of cases, and they now have records of eighteen cases in whom the same effect has been demonstrated.

"These cases," the doctors report, "are men in robust health, whose ages range from 22 to 40 years. Twelve of them have operated X-ray tubes for one-half to four hours at least three times a week for the greater part of each year for the past two to six years. Six of them are the subjects of more or less severe X-ray dermatitis of the hands."

The fact has been established by the experience of many physicians that the physical factors emanating from the X-ray tube are capable of affecting tissues beneath the skin without affecting the skin through which they pass.

"The responsibility to guard against the injury of assistants, patients, spectators, and others who may be exposed," the paper concludes, "rests upon the men whose business it is to understand as fully as possible the injurious as well as the beneficial effects of the force which we have all marveled at since Roentgen's discovery put into the hands of the medical profession this great aid to our diagnosis and gave impetus to the development of a valuable addition to our therapeutic measures.

"We want to give this warning to those who are employing or will make use of Roentgen rays: Repeated prolonged exposure does produce sterility in the human being. Adequate protection to all parts of the body not directly exposed for examination or treatment should invariably be provided."

The action of the German Roentgen Society in recommending that the use of X-rays be restricted to those who are licensed, as told in THE TIMES's special cable from Berlin last Sunday, and the statements made subsequently by prominent New York physicians of their concurrence in that suggestion, have revived interest in the new method of diagnosing and treating diseases and injuries and brought out a more certain description of the present aspect of the strange energy which is revolutionizing diagnoses and treatment of many diseases and which has been described as "the most ubiquitous, powerful, and potent" agent ever acquired by mankind, an agent "more like dynamite than any other thing." This description of the conditions of the handling of this dangerous energy indicates clearly not only the desirability but the need of confining it to those who are absolutely proficient.

Numerous as have been the developments, it is a curious fact that up to the present time no satisfactory meter has been devised to measure, in terms of absolute units, the intensity of this form of radiant energy. But an experienced operator can tell by the color on the fluorescent screen with great approximation of accuracy the quality and energy of the ray being emitted. Here, too, is something that books cannot teach the physician.

Then must be determined the desirable distance of the target of the tube from the point upon which it is to impinge. The duration of the exposure to the ray is then ascertained, depending on what it is desired to accomplish. In this the operator must bear in mind all the physical conditions connected with the generation of the rays as well as the susceptibility of the living tissue to this form of energy. In this comes into play all the experience which has been acquired by the operator, and there, also, the large, always somewhat uncertain, personal equation, of keenness of observation and the system of self-checks which every successful man uses in any walk of life.

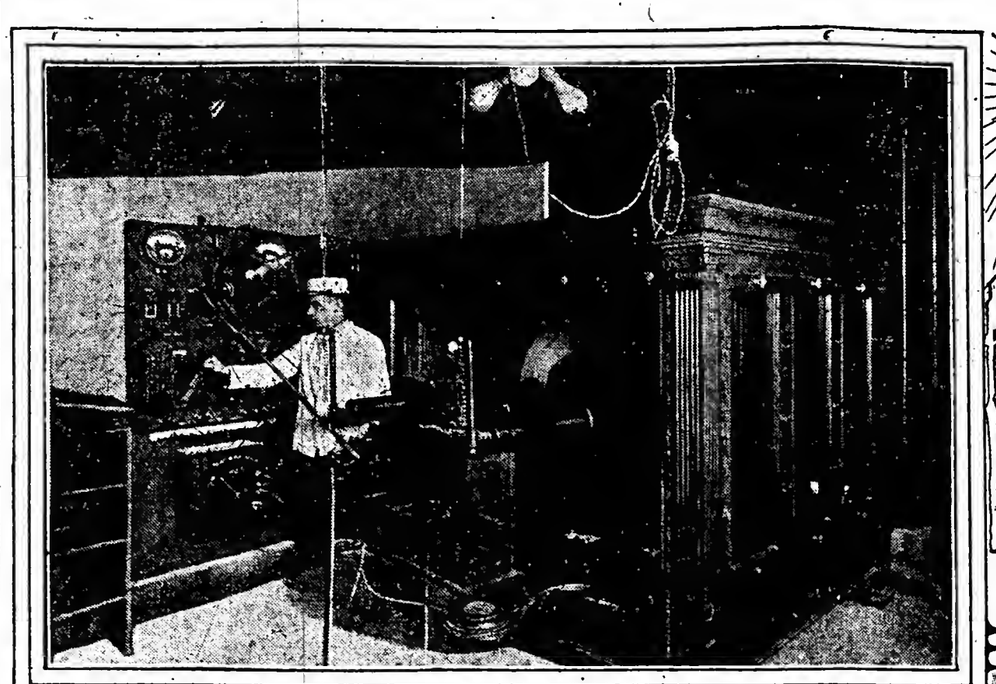
The danger to life, especially that which is embryonic, has been recognized, and great precautions have been taken to guard against it. While some attendants at X-ray treatments wear leaden aprons and then go into the presence of the rays in relays, so that the exposure may not be continuous for any period, nor repeated too often, other physicians have taken even more radical steps by providing a separate room for their work. As is shown in an accompanying illustration, the machine and the patient are in one room while the operator, in another, controls the current by means of switches and watches the rays by means of a mirror. His separate room is divided from the machine by a leaden partition, so that there is no possibility of the rays penetrating it. Where the new form of tube is used, however, this precaution is not necessary.

There are times, though, when personal contact with the rays is unavoidable. There being no accurate meter for measuring the intensity and quality of the rays, the physician must determine it in each case, where a delicate application is demanded, by first subjecting himself to the test. He picks up the fluoroscope with one hand and places the other between the screen and the tube. To his experienced eye, the depth of color of the flesh and bones, seen in that way, is the determining factor. Repeating this many times, the rays first inhibit the cells, robbing them of their vitality; then they destroy the cells, and then, when the burn becomes severe, ulcers appear—ulcers which seldom heal. In testing new tubes or other devices, the experimenting physician, seeking to add to the general fund of knowledge, often subjects his hands to this danger, and many have been seriously, painfully injured thereby.

Not only in the tube, the direct conductor of the rays, has the advancement been marked. Radical changes have been made also in the machines which generate the electrical force. In the Cornell University Medical College, on First Avenue, near Bellevue Hospital, there is the largest static machine in the United States, possibly in the world. It has forty revolving plates, whereas the average machine has but ten or twelve. It produces a current ten times the volume of current ordinarily used. The college authorities had it constructed for experimental purposes, so that the institution might know all about the capabilities and possibilities of currents of that enormous volume.

It is with that machine that Dr. Geyser Professor of Electrotherapeutics, has conducted many important experiments, not the least interesting of which was with a hen and her eggs. Dr. Geyser wanted to determine the effect of X-rays upon life, and he established beyond a doubt that they kill.

The hen and the fresh eggs Dr. Geyser obtained from a farmer down on Long Island. Keeping them in the department of pathology, where other animals and fowls are kept for experimental purposes and where they had plenty of fresh air and light, Dr. Geyser had the box taken down stairs and exposed to the rays from the machine for ten minutes every other day for two weeks. Those exposures caused the death of the embryo in three eggs in about thirty minutes—that is, there was no development of the germs after that time. Some shells when broken open revealed deformed, stilted, featherless chicks which were lifeless. Two chicks lived for a few minutes after their shells were broken. Other experiments conducted by other physicians have determined the destructibility of the rays when applied to seeds and grasses. Experimenters hope soon to establish definitely the effect of the rays upon human life. That they can kill a man is undoubted, but the amount of his resistance to the effects of the energy has not been ascertained as yet.



STATIC MACHINE IN THE CORNELL UNIVERSITY MEDICAL COLLEGE IN THIS CITY IT HAS 40 REVOLVING PLATES FOR THE PRODUCTION OF ENORMOUSLY POWERFUL X-RAYS AND HIGH FREQUENCIES. THE AVERAGE MACHINE IN PHYSICIANS' OFFICES HAS 10 OR 12 REVOLVING PLATES.

TO GUARD AGAINST THE EFFECTS OF THE X-RAYS, PHYSICIANS, IN SOME INSTITUTIONS OPERATE THE MACHINE FROM ANOTHER ROOM WHICH IS EQUIPPED WITH LEADEN PARTITIONS. THE LIGHT IS WATCHED BY THE REFLECTION ON THE MIRROR.

AMERICAN SINGER DELIGHTS ITALIANS

Miss Blanche Fox of Boston Wins an Extraordinary Success.

MAY RETURN THIS YEAR

Mlle. Kafmai, Polish Singer, Highly Praised in Rome—Hopes to Sing Here.

ROME, April 13.—It is not unusual for Italian singers to have great success in the United States, but it is a remarkable thing when an American girl comes to Italy and sets her audiences on fire.

Just this miracle is being wrought nightly by Blanche Fox of Boston, who sings under the name of Bianca Volpini, which is merely a translation into Italian of her name.

Her greatest success has been as Amneris in "Aida" at Pisa, where night after night she brought 2,000 persons, the extreme capacity of the theatre, to her feet. Her Italian season is just at an end, and this fortunate girl, with her voice of velvet, has the choice where she will go next—either to Covent Garden or to Mexico, California, and other places in America. She is accompanied everywhere by her father. Since leaving the United States some years ago she has gained immensely in charm of acting, while her voice has matured, softened, and broadened.

Mlle. Kafmai has been singing at the Costanzi here, and her success has also been phenomenal. She sang also at a private house before Mrs. Douglas Robinson, President Roosevelt's sister, who could not contain her enthusiasm and stayed on, although running the risk of seriously offending a Roman Princess, who was waiting for her at the Palace Hotel.

Mlle. Kafmai is a Pole, who has sung all over Europe. Maestro Gambati, Director of Queen Margherita's Quartet, declares she has the best voice he ever heard. Mlle. Kafmai has not yet been in the United States, though it is her dream to go there. She is young and her ambition will probably be realized.

GERMAN SPEED TESTS.

BERLIN, April 13.—Speed experiments are to take place on the State railway between Berlin and Sangerhousen. Sixty-eight miles an hour is expected for the future. Trains are now run at sixty-two miles, and even seventy-four, over certain safe routes, but the chief of the locomotive department of the Prussian railroads declares that the last is the utmost speed possible.

A national automobile and bicycle law is soon to be presented to the Reichstag, to hold good everywhere in Germany, regulating speed, demanding a light and bell license, and prohibiting racing except on certain tracks.

The railroad foundry at Rosen is constructing iron tents intended for Imperial receptions in places where there are no buildings. The tents can easily be taken apart for transportation.

AMERICAN ART IN PARIS.

Association to Hold its Annual Auction Sale on May 10.

PARIS, April 13.—The American Art Association will hold its annual auction sale of pictures and statuary contributed by members at the Elysée Palace Hôtel May 10, when it is calculated that many Americans will be in Paris, and by their purchases help a very meritorious institution, while at the same time getting good value in return for their money.

The sale will be under the patronage of the American Ambassador to France. About 100 works will be on exhibition the day preceding the sale.

Last year the association issued an appeal for funds, to enable it to erect a suitable clubhouse, but so far the response has hardly been commensurate with the good work to the credit of the organization since its foundation in 1890.

TALES OF SOTHERN AND MISS MARLOWE

London Shows Great Interest, and the Willing Press Agent Is Kept Busy.

MARIE TEMPEST'S SUCCESS

She Scores a Triumph in Clyde Fitch's "The Truth"—Critics Don't Like the Play.

LONDON, April 13.—London is becoming greatly interested in Mr. Sothern and Miss Marlowe, who will open a six weeks' engagement on April 22. Their first night audience will be very remarkable, even for London, in respect of the presence of royal and titled personages, and their manager, A. T. Worm, confidently predicts full houses throughout the engagement.

Mr. Worm has been dong some extraordinary work in the rôle of press agent. He has brought the London editors to such a pitch that they cry for his writings. They never cry in vain, for he is ready at a second's notice to furnish any amount up to a full page, with pictures. While I was at his office yesterday an editor telephoned that he would like a signed article from Mr. Sothern.

"Hold the wire," said Mr. Worm, who began fishing in a big portfolio stuffed with typewritten literature.

"Here you are," he said, resuming his conversation with the editor, "here is a nice little interview with Mr. Sothern on endowed theatres. Oh, yes, you may sign his name. All you will have to do is to localize the story. I will send it down right away. Goodbye."

"That's the way it goes on all the time," Mr. Worm remarked to me. "Why, London is a paradise for the press agent who understands his business."

Then he showed me articles of various lengths that he had prepared in response to editorial requests. I found, on reading one of them, that London owes its messenger boy service to Sothern.

"Rather an interesting item of news, that," commented Mr. Worm.

The very day that Sothern and Marlowe open, the American company which is to play "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" will arrive in London. It is thought that the play will be very successful here on account of the great vogue accorded by English readers to the book from which it was drawn. Mrs. Wiggs is about as well known in London as in New York.

Marie Tempest has won a personal triumph in the portrayal of the leading part in Clyde Fitch's play, "The Truth," and very likely she will make the play successful, in spite of the unfavorable criticisms on it. It seems to be Miss Tempest's function these days to save plays from a prompt repudiation by the public. London's critics unanimously place her in the forefront of the actresses of to-day. They say she is one of the cleverest women ever seen on the British stage and can make almost any play go. This, no doubt, will astonish Americans who remember Miss Tempest simply as a clever musical comedy artist.

In the Fitch play Miss Tempest captivates the audience because she is such a cheerful and accomplished liar. Lots of fault is found with the play, but none with Miss Tempest. Even Mr. Walkley, The Times's rather fastidious critic, pronounces her unexceptionable. There is no more natural actress on the stage, he says.

Mr. Fitch has gone to Paris to arrange for the French production of "The Truth." He hopes to have a very famous French actress assume the leading part. Mr. Fitch is working hard on a new play that he expects will be produced in America in the Autumn. In this play he will deal satirically with New York life of the present time.

KAISER AS A PHILOSOPHER.

A Conversation With an Impresario on Berlioz and Goethe.

VIENNA, April 13.—In connection with a dispatch from Berlin, stating that Emperor William invited Jules Massenet and Camille Saint-Saëns to lunch at the palace on the occasion of the visit to Berlin of the Monte Carlo Opera Company, the Neue Wiener Tageblatt publishes an account of an interesting conversation which Raoul Gunzbourg, the impresario, had with the Kaiser. His Majesty, talking of a performance of Berlioz's "Damnation of Faust," said:

"When I remember that Berlioz wrote the "Damnation" in 1829 I am obliged to regard him as the father of modern music. If we consider the different ways in which composers utilized Goethe's "Faust," we must recognize that Berlioz, better than any other, entered into the spirit of the poet and understood the philosophic meaning of Mephistopheles.

"The world has a bad habit, even in art, of attaching too much importance to the superficial, not sounding the depths of the creative mind. That is why French literature is judged by its light novelists and it is forgotten that France produced philosophers like Voltaire, Diderot, and Pascal."

As M. Gunzbourg expressed admiration of this sound judgment the Kaiser said modestly:

"Well, you know, one has to read a bit."

BORGHESE IN AUTO RACE.

Prince to Take Part in the Peking-to-Paris Contest.

NAPLES, April 13.—Prince Scipione Borghese, eldest son of Prince Paolo Borghese, head of the ancient house of that name, left Naples to-day on his way to Peking, accompanied by the Princess Scipione, in order to participate in the automobile race from Peking to Paris. The Princess will return to Italy by way of San Francisco, Washington, and New York.

The Peking-to-Paris automobile race is being promoted by a Paris newspaper, and has aroused considerable interest in Europe. It is planned to send the competing automobiles from Paris to some port in China, probably Tien-Tsin, and have them start from the Chinese capital on June 10. The Chinese authorities, it has been announced, have authorized the contest. The plan is to have the racers travel over certain distances every day, which will allow the automobiles to be together every night. It is reported that more than twenty automobiles have been entered. The distance from Peking to Paris is about 8,700 miles.

Supply depots are to be located along the route, which will be what is known as the Peking-Irkutsk caravan route.

TO REHABILITATE THE FRENCHWOMAN

M. Brieux Undertakes the Work in His New Play.

TO SET FOREIGNERS RIGHT

Is It Proper for Them to Believe That the French Have Bad Morals? He Asks.

PARIS, April 13.—A French dramatist has taken up the cudgels on behalf of Frenchwomen. This is M. Brieux, whose plays have always been forceful in facts, although hitherto mainly in the denunciation of abuses. His "La Française," ("The Frenchwoman,") is to be shortly produced at the Odéon.

In his opinion the Frenchwoman, particularly the Parisian woman, needs rehabilitation in the eyes of the outer world, which has been utterly wrong in its conception of her virtues as a wife. M. Brieux's play, for the production of which the celebrated Antoine is making elaborate preparations, owes its inception to the author having traveled outside his own country, in Germany especially, whence one returns to France, he says, with a feeling that one is again meeting gentlemen after being with tradespeople, although he adds that the Germans are a good sort. M. Brieux holds that great prejudice has been done Frenchwomen by pornographic plays and literature, and the average foreigner believes that she collects lovers as one might collect postage stamps.

"It seems," said the dramatist in an interview, "that we should do something to efface this very deplorable and baseless impression. Our Ministry of Foreign Affairs, our Society of Men of Letters, our Publishers' Association, should undertake common action. When a foreign sovereign comes to France enormous sums are expended in order that he may take away a pleasant memory of our country, and why not spend some money in order to rehabilitate the character of the French in the minds of foreigners?

"Is it right to allow other nations to believe that Frenchmen and Frenchwomen have the morals of rabbits? So far as I am concerned, I am determined to do my best to correct this impression, and my play originated in that determination. 'La Française' is a light comedy in three acts, the first being laid in Trouville, the two others in a provincial town."

COURT PUNISHES RAILWAY.

Orders Station Closed a Year for Violation of Liquor Law.

CHURCHES FERRY, N. D., April 13.—Judge Cowan of Dell's Lake to-day directed that the station of the Great Northern Railroad be kept closed for a year because a drayman, Rudolph W. Wurdelman, was permitted to use the station for storing beer in violation of the Prohibition law. Wurdelman was accustomed to take order about town for beer and deliver the liquor from supplies kept in the station. He pleaded guilty upon prosecution, was fined $250, and sentenced to serve ninety days in the county jail.

All the costs of the case were taxed against the Great Northern and will be a lien on the company's property until paid.

AMERICAN HORSES WORRY THE ENGLISH

Fear That Our Exhibits Will Have Everything Their Own Way at Olympia.

MUCH INTEREST IS SHOWN

Entries to be Made from Every European Country, Including Russia, Austria, and Turkey.

LONDON, April 13.—Though the opening of the international horse show is seven weeks ahead, society and sporting people are greatly interested in it, and the Secretary of the show, who has just returned from a two weeks' tour of the Continent, says that interest in the show is quite as great there as in England.

An amusing feature of the advance gossip here is the fear that the Americans will have everything their own way. This fear is stimulated, no doubt, by the great attention paid to the Vanderbilt horses, the reports in the newspapers of other American exhibits, and the stories circulated by Yankeephobes that the exhibition is to be modeled closely on American lines. The Secretary, in order to soothe the amour propre of Englishmen, intends to publish in the English press the following statement:

"It seems that the Americans will not have it all their own way at the International Horse Show. American sporting papers received to-day publish descriptions of the horses which will cross the Atlantic to compete with the best England can produce, but if the trend at recent London horse shows is any guide, the English exhibitors are reserving their best for the international show. It has been impossible to purchase even at fancy prices horses likely to do themselves and their owners credit in the strong competition at Olympia."

Coming in the week between the Derby and Ascot, when London will be full of the society people of England, America, and the Continent, the horse show will be found to be the social event of the year. The early rush for boxes, even before the prospectus of the show company has been issued, has been surprising. The Secretary says that those wishing to entertain parties at the show should lose no time in making application for boxes. Speaking of Continental interest in the show, the Secretary said:

"During my two weeks' tour I was impressed by the great hold the show has taken in the highest circles of Continental society. The Continent will be largely represented. Among the novelties will be twenty-eight Continental army officers, who will bring high jumpers, which they will ride in uniform. The high jumping is to be a great feature. The management has arranged for exhibitions every day. In fact, the show will take on the nature of a continuous performance. Something will be going on in the ring all the time. The Directors are already assured that exhibitors will come from practically every European country, including Turkey, Russia, and Austria.

"The decorations at Olympia will be in the hands of Continental experts, who promise something sensational. They will use bunting and flags of all nations and make lavish floral displays peculiarly appropriate to the horse show. The great hall will be illuminated as never before, for we have arranged to quadruple the present electrical installation. We shall, of course, profit by the experience our American Directors have had with horse shows. Undoubtedly the Olympia exhibition will be more like the New York shows than any previous exhibition held in England.

"The only thing that worries us now is the fear that the hall will not be big enough to hold all who want to attend."

BERLIN, April 13.—Baron Heyl zu Herrnsheim, a member of the Reichstag and a big leather manufacturer doing an American business, has given the City of Worms $750,000 for the purpose of a public hall in which popular lectures may be delivered.

The donation is a gift in honor of the marriage of his son Cornelius to Princess Mathilde Isenburg Buedingen. The Isenburgs have a rank equal to royalty, while the Heyls were ennobled twenty-one years ago. The Baron's second son is Secretary of the German Legation in Brazil. Baron Heyl has made himself conspicuous recently by opposing in the Reichstag the interests of the Standard Oil Company in Germany.

GREAT DISTRESS IN CHINA.

Touching Incidents Related by Famine Relief Committee.

SHANGHAI, April 13.—Telegrams received by the Relief Committee here from a number of additional famine districts to-day report that the distress is growing worse. Some of the sufferers are contending against fever or smallpox in addition to lack of food.

Many startling incidents are recorded, such as a father knocking his head on the ground as a sign of thankfulness for the relief brought by a visitor, the man being too weak to rise. The face of a boy who applied for aid was so plump that at first assistance was denied, but the lad was afterward stripped, and it was seen that his body was greatly emaciated, the plumpness of his face being the result of oedems, due to starvation. A starving man choked himself to death by swallowing almost whole a biscuit which had been given to him by a casual visitor. A woman with three children was found weeping on a bridge, where her husband had fallen dead from starvation.

A husband, wife, and their five children were discovered in a house, starving to death, huddled together, clothed in rags and eating the bark of trees, their only food. A woman came to the headquarters of the Relief Committee in the field, said her husband had died of starvation, and begged for food for herself and her newborn baby. These are only sample incidents in the work of relieving the famine sufferers.

The gratitude of the poor people who receive relief is very touching.

BODY OF EGYPTIAN KING IS UNEARTHED

HE LIVED IN B. C. 2700

Date of Reign Now Fixed—Tomb 1,000 Years Older Than Any Other Monument Found at Thebes.

CAIRO, April 13.—James Dennis of Baltimore, associate director of the excavations at Luxor, reports finding, besides fragments of the body of King Mentuhotep I. a number of models of sacred boats, wooden statuettes, a gilded sandal of the King, and parts of chairs and thrones, all somewhat deteriorated by their forty-six centuries of interment.

The discoveries show that the temple-tomb of Mentuhotep I. is older by a thousand years than any monument hitherto found on the site of ancient Thebes. The temple is unique in architecture. It represents a period of transition between the pyramid type of interment and that of later times.

The remains of a finely painted shrine to Rameses the Great, also found, show that the temple was known and revered as the last resting place of the greatest monarch Egypt ever had.

Mentuhotep I. was a King of the eleventh dynasty. The uncertainty of the time of his reign, which has now doubtlessly been definitely fixed, was due to the inaccurate interpretations made by Daressy of the inscribed blocks, now here in the muscum, taken some years since from a temple of Mentuhotep at Gebelen, and which had been rebuilt into a Ptolemaic temple wall.

These scanty fragments tell a remarkable story, which was for the first time published to the world only a few months ago by Prof. James H. Breasted of the University of Chicago. The first block from Gebelen bears the Horus-name of the King, and thus identifies him as Nibhotep-Mentuhotep I. It represents him as smiting an enemy, bearing the inscription: "Chief of Tehenu and ——"

The second block represents the King again smiting the enemy, four in nnmber. The King bears the inscription: "Son of Hathor, Mistress of Dendera, Mentuhotep."

The first enemy is without inscription, but represents an Egyptian. The other three are designated as: "Nubians, Asiatics, and Libyans." Over the whole is the inscription: "Binding the chiefs of the Two Lands, capturing the South and Northland, the highlands and the two regions, the Nine Bows and the Two Lands."

Thus Mentuhotep makes no distinction between his victories over foreign foes and his conquest of Egypt itself, and actuany includes an Egyptian among the foreign barbarians.

When experts have had time to interpret the inscriptions of the temple-tomb it will be interesting to see whether they confirm the Gebelen fragments in one particular—Mentuhotep made no effort to conceal the fact that he was a usurper. But did he overthrow the Heracleopolitians of the tenth dynasty? The answer may now be revealed.

ROME, April 13.—A tragic double suicide has taken place in the Tiber at a place a short distance from Rome. Two young Austrians, Gustave Pfiffer and Flora Kulm, hired a boat, rowed to a secluded spot, tied themselves together at the neck and wrist with a strong rope, fastened heavy stones to their feet, and plunged into the river.

When the linked bodies were found the faces were terribly distorted from the death struggles.

A CURE FOR DYSENTERY.

Wonderful Results with the Vaillard Method in France.

PARIS, April 13.—Judging by the reception accorded at the Academy of Medicine to reports upon the seropathic treatment of cases of dysentery extending over the last twelve months, an efficacious remedy has been discovered for this disease, which is the scourge of warm latitudes.

Dr. Vaillard is the author of the method, but several other physicians have been experimenting on the lines he originally laid down, and all are of one mind as to its value.

During the year 243 cases of dysentery have been subjected to seropathic treatment in various centres suffering from dysenteric epidemics.

The patients are divided into two classes, comprising 200 adults and children and 43 patients confined in lunatic asylums. In the first class 99 cases were very grave, 25 among them being apparently beyond the possibility of recovery, yet only 10 deaths are recorded, and of these six patients were at the point of death when the first inection of the anti-dysenteric serum was made.

Among the inmates of asylums where dysentery was peculiarly prevalent, the method gave equally satisfactory results.

BERLIN, April 13.—In an interesting article on Mr. Carnegie, the Kölnische Zeitung declares that if all signs do not fail the reign of Messrs. Rockefeller and Carnegie in the United States will soon come to an end.

The people, the paper says, are up in arms against great accumulations of wealth. How Socialism is progressing, of course none can tell, but Carnegie and what he stands for will probably disappear, and in fifty years a new generation may consider his 10,000 libraries as the remnants of a Cyclopic Age—gigantic, but the inner kernel of which was barbaric.

JAPAN'S GUILDS INCREASE.

He expressed his satisfaction at being made the godfather of the expected child, and said he had blessed an elaborate layette for the baby, which was to be his present.

ORLEANS, April 13.—Premier Clemenceau, owing to the fact that the conflict between Church and State might possibly result in disturbances, has refused permission for the civil or military authorities to participate n the annual historical procession and festivities in celebration of the deliverance of the city from the English by Joan of Arc, in which the Clergy take a prominent part.

PARIS, April 13.—Prof. de Martens has written a letter to Le Temps denying the persistent reports, relative to coolness with which he was said to have been received in Germany, declaring that his reception at very capital, without xception, during his recent mission, was of a most cordal character.

BERLIN, April 13.—Socialists are making elaborate preparatons for the funeral to-morow of Ignaz Auer, the well-known Socialist Member of the Reichstag. The Socialist organ, Vorwaerts, to-day prints the programme of the ceremonies and the order of the procession. The police authorization forbids the playing of marchse or other music except of a funeral character, and prohibits the carrying of red flags, unless heavily draped with crepe. In addition, persons in the procession must not wear red rosettes or other party emblems, and the delivery of speeches at the grave is strictly forbidden.

DUBLIN, April 13.—Sir Walter Nugent, Nationalist, has been elected without opposition to represent South Westmeath in Parliament, in succession to the late Donald Sullivan.

HAMBURG, April 13.—There was a meeting here to-day of four thousand striking longshoremen at which Herr Heckscher, Radical Member of the Reichstag, expressed the hope that the dock strik would soon come to an end. A resolution was adopted empowering the Strike Committee to reopen negotiations with the shipowners in an effort to reach an understanding.

BUDAPEST, April 13.—The newspapers announce that Austria and Hungary have reached an agreement on the most essential points of the financial union between the two countries.

CENTRAL AMERICAN PEACE CONFERENCE

Presidents Zelaya and Figuera Will Meet at Amapala at Once.

AMERICAN AID WAS OFFERED

Consul Brown Arranged the Conference—General Peace Meeting in Washington Is Probable.

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13.—The State Department to-day received a dispatch from United States Consul Philip Brown at La Union, Honduras, saying that a peace conference would be held at the Port of Amapala, between President Zelaya of Nicaragua and President Figuera of Salvador, immediately upon the surrender of Amapala, which, at the time the dispatch was filed, was expected momentarily. The port has since surrendered.

The two Presidents will meet in person and endeavor to reach a settlement of the difficulties which involved Nicaragua and Honduras in war and caused Salvador to become the ally of the latter.

The Nicaraguan President has demanded that the Salvadoreans recognize the provisional government set up in Honduras to succeed the Bonilla Government. This would mean the complete victory of President Zelaya, as the Honduran provisional government, made up almost wholly of Honduran revolutionists allied with Nicaraguan forces against their own Government, is favorable to President Zelaya. The attitude of Salvador on the subject of recognizing the provisional government was not known.

Mr. Brown's dispatch says that peace is assured by President Figuera having agreed to accept a proposition made for the meeting with President Zelaya. The proposition was made through Mr. Brown.

The Navy Department later received from Commander Doyle of the United States cruiser Chicago a dispatch relative to the plans for the conference.

Commander Doyle said that Gen. Sierra of the Honduras Provisional Government, which was set up by Honduras revolutionists after the defeat and flight of President Bonilla, is to be commandant of Amapala.

The conference betwen President Zelaya and Figuera will take place at Amapala or on board a United States gunboat to be anchored at Amapala.

When the dispatch was sent Amapala had not yet completed its surrender. Commander Doyle estimated that it would require about four days to accomplish it. There were Salvadorea ntrops in Amapala, and in regard to these it has been agreed that they should be permitted to embark for La Union, Salvador, taking with them all officers, private property, and side arms.

President Bonilla had not yet arrived on board the Chicago, but it was stated that the President was expected, and that he would be taken to some port outside of Central America. President Zelaya demanded that Bonilla be not permitted to land in Salvador. It was said further that arrangements are now being made for the election of a constitutional President in Honduras.

Assistant Secretary of State Bacon today confirmed the report that representatives of the five Central American Republics have under consideration the idea of a permanent peace conference to be held in Washington or Mexico City to settle many of the questions constantly arising. There have been numerous treaties between various ones of the republics, bnt no agreement to which all the five republics have been parties. It is believed here that the opportunity has arrived for a satisfactory broad agreement covering all of the issues, and to which all of the republics would now become parties.

SAN SALVADOR, April 13.—Major Gen. Fernando Figuera, President of Salvador, to-day said that republic had a well-equipped army ready for an emergency, but that an honorable peace wouul be accepted. The President added that Philip M. Brown, Secretary of the American Legation to Guatemala and Honduras, was bending all his energies to bring about peace.

PARIS, April 13.—The Nicaraguan Legation to-day received a dispatch from Foreign Minister Gomez, at Managua, dated yesterday, confirming the surrender of Amapala, Hondnras, and adding:

"The surrender was absolutely without any conditions, but we guaranteed President Bonilla's passage abroad.

"The Salvadorean Government is sending Peace Commissioners to Amapala."

KEATS-SHELLEY MEMORIAL.

House in Rome Is Being Renovated—Gift of Byron Papers.

ROME, April 13.—The house in the Piazza Dia Spagni in this city, which has been purchased to be preserved henceforth as a memorial to Keats and Shelley, is about to be thoroughly overhauled. The house in question was once the home of Keats. Its purchase was effected last January by a committee composed largely of Americans, and with which Edmund Clarence Stedman and Robert U. Johnson were associated.

The floor inhabited by Keats is to be used as the nucleus of the memorial museum. Nelson Gay of Boston, Secretary of the local committee of the Keats-Shelley Association, has started a fund for the purchase of furniture for the house, which is to consist, among other things, of book shelves for the works of the two poets. H. W. Cannon of New York has presented a manuscript and some letters from Byron to the memorial collection, and other interesting contributions have been made.

The mortgage of $8,000 which existed at the time of the purchase of the house has been reduced to $4,000.

JAIL FOR LORD W. NEVILL.

London Judge Sentences Him as He Would a Workingman.

LONDON, April 13.—At the Clerkenwell Sessions to-day Lord William Nevill was found guilty of the charge of swindling a pawnbroker, and was sentenced to a year's imprisonment.

Many fashionable women attended the trial. Lord Nevill, who was stylishly dressed, bore himself with composure.

The Judge, in pronouncing sentence, said he should treat the case as that of any other prisoner, and would give him the same sentence as he would a working man.

Lord William Nevill is the fourth son of the Marquis of Abergavenny. He was sentenced to five years' penal servitude on Feb. 15, 1898, for fraud in connection with a promissory note, the prosecutor being Capt. Spender-Clay, who in 1904 married Pauline Astor, daughter of William Waldorf Astor. The crime for which Lord William was sentenced to-day was stealing from a pawnbroker a box containing $2,000 worth of jewelry by exchanging it for a similar box, apparently containing the jewels, but which when opened was found to contain two pieces of coal wrapped in tissue paper.

THE INVINCIBLE LAUNCHED.

New British Armored Cruiser One of the Three Largest in the World.

NEWCASTLE, Eng., April 13.—The British armored cruiser Invincible was launched this afternoon, from the Elswick shipyard. She is one of the three largest cruisers in the world, of which the first, the Indomitable, was launched on March 16. Under the Admiralty orders; the greatest secrecy was observed in order to prevent any details of the salient features of the new warship leaking out. Her dimensions are the same as those of the Indomitable. She is of 17,250 tons, is 530 feet long, exceeding the older armored cruisers by 50 feet; has turbine engines, and is expected to attain the high speed of twenty-five knots an hour.

The armament of these three cruisers includes eight 12-inch guns, almost equalling the main battery of the Dreadnought.

SCATTERS MONEY IN CUBA.

Dorse, Who Says He Is a Captain of Marines, Apparently Unbalanced.

SANTO DOMINGO, Cuba, April 13.—An American, who says he is a Captain of United States Marines and that his name is Ely Dorse, and who is apparently unbalanced mentally, has been distributing hundreds of dollars in ten and twenty dollar bills here. The Chief of Police searched him to-day and took from him several hundred dollars. Later, Dorse was seen to hand a twenty-dollar bill through a window in payment for a glass of wine. On being searched a second time nearly $4,000 in American money was found.

He is about 65 years old and says he is a native of New York City.

There is no marine officer named Dorse and there is no such name in the New York City Directory.

ANOTHER ROYAL MEETING.

King Edward to Visit the Italian Monarch This Week.

ROME, April 13.—It is officially announced to-day that King Edward and King Victor Emmanuel will meet on April 18 at Gaeta, on the Gulf of Gaeta, (forty miles northwest of Naples.) As Queen Alexandra will accompany King Edward it is expected that Queene Helena will go to Gaeta with King Victor Emmanuel.

A grand naval review will be held in the Gulf of Gaeta, the British and Italian Sovereigns inspecting from their respective yachts the assembled British and Italian squadrons, after which King Victor Emmanuel will entertain the visitors at luncheon on board the Italian royal yacht Trinacria.

FRENCH ENVOYS IN TROUBLE.

Another Result of the Montagnini Revelations—Able Jouin Fined.

PARIS, April 13.—The Minister of Justice, M. Guyot Dessaigne, having officially surrendered the Montagnini documents that contained references to officials of the Foreign Office, Foreign Minister Pichon has decided to submit the case of Edgar Le Marchand, Minister of France to Central America, to a council of the Ministry.

Three other Foreign Office officials have been requested to furnish explanations of allegations concerning them in the documents.

The Abbé Jouin, rector of the Church of St. Augustin, whose trial began on April 11 on the charge of inciting to rebellion from the pulpit in connection with the taking of the church inventories, was sentenced to-day to pay a fine of $3.20 and costs.

BISHOPRIC FOR MGR. KENNEDY

Rector of American College May Succeed Archbishop Ryan.

ROME, April 13.—Notwithstanding the desire of Mgr. Kennedy to remain here as rector of the American College until he succeeds in erecting a new building, strong pressure has been brought to bear to have him appointed Bishop of Fall River, Mass., with the understanding that he eventually will succeed Archbishop Ryan of Philadelphia.

It is reported that either Bishop Carroll of Helena, Mont., or Bishop Keane of Cheyenne, Wyoming, will be appointed Coadjutor Archbishop of San Francisco, a post left vacant by the death of Archbishop Montgomery.

JOHN W. YERKES RESIGNS.

Mr. Roosevelt Regrets Retirement of Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—John W. Yerkes, Commiesioner of Internal Revenue, has resigned, and his resignation has been accepted by the President. He leaves the service of the Government to enter the practice of law.

The President has written to the Commissioner as follows:

"I accept your resignation with very real regret. You have been the kind of public servant that it is a pleasure to have in public office. Your services have meant a pecuniary loss to yourself, but they have been of incalculable gain to the public."

Secretary Cortelyou also expressed regret at the resignation of Mr. Yerkes. Mr. Cortelyou has made a recommendation to the President for filling the vacancy, which has been approved, and an announcement will be made in the course of a few days.

A CIVIL SERVICE INQUIRY.

Charges of Political Activity in North Carolina to be Investigated.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—Commissioner Green of the Civil Service Commission will go next wek to North Carolina to investigate the charges made by United States Senator Simmons to the effect that many of the Federal officials of the State are actively engaged in politics. Mr. Green will begin his work at Statesville on April 20.

Mr. Simmons alleged that many of the postmasters, letter carriers, post office clerks, and deputy internal revenue collectors devoted a great deal of time to promoting the interests of the Republican Party during the campaign of 1906. Others of them were candidates for office, and others were very active in the party conventions, he declares. He asked that a thorough investigation be made, and discipline administered if the charges are found to be true.

FAKIRS' ANNUAL SHOW.

Prizes Offered for the Best and Worst Fakes Contributed.

The Society of American Fakirs will hold its annual show and carnival at the Art Students' League April 16 to 19. The aim is to caricature the annual offering of the National Academy of Design, and from the proceeds scholarships are given to deserving students in the Art Students' League. The Fakirs will sell at public auction their appreciative ideas of the National Academicians' pictures.

Three prizes for the best fakes have been offered by Samuel T. Shaw, and another friend has offered $5 and a piece of mince pie for the worst fake.

Two prizes of $25 and $10 each have been offered for the two best posters. Every artist contributing to the show will receive an invitation to the annual dinner given the organization by Mr. Shaw at the Salmagundi Club.

BIG CHANGES DUE IN APPORTIONMENT

Unless the Next Is Radical, Says E. B. Whitney, the Court May Kill That, Too.

OPINION OF AN EXPERT

A Second Senator Due to Westchester—How Richmond Should Be Linked.

Trouble for those who are preparing reapportionment bills for passage through the present Legislature without anything in the shape of radical changes is expected by lawyers who have watched the progress of the fight against the apportionment of 1906, recently declared unconstitutional by the Court of Appeals. Because the court, in passing on the question, left several points undecided, it is believed that any new apportionment which does not include changes of considerable importance will be taken to the courts again and on some point on which the court has not committed itself be defeated.

Edward B. Whitney, who took an active part in the fight against the 1906 apportionment, in an interview yesterday asserted that there was every possibility of the Court of Appeals of this State following the lead of the Supreme Court of Wisconsin, which set aside a new apportionment prepared, as nearly as possible, along the lines of the previous apportionment, which had been declared unconstitutional.

Speaking of the recent decision of the Court of Appeals, Mr. Whitney said:

Only Two Districts Passed Upon.

"Two only of the districts objected to were passed upon by the court. This does not mean that the other districts were approved. The court discusses particularly only the three great Counties of New York, Kings, and Erie, whose representation is admitted to be fixed by the Constitution at twenty-three Senators; a second class, consisting of the seven large Counties of Queens, Westchester, Albany, Rensselaer, Oneida, Onondaga, and Monroe, each of which is declared to be entitled to at least one Senator, and the smaller island Counties of Richmond, Nassau, and Suffolk. The only district smaller than a county which is discussed by the court is the Thirteenth of New York. At the end of the opinion the court says:

"Every apportionment must stand upon its own particular facts. The rules and principles which we have stated are general, and result from an examination of the Constitution and a study of its development. They are applied to the facts on this appeal so far as stated, and only so far as stated.

"The failure of the court to discuss the other questions raised," continued Mr. Whitney, "was undoubtedly due to the fact that they were unnecessary to the decision. The decision as to Queens upset the whole scheme of rural districting, while the other point decided upset the whole schems for the County of New York.

"The Democrats in Wisconsin in 1891 made an apportionment which the Supreme Court set aside as unconstitutional. They then tried, just as Messrs. Raines and Parsons are said to be trying now, to make another one as near like it as possible, but just over the line of safety. The Supreme Court set aside their second apportionment also.

Richmond to Go with Rockland.

"While the court does not expressly say so, the language of its opinion shows clearly that Richmond must be joined to Rockland, and not to the Long Island counties. It does expressly decide that Richmond cannot be joined to Queens. It also decides that the seven large counties of the second class are entitled to at least one Senator. Of this second class of counties Oneida has only 181,393 citizen inhabitants and Rensselaer has only 118,732. The two counties of Nassau and Suffolk, taken together, have 137,175. It has never been suggested that they should be joined to any county but Richmond, and the reasoning of the court prevents their being joined with Richmond unless the latter's geographical position makes it absolutely necessary, which is not the case.

"The court expresses the opinion that Richmond can be joined with a county 'bounded on the Atlantic Ocean' or with one 'bounded on the Hudson River,' and near enough to satisfy the provision that the district shall be in as compact form as practicable. There can be no reasonable doubt that an apportionment placing Richmond in a single district with Nassau and Suffolk would be set aside."

The Case of Westchester.

Speaking of Westchester County and recalling that although its population was 202,650 and the ratio for its class of county was 130,190, it had but one Senator under the Lewis apportionment, Mr. Whitney continued:

"Assuming that Westchester is divided, as equality of representation requires that it should be divided, into two districts, each of these districts would have a minus of 28,865; that is, would fall below the ratio less than two-fifths, as far as the apportionment of 1906 raises the county above the ratio. Compare this with some of the other districts in the Lewis apportionment: For instance, Westchester, each district, 101,325; Jefferson-Lewis (Cobb's), 100,896; Chemung - Schuyler - Tompkins (Cassidy), 98,885; Wayne-Ontario (Raines), 97,717; Genesee - Wyoming - Livingston (Hooker), 100,000. The four distriots I mentioned last are less than half the size of the 1906 Westchester district.

"If the Conetitution does not protect Westchester with its 202,650, then it would permit such districts as Albany-Schobaire, Oneida-Herkimer, or Onondaga-Cortland. The court states, however, that such districts as these would violate the rights of Albany, Oneida, and Onondaga 'unless the geographical position of some small county was such as to make it absolutely necessary that it be joined with some one of such counties.' In other words, a district of 200,000 citizen inhabitants or over, especially when other districts less than one-half the size are allowed to stand, is a gross violation of the principle of equality, and will be permitted only in case of absolute necessity.'

"It seems to me that these oan be little doubt of a judicial declaration that Westchester is entitled to a second Senator if the question ever comes to court again."

City Districts in Bad Shape.

Mr. Whitney pointed out that the court made no special reference to any city district but the Thirteenth, which it condemned, and stated that this was because, the time being short, that district alone had been picked out for argument. The fact that the decision mentioned no other city district, he said, was not to be taken as an approval of the rest of the districts. Many districts in the greater city, he continued, were in inexcusable shape.

"I think that many districts will be disapproved by the court if the Legislature is persuaded to repeat them," he went on. "Of course a district in a city like New York cannot be expected to be square, but there is no reasonable defense for such as the Fourth or Ninth of Brooklyn, or the Eleventh and Twelfth of New York, to say nothing of others. The only serious attempt to defend them was on the ground that they were not very much worse than some which had been fixed by the convention of 1894. Senator Brown was able to answer by showing that the convention was not supplied with any figures of population except by wards.

Typical Gerrymanders.

"The result of allowing such gerrymanders was naively shown by affidavits of Messrs. Whittle and Smith, who mapped out the New York and Kings apportionments. Whittle stated that he had concocted the Thirteenth in order to join together 'the places of abode for some of the "oldest families" in New York City'—namely, Washington Square and the Greenwich Village—and putting into the same district 'people whose interests, habits, character, and "desires for representation"' would be similar; in other words, to put people together who would probably vote Republican and vice versa—the guiding motive of all gerrymanders.

"It is, of course, beyond doubt that no further election can be held under the apportionment of 1906. Whether the Senate can hold over for another session by reason of the provision requiring Senatorial elections to be held in even years, or whether the case must be treatd as if no Senatorial election had been held last Fall at all, is a question that was not discussed orally or in writing by counsel before the Court of Appeals, and does not appear to have been distinctly in the mind of any of the court when the opinion was written."

Sample Good Apportionments.

During the progress of the case which resulted in the decision that the apportionment of 1906 was unconstitutional the counsel handed to the court three samples of apportionments which would be valid under the Constitution, and at the same time would approach equality. They believe these three to be the only valid ones under the present Constitution as to rural districts. All others violate some positive provision. The discretion of the Legislature is really reduced to a minimum on this particular question. For these samples, Mr. Whitney contends that they will not permit of any extensive log-rolling, as many Senators must stay in the same district, no matter how the rest of the State is apportioned. He contends, too, that factional quarrels and disputes over gerrymanders will be greatly reduced if his calculations are correct.

What Senator Brown and Mr. Whitney consider the best of the three sample apportionments is as follows:

District No. 1—Suffolk, 75,634; Nassau, 61,541. Total, 137,175; plus 6,085.
District No. 2—Queens, 179,746, plus 49,556.
Districts Nos. 3 to 10—Kings, 1,178,782; average population to a district, 147,347.
Districts Nos. 11 to 22—New York, 1,800,292; average population to a district, 150,024.
Districts Nos. 23 and 24—Westchester, 202,650; average population to a district, 101,325, minus 28,865.
District No. 25—Richmond, 66,441; Rockland, 41,240. Total, 107,681; minus 22,509.
District No. 26—Columbia, 41,268; Dutchess, 77,804; Putnam, 13,083. Total, 132,215; plus 2,025.
District No. 27—Orange, 101,644; Sullivan, 33,592. Total, 135,236; plus 5,046.
District No. 28—Ulster, 83,302; Delaware, 40,013. Total, 123,315; minus 875.
District No. 29.—Albany, 163,983; plus 33,793.
District No. 30.—Rensselaer, 119,732; minus 11,458.
District No. 31.—Saratoga, 60,543; Washington, 45,560; Warren, 31,107. Total, 137,210; plus 7,020.
District No. 32.—Schenectady, 64,817; Schoharie, 24,936; Greene, 30,317. Total, 120,070; minus 10,120.
District No. 33.—Clinton, 45,618; Essex, 31,161; Franklin, 42,930. Total, 119,709; minus 10,481.
District No. 34.—Herkimer, 51,040; Hamilton, 4,729; Fulton, 40,636; Montgomery, 46,650. Total, 143,075; plus 12,885.
District No. 35.—St. Lawrence, 54,866; Lewis, 26,016. Total, 110,882; minus 19,308.
District No. 36.—Jefferson, 74,880; Oswego, 68,847. Total, 143,527; plus 13,337.
District No. 37—Oneida, 131,393; plus 1,203.
District No. 38—Onondaga, 169,732; plus 39,642.
District No. 39—Madison, 39,052; Otsego, 47,664; Chenango, 36,253. Total, 122,969; minus 7,221.
District No. 40—Broome, 69,981; Cortland, 28,912; Tioga, 26,596. Total, 125,489; minus 4,701.
District No. 41—Cayuga, 63,018; Tompkins, 33,350; Schuyler, 14,921; Yates, 19,086. Total, 130,375; plus 185.
District No. 42—Wayne, 47,022; Ontario, 50,695; Seneca, 24,751. Total, 122,468; minus 7,722.
District No. 43—Steuben, 80,638; Chemung, 50,584. Total, 131,222; plus 1,032.
District No. 44—Allegany, 42,224; Livingston, 34,943; Wyoming, 30,775. Total, 107,942; minus 22,248.
Districts Nos. 45 and 46—Monroe, 225,609; average population to a district, 112,804; minus 17,886.
District No. 47—Genesee, 34,282; Orleans, 30,078; Niagara, 77,250. Total, 141,610; plus 11,420.
Districts Nos. 48 to 50—Erie, 438,577; average population to a district, 146,192.
District No. 51—Chautauqua, 91,923; Cattaraugus, 63,899. Total, 155,322; plus 25,182.

The greatest plus under this apportionment is 49,556, and the greatest minus 28,865. The average plus is 7,470 and the average minus 5,817. In the present apportionment, the one declared unconstitutional, the greatest plus outside of New York, Kings, and Erie is 115,997 and the greatest minus is 32,473. The average plus is 11,065 and the average minus 10,443.

GOVERNOR DEFENDS HIMSELF.

New Mexico Executive Talks with Roosevelt and Garfield.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—President Roosevelt and Secretary Garfield to-day gave some consideration to the charges against Herbert J. Hagerman, Governor of New Mexico, regarding the transfer of territorial lands to a Pennsylvania development company.

Gov. Hagerman, who came to Washington with Levi Hughes, the Treasurer of the territory in connection, with the charges, was present most of the time the President and Mr. Garfield were together. The Governor dclared that the real basis of the fight against him was political.

Secretary Loeb said after to-day's conference that no decision had been reached in the case. The Governor also declined to mak any statement concerning the conference. He left to-night for New Mexico, and said that he would at once resume his official duties.

XIII. CLUB AT WHITE HOUSE.

Find Mr. Roosevelt Out—Many Thirteens on the Programme.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—The XIII. Club of New York gave a dinner in this city to-night. The club, in defiance of the common superstition, and in accordance with its established rule, arranged its entire programme on the basis of 13. There were 413 in the party, which left Jersey City to-day at 12:13 over the Baltimore & Ohio, in a special train of 13 cars, and arrived here at 6:13. Awaiting them were 13 specially chartered cars, in which they proceeded to the White House under the escort of 13 policemen, and were shown through the various rooms.

President Roosevelt was not at home when the visitors arrived. He had made on engagement to receive them earlier in the day, but they were delayed at Philadelphia.

The dinner, which was composed of 13 courses, began promptly at 8:13 o'clock, Col. John F. Hobbs, the chief ruler, presiding. The principal speakers were H. B. F. MacFarland and Henry L. West of the Board of District Commissioners, and Dr. Harvey W. Wiley of the Department of Agriculture. George W. Stake acted as toastmaster.

SIAMESE PRINCE TO STUDY.

Would Like to Enter the Annapolis or West Point Academy.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—The State Department has received an inquiry from Hamilton King, American Minister to Bankok, Siam, asking whether it would be possible to admit to the Naval or Military Academy a nephew of the King of Siam. The young man is said to be exceptionally bright.

It would require special legislation to enable him to enter either institution.

Tams Bixby Charges Dismissed.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—The Secretary of the Interior has dismissed the charges made last Winter against Tams Bixby, Chairman of the Five Civilized Tribes commission of Indian Territory. The charges, which were preferred by the National Attorney of the Creek Nation, alleged interference with the delivery of deeds to allottees and irregular financial transactions.

Princeton Man a Rhodes Scholar.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, April 13.—It was announced here to-day by the Committee on Selection that Donald Grant Herring of Bloomsburg, Penn., had been chosen as the Rhodes scholar from this State. Mr. Herring will be graduated from the academic department of Princeton in June. He has been prominent both in athletic and scholastic branches. In the last two seasons he played right tackle on the 'Varsity football team.

OUTLAW THE TERROR OF A WHOLE NATION

Jamaican Desperado In Costa Rica Keeps Government Informed of His Exploits.

EVEN HOLDS UP POLICE

Gets a Badge and Amuses Himself by "Arresting" Men on Charge of Being Himself.

Foreign Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PORT LIMON, Costa Rica, April 2.—The inhabitants of this republic are greatly alarmed over the fact that a man is at large whose desperate character is perhaps only second to that of Tracey, the American outlaw. Houses in the country parts are securely barricaded at night, yet hardly a day passes that does not bring some news of an atrocity by Joseph Gordon, for whose capture dead or alive the Government offers a reward of 300 colones.

Gordon is a Jamaican, who has troubled the authorities of his native island and of Costa Rica for many years. Burglary and murder are among the crimes for which he is wanted. About a month ago he broke into the commissariat of the United Fruit Company here and got away with over 1,000 colones. Mr. Parsons, manager of the big banana company's commissariat, was so energetic in his efforts to track the criminal that he incurred Gordon's very easily roused displeasure. Mr. Parsons is now being advised by his friends to leave the country.

Four Government officers were sent on the trail of Gordon, who was discovered in a cave in the mountains. The outlaw was armed with a double-barreled breach-loader; the officers were armed to the teeth. The result of a hot fight was that one officer was brought back to Port Limon in a box and the other three on stretchers. The first was buried and the three are still in the hospital. Gordon escaped without a scratch.

More officers were sent out on the trail. While they were bunting in the hills Gordon calmly appeared before the United Fruit Company's commissariat here and leveled his breach-loader at the head of Mr. Parsons, who was standing by a window. Before the outlaw could fire, however, an alarm was raised from behind and Gordon looked aside long enough for Parsons to duck. The appearance of a man with a price on his head in a populous centre, walking toward the building in which was the man he had told the whole world he would assassinate, is regarded here as the greatest piece of nerve in the republic's history.

But Gordon escaped again—how, no one knows—and in the next week made himself and his very name a thing of terror. At the present writing his victims number many, and still he comes and goes with his double-barreled gun, at one place tonight and at a miraculously remote place in the morning.

A young telegraph operator on the railway had an encounter with the outlaw the other day. Gordon came strolling down the line near Zent. The operator recognized "the man with the gun" right away and prepared to die hard.

"Good morning," said the outlaw.

"Have you got a match?"

"Y—yes," stammered the operator.

"D—did you w—want one?"

"What you tbink I asked for?"

"Of course; of course. How silly of me!" said the operator, getting out a box of lucifers.

Gordon set down the gun, fixed the operator with his eye, filled his pipe, lit it, and put the box of matches in his pocket.

"You don't mind if I keep 'em," was the incongruous remark, as he picked up the gun.

"Not at all," said the operator. "I—I have plenty more."

"Have you? Well, let's have 'em."

Gordon then went off into the bush after having read the young man a sermon on "minding one's own business and saving one's hide."

The same day the outlaw, who seemed to be in a gay mood, stepped out of the bush and confronted a lone officer of the law.

"Looking for me?" he said pleasantly.

"Why, not exactly," said the officer. "I was looking for the rest of my party. I, personally, had no desire to meet you."

Gordon (who delights in forwarding these accounts of his adventures to the Government) then expressed his admiration for the Costa Rican police. He even went so far as to say he had decided to join the force himself, and promptly borrowed the officer's badge.

Thus armed, what Gordon may do next cannot be surmised. He has already arrested several men, charging them with being "the notorious outlaw," and the while he plays jokes he picks off the men against whom he nurses spite. He has just informed the Government that there are yet three "to lay low."

SEVEN MONTHS' CHASE ENDS.

Giuseppe Fonzo Arrested In Italy for a Murder Committed Here.

A tablegram was received yesterday by the police here announcing the arrest in Fiagolo, Italy, of Giuseppe Fonzo. This is the sequel of a chase that started here last September, extended to California, back again to New York, and over to Italy.

Fonzo is accused of the murder of G. Minteleone, a wealthy Italian who was shot and instantly killed at 204th Street and Villa Avenue Sept. 26 last. At the same time Giuseppi Morkurio, a nephew, was shot. Minteleone, previous to his arrival in this country from Southern Italy, had received threatening letters from members of a so-called Black Hand Society, and he had come to this country, accompanied by his son, to escape them.

After the shooting, Fonzo, who had been employed in Woodlawn Cemetery as a laborer, suddenly left without collecting the wages due him or getting his cloths from bis boarding house. Young Minteleone and Merkurio engaged the services of a detective and started on the chase. Fonzo was traced to San Francisco and back to this city, and on their arrival here the pursuers learned that he had shipped as a coal passes on an Italian ship. The

THE dash of wintry weather has served to put new life into the waning season. Although there have been many departures for Europe, the town is still crowded, and there is a great deal going on.

The large houses in the vicinity of New York are now dispensing hospitality on the most lavish scale. Meadow Brook is taking much interest in the hunt, and there have been many week-end parties at Tuxedo, Baltusrol, Ardsley, and the different suburban residential clubs and settlements.

The racing season at Belmost Park is not far off, and there are in store both the coaching parade and the annual turnout of the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Club.

Last week was rich in weddings, but as May approaches these nuptial events are becoming fewer. Among the recent weddings, those of Miss Barney and Mr. Barnes and of Miss Rosalie Loew and Robert Cutting Lawrence were notable, and in spite of the weather there was a large assemblage at St. Patrick's Cathedral on Tuesday for the nuptials of Charles Lestelle and Miss May Neeser. M. and Mme. Lestelle are to make their home in Paris.

But by the end of the month New York will be well represented in London. Each day there is news of houses being leased in the British metropolis by wealthy and fashionable Americans. Paris has started on its round of entertainments, and the cable dispatches in THE TIMES give many items of interest to New York society. King Edward has terminated his visit to Biarritz, and is off on a yachting cruise. The Court returns to London the first week in May. The opera at Covent Garden will then begin with a performance of "The Ring." No dates have been published of the evening drawing rooms to be held at Buckingham Palace, but it is known that there will be a number of American presentations. Mrs. Charles Marshall is to bring out her daughter, and Lady Dorothy Walpole is another débutante who may be claimed as an American, her mother having been Miss Corbin of this city.

It is yet unsettled as to when Miss Drexel, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Anthony Drexel, will make her début. The death of J. Henry Smith, who married a sister of Mrs. Drexel, may change these plans.

As already stated, there will be several notable absentees from Newport. The Vanderbilts will entertain at their farms, near the town, and Alfred Vanderbilt, who will be in London in June for the Olympia Horse Show, is to return at its close. It is doubtful if Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt goes over. The Reginald Vanderbilts are booked to sail for America the first week in May. Whether or not The Breakers will be opened this year is still a question. Mrs. Vanderbilt and her daughter, Miss Gladys, have gone West, and have announced that they are sailing for Europe in May.

The town season will be very late, and a most interesting wedding, that of Miss Marian Fish and Albert Gray, will take place the second week in June.

Mrs. Oliver H. P. Belmont was to have come over last week, but canceled her booking, and remains abroad for the present with her daughter, the Duchess of Marlborough.

On Thursday the fashionable world assembled at the St. Nicholas Rink for the series of tennis matches which have been arranged by Mrs. Barger-Wallach and Miss Nora Iselin. These will continue for a fortnight or more. Among those interested in the matches are Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Miss Mills, Miss Anna Sands, Miss Burden, Miss Coster, Miss Emily Scott, and others.

The Reese-Bliss Wedding.

The wedding of William Willis Reese and Miss Augusta Bliss, daughter of Mrs. George Bliss, will take place on Tuesday afternoon at Grace Church chantry. The invitations have been limited. A small reception will follow the ceremony at the residence of the bride's mother. The young daughter of William Phelps Bliss, brother of the bride, will be the maid of honor. There will be no bridesmaids. The best man will be Allison Wright Post and the ushers are Richard Stevens and Charles R. Swords.

Henschel-Kerr.

Another wedding on Tuesday will be that of Charles Henschel and Miss Ruth Kerr, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Harrison Dudley Kerr. It will be a home affair. Miss Jeanne Kerr, a sister of the bride, will be maid of honor. The ushers chosen are Elmore Coe Kerr, Charles Henschel Thierot, Childs Frick, and Daniel Farr. The best man will be José Victor Onativia, Jr. The Rev. William M. Grosvenor of the Church of the Incarnation will officiate. There are a limited number of invitations to the ceremony, but a large reception will follow.

Oelrichs-Turnbull.

Charles de Loosey Oelrichs, son of Mr. and Mrs. Charles May Oelrichs, and Miss Marjorie Turnbull, daughter of Frank Turnbull of Morristown, will be married on Tuesday afternoon at the residence of Archbishop Farley, who will perform the ceremony. Albert Gray will be best man and the maid of honor will be Miss Grace Chapin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Alfred Chapin. A wedding breakfast will follow at the residence of Mrs. J. Appleton Hopkins, a sister of the bride. The engagement of Charles Oelrichs and Miss Marjorie Turnbull was announced last Summer at Newport. Mr. and Mrs. Charles May Oelrichs and Miss Blanche Oelrichs will sail at the end of the week for Europe. They will remain abroad, it is planned, for a year. They will visit Mrs. Oelrichs's aunt, Mrs. Theodore Havemeyer, in Paris, and will also go to Vienna, where Mrs. Oelrichs made her début in Continental society when she was Miss de Loosey.

Kinnicutt-Tuckerman.

One of the largest weddings of the Easter season will take place on Thursday at the Church of the Incarnation. The bride will be Miss May A. Tuckerman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Bayard Tuckerman. The bridegroom will be G. Hermann Kinnicutt. The ceremony will be followed by a reception at the Dodge residence, which has been leased for the occasion. The maid of honor will be Miss Joan Tuckerman, a younger sister of the bride, who has not yet been presented in society, and the bridesmaids the Misses Dorothy Whitney, Susan Sedgwick, Dorothy Kissel of New York, Edith Green of Buffalo, and two cousins, the Misses Dorothy and Julia Tuckerman of Boston, and the Misses Julia and Alice von Meyer, daughters of Mr. and Mrs. Henry von Lengerke Meyer of Boston and Washington. Francis H. Kinnicutt will be his brother's best man, and the ushers W. Redmond Cross, Charles Dana Draper, Samuel L. Fuller, St. John Smith, Bayard Tuckerman, Jr., Selden E. Marvin, and Edward S. Thurston. The bridegroom is a son of Dr. and Mrs. Francis P. Kinnicutt and the bride is a member of one of the oldest New York and Massachusetts families.

Burden-Rives.

The wedding of Miss Natica Rives and William Proudfit Burden will take place on Wednesday at Grace Church chantry. The bride is one of the most beautiful girls in the fashionable set and is descended from a long line of beautiful women. She is the goddaughter of Mrs. Astor and was born at Newport. There will be no bridesmaids. The bridegroom's brother will be best man. The invitations are limited, as the Burden family is in mourning. There will be a small reception for relatives after the ceremony at the residence of Mr. and Mrs. George L. Rives. Mr. and Mrs. Burden, after a short wedding trip, will go abroad for the Summer.

Dodge-Rockefeller.

The wedding of Marcellus Hartley Dodge, grandson of the late William E. Dodge, and Miss Ethel Geraldine Rockefeller, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Rockefeller, will be celebrated quietly at home. The engagement, which was one of the most interesting of the season, was announced in THE TIMES about three weeks ago. The ceremony will take place at the residence of the bride's parents, 689 Fifth Avenue. Baron Lefferts will be best man, and the maid of honor will be Miss Anna Bush of Tarrytown. The Rev. Dr. Ernest M. Stires of St. Thomas's Church will officiate. The bridegroom is in mourning. On his mother's side Mr. Dodge is the grandsbn of the late Marcellus Hartley. He is one of the wealthiest young men in society and has given munificent endowments to Columbia University. Miss Rockefeller is the daughter of the younger brother of John D. Rockefeller. Her brother, William Rockefeller, Jr., married Miss Stillman, daughter of the banker.

Recent Sailings.

Mr. and Mrs. Ogden Hammond, who were married on Monday, sailed last week for Europe. They will be absent for several months. On the same ship were Mr. and Mrs. Tremenheere. Mrs. Tremenheere was Miss Van Auken, a daughter of the late Mrs. George Andrews and a sister of Mrs. Lindley Hoffman Chapin. Mrs. James B. Haggin also went abroad, and Mr. and Mrs. W. J. Kernochan were passengers on the same ship.

Mrs. Edward Lyman Short also sailed. She will join her daughter, Miss Short, who will make her début in New York next Winter. Miss Short has been passing the Winter in Paris. She will be presented at Court in London this season.

The Count and Countess Henri de Langier Villars have gone to France for the Spring. They will visit Johnston Livingston at Bar Harbor this Summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Eugene O'Neil, who have been all Winter at their villa at Palm Beach, will sail on April 23 for Europe. Other bookings for the near future include the names of Mrs. Whitelaw Reid, Miss Jean Reid, the Duke of Newcastle, Miss Lister-Kaye, Mrs. Ogden Mills, and the Misses Mills. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Vanderbilt have also gone abroad.

The Two Coaching Parades.

The members of the Ladies' Four-in-Hand Club have put their club coach on the road for practice driving. The coach leaves the Continental Stables, in Seventh Avenue, at half-past 10 o'clock, and will run daily for five weeks, remaining out two hours each day. The parade will take place on May 2, instead of May 1, as the latter date is pre-empted for a meeting at the Colony Club, which just now is the centre of fashionable attention. Among those who may drive in the parade are Mrs. Thomas Hastings, Miss Iselin, Mrs. Goadby Loew, Mrs. J. Borden Harriman, Miss Louise Gulliver, Miss Angelica Gerry, Miss Mary Harriman, Miss Jean Reid, Miss Harriet Alexander, Miss Gladys Cromwell, and Miss Dorothea Cromwell. The route will be through Central Park and the review will be on the hill near 106th Street.

The Coaching Club will have its parade on May 4 in the morning. The luncheon will be served at Claremont. Col. William Jay, the President, will lead.

Asheville and Hot Springs.

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Vanderbilt have been entertaining on a large scale at Biltmore. Among their recent guests were the Baron and Baroness von Hengelmüller. On Tuesday there will be the annual horse show at Asheville, at which there will be several New York visitors, as well as many from Washington and other cities.

Hot Springs is having a gay Spring season. Among the recent visitors there have been Mr. and Mrs. William G. Rockefeller, Mr. and Mrs. James G. Marshall, Mr. and Mrs. Nathaniel F. Moore, Mr. and Mrs. George Bird, Mrs. Duncan Cryder, and Mr. and Mrs. Arthur E. Whitney.

Some Future Wedding Arrangements.

The wedding of Raynal Bolling of New York and Miss Anna Tucker Phillips of Boston will take place in June at Moraine Farm, Wenham, Mass., the country home of Miss Phillips's mother.

June 8 is the date arranged for the wedding of Miss E. Lucy Washburn and Sidney Beardsley Wood. Miss Washburn is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Walter Tucker Washburn. The ceremony will take place at St. James's Church, Madison Avenue and Seventy-first Street. It will be celebrated by Bishop Courtney and a reception will follow at the residence of the bride's parents, 52 East Seventy-ninth Street. Miss Marion S. Washburn, a sister of the bride, will be maid of honor, and Mrs. Joseph F. Simmons, who was Miss Mabel Sorm, will be matron of honor. The bridesmaids are the Misses Ruth Starbuck, Josephine Munson, and Lucy Burke of New York, Mary Myrick of Dobbs Ferry, Helen Schermerhorn of Philadelphia, and Florence Harris of Springfield, Mass. Among the ushers will be Mayhew Washburn, a brother of the bride; Stanley Washburn of Minneapolis, August Wood, Walter Whipple, William Hall, and Richard Barry.

In St. Paul's Church on April 30 Miss Mary Louise Baylies, daughter of Mrs. Robert Baylies, will be married to the Rev. Howard Chandler Robbins, rector of the church.

Some Spring Entertainments.

Mme. Emma Eames, assisted by Emilio de Gorgoza and Victor Herbert and his full orchestra, will give a concert on the afternoon of May 7 in aid of a fund to build a Spanish Roman Catholic Church near Audubon Park at 156th Street. The concert will be followed by the serving of tea by Mme. Eames, Mme. Madruzo, and a number of well-known women. The affair will be under the auspices of the Archbishop of New York and various South American Ministers and diplomats. The site of the church has been selected and the concert planned by Miss Marie de Baril.

The annual Spring Concert of the Music School Settlement will take place on Thursday afternoon, April 18, at 3 o'clock. The pupils of the school are to be assisted by Charles Gilbert. The orchestra class will be under the direction of David Mannes. The President of the Music School Settlement is Mrs. Howard Mansfield. Mrs. Frederick Trevor Hill and Miss Florence Matthews are Vice Presidents. Mrs. George L. Nichols is the Treasurer and Miss Laura J. Post is Secretary. Among the managers are Mrs. Robert Abbe, Mrs. H. A. Alexandre, Mrs. A. A. Anderson, Mrs. George R. Sheldon, Mrs. Harry H. Flagler, Mrs. Arthur E. Scribner, Mrs. J. A. H. Worthington, Mrs. Ralph Pulitzer, and Mrs. Adrian D. Joline.

Miss Lydia Day will give a musicale for charity on the afternoon of April 19 at 31 West Forty-sixth Street.

At the Hotel Marie Antoinette, on April 17, Mrs. George H. Gaston will have a bridge tea in aid of the Darrach Home for Crippled Children.

To-morrow evening Ermete Novelli and his company will give a farewell performance at the Waldorf-Astoria in aid of the Society for Italian Immigrants. Tickets and boxes may be procured from Miss F. V. Doane. Among those who have taken boxes are Mrs. William Church Osborn, Mrs. J. Pierpont Morgan, Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, Mrs. W. Bayard Cutting, Joseph Gerli, A. A. Healy, Mrs. Edward Robinson, and Miss Amy Aldrich.

A Little Gossip.

Miss Pauline French has been visiting her aunt, Mrs. Alfred Vanderbilt, at Newport. Mrs. Vanderbilt and Miss French were in town on Friday. The former went to Tuxedo.

The Duo de Chaulnes was in town at the close of the week. He is the guest of Dr. and Mrs. Leroux, at their place on the Hudson, over Sunday.

Miss Frewen and Miss Nellie Post, who have been visiting King Oscar and his Queen at Stockholm, have had conferred on them the National Order of Innocence.

The engagement was announced during the week of Miss Olga Kobbé, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Frederick Kobbé, to Herman Livingston, Jr., of Oak Hill and New York.

Lord Uffington, grandson of Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin, will be sent to Eton this Autumn.

Mr. and Mrs. Clarence Mackay will leave their town house for Harbor Hill on April 25. They have taken Spring Lawn, the John E. Alexandre place, at Lenox, for the Summer.

Mr. and Mrs. Peter Cooper Hewitt will open their Tuxedo cottage at the end of this month.

Mr. and Mrs. Elisha Dyer, who have been touring in their motor in southern France, are now in Paris.

Mrs. Charles E. Sands and her daughter, Mrs. T. J. Oakley Rhinelander, will sail for Europe on May 22.

Mrs. George Ogilvie Haig is spending several weeks in Paris. She will be at Newport this Summer with her mother, Mrs. Astor.

Mr. and Mrs. James Stokes will sail for Europe on April 20 and will make a tour with their motor in France and Italy.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert R. Shattuck were at Avignon last week with their motor car, en route for Italy.

Mr. and Mrs. Whitney Warren and Miss Warren are abroad until the middle of May. They will then return and pass the Summer at Newport.

The death of Mrs. T. H. Ismay in London will throw into mourning Mr. and Mrs. J. Bruce Ismay, who were recently in this country. Mr. Ismay is a son of Mrs. T. H. Ismay. His wife was Miss Julia Florence Schieffelin, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George R. Schieffelin of this city.

Friday evening is the date for the last dance of the season. It will be the University Cotillion, and it will be held at Sherry's.

Mr. and Mrs. William Bayard Cutting are at their country seat at Oakdale, Long Island.

Mrs. Hermann Schwab will give a theatre party and supper on Wednesday for her son, Henry B. Schwab, who is at Harvard, and his friends among the younger set.

Mr. and Mrs. J. Montgomery Hare have taken the Barbey cottage, at Tuxedo, for the Summer.

Personal and Otherwise

MISS IRENE UNTERMYER, whose picture may be seen in the Pictorial Section, is the only daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Untermyer and her marriage to Louis Putnam Myers, son of Perit C. Myers of Yonkers, is to take place on April 27 at Greystone, the historic home of the late Samuel J. Tilden, at Greystone-on-the-Hudson.

Mrs. Robert de Peyster Tytus was Miss Grace Henop, a daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Louis P. Henop. Her marriage to Mr. Tytus occurred several years ago. Mr. and Mrs. Tytus make their home at their country place, Ashintully Farm, near Tyringham, Mass., where they entertain many house parties. They have one little girl.

Miss Ione Page is the elder daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Page, and is noted for her classic features and beautiful coloring. Her hair is very dark and her eyes are so dark a blue as to often be taken for black. Her skin is a clear marble white, but with much color in the cheeks. She is considered one of the most beautiful girls in society, and together with her equally attractive sister, Miss Lily Lee Page, divides her time between Tuxedo, where the Pages have a Summer home and New York.

Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt and Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, whose picture, taken as they are driving on Fifth Avenue, appears in the supplement, are the widow and younger daughter of Cornelius Vanderbilt. Mrs. Vanderbilt was Miss Alice Gwynne.

The residence of the late James Henry Smith was purchased by him some months after the death of its former owner, the late William C. Whitney. Mr. Whitney had had it enlarged and fitted up with superb tapestries and paintings and had given several notable balls, one for his niece, Miss Helen Barney, now Mrs. Archibald Alexander, the year of her début, and another for her younger sister, Miss Katharine Barney, who the past week married Courtlandt Dixon Barnes. Another ball was given for the début of his stepdaughter, Miss Adelaide Randolph, the daughter of his second wife, who married the Hon. Lionel Lambart last year in England. When Mr. Smith purchased the house he also bought many of its furnishings, and he gave there several wonderful musicales, at which the leading operatic artists sang.

Mr. Smith had for the past twenty years been well known in society, despite the ridiculous stories after his death, and before, for that matter, that he was practically unknown in society until he acquired his uncle's millions. He lived quietly and was averse to publicity, but was always courteous and even considerate in his treatment of newspaper representatives, and was universally liked.

The residence stands at the corner of Sixty-eighth Street and Fifth Avenue, with its entrance on the street. After entering the wrought iron doors one is in a narrow hallway, with a flight of marble steps leading down into the large entrance hall, but at each side of one is a narrow flight of marble stairs, seldom used, however, leading up into the foyer hall of the second floor. At all the large entertainments these little side stairs were banked full of palms and decorations threaded with miniature electric lights, and over their exits on the second floor was laid a temporary platform, banked with palms and flowers, and screened off, and here an orchestra was stationed, while the foyer itself was used as the reception room.

Returning to the street floor, after one descended a flight of marble steps to the marble hall shown in the illustration, at the right toward Sixty-eighth Street, were the large office and library, which were turned into a retiring room for men when entertainments were given, while the Marie Antoinette room, entered from the main hall, near the base of the stairs, was used as a dressing room for the women. This room was partially panneled with small mirrors and copies of old French paintings of Court beauties. After doffing their wraps the guests ascended the stairway seen in the picture to the second floor hall.

At the right of this second floor hall were the drawing room and other rooms, and at the left on a line with the musicians at the street side is the dining room, hung with wonderful tapestries and old paintings, and between this and the immense ballroom, hung in Venetian red and gold curtains, is a small conservatory.

At the top of the flight of stairs on this floor, as one comes up from the lower hall, there is a somewhat narrow passageway paneled with carvings and hung with pictures, leading into the grand ballroom.

In the ballroom at one end is the monkey gallery, brought from a European castle, and here the musicians were stationed to play for the dance.

In the lower hall, at the right, facing the doors leading into the office or study and the Marie Antoinette room, are the fireplace and the entrances to other rooms on that floor.

STATEMENT No. 1

STOUT WOMAN'S SALVATION

Nemo TRIPLE STRIP SELF-REDUCING CORSET

Has solved a most important and vexed question.

Every one, who has taken the trouble to look, knows that within recent years the stout woman's figure has greatly improved. It has taken unto itself shapely lines, and a decided reduction of the form is apparent.

Of course, there is a reason for this; and in this and three succeeding statements, we shall explain and prove that the cause of improvement in the stout woman's figure is due entirely to the fact that she wears

The Nemo Self-Reducing Corset.

We will tell you, in this statement, of the wonderful results this corset has accomplished by reason of it s patented features, which work together, not only to reduce the figure, but to give comfort, health and style.

The Nemo Self-Reducing Corset Reduces and Gives Comfort

It is positively the only corset in existence that actually reduces the figure of the stout woman without the slightest discomfort—in fact, it will produce comfort.

The Nemo Self-Reducing Corset Gives Health

The wearing of it assures health to women who are physically weak or who stand or walk much. Celebrated physicians recommend this corset in place of abdominal bands, as it accomplishes the same result and yet gives better support. It adjusts itself to the form automatically and fits snugly and smoothly.

The Nemo Self-Reducing Corset Gives Style

It greatly improves the figure, and makes a satisfactory foundation for the fitting of a gown. Fashionable dressmakers recommend it to their customers.

The Nemo Self-Reducing Corset Is an Economical Investment

It has advantages which the woman who wears it can prove. It is actually cheaper to buy a Self-Reducing Corset at $3.00, than three ordinary corsets at $1.00 each, for it wears longer than the three cheaper corsets and gives more comfort.

IN THE SOCIAL WHIRL

MRS. WILLIAM GRANT BROWN

MISS FLORENCE . . . . GURNSEY

MISS GRACE IRENE RYDER

A PRETTY marriage of the week was that of Miss Grace Irene Ryder to Harry Anderson on Monday evening at 7. The Rev Father Taylor read the ceremony in Sherry's. Owing to recent bereavement in the families the wedding was a small one, about sixty guests being hidden to the reception by Mr. and Mrs. Fisk of the Manhattan Square Hotel. Mrs. Fisk is a sister of the bride. Miss Loretta Kenedy was the maid of honor and Jarvis Kelly, a Columbia professor, the best man. Mr. and Mrs. Anderson left immediately after the reception for a wedding trip. They will make their home in this city after a Summer spent in the mountains. Mrs. Anderson is the daughter of the late Dr Thomas S. Ryder and Emily H. Lawrence, both of whom were well known in old New York circles, the doctor practicing for over fifty years. The late Abraham R. Lawrence, first Collector of the Port of New York, was Mrs. Anderson's grandfather.

Saturday, May 18, is the day chosen by Mrs. Charles Austin Bates, 109 Riverside Drive, for the automobile ride to the Bronx. About 200 are expected to enjoy the day's outing. Numbers of society women have offered their autos for the occasion, and are selling seats to their friends at $5 each. The idea is a new one for raising funds for charity. The Lulu Thorley Lyons Home for Crippled Children at Claverack will benefit from this frolic. The second of the series of bridge parties for the New York branch of this charity was given on Tuesday at Duryea's. The dates for the other two are Tuesdays, April 23 and 30.

The second Thursday of each month during the season is the informal at-home day of Mrs. Simeon H. Newhouse, 46 West Seventy-third Street.

Mr. and Mrs. James Thedford have sent out invitations for the marriage of Miss Florence Rouyon Stouffer, a Brooklyn girl, to their son, Charles Edward Thedford. They will be married on Tuesday evening in St. Agnes's Church, Ninety-second Street, near Columbus Avenue, by the Rev. Dr. William T. Manning. Miss Josephine Stouffer will be the maid of honor, and the bridesmaids selected are the Misses Alice Beede and Beatrice Cameron. The best man will be George W. Thedford, Jr., the ushers Clarence A. Rode, Harry W. Thedford, Charles A. Levy, and Philip Sneider. There will be a reception in Bretton Hall after the wedding. The young people will be at home Thursdays, May 2 and 16, at 234 West Eighty-fifth Street.

There will be a novel affair in the way of a dramatic musicale in the Berkeley Lyceum on the 21st inst. for the benefit of the French Day Nursery, 346 West Twenty-eighth Street. Mme. Charles Poliferme is in charge, and has to assist her as patronesses Mme. Bneu Chozel, Miss Louise Schuyler, Miss Georgina Schuyler, Mrs. A. E. Fish, Mrs. H Wallenstein, Mrs. Shoninger, Mrs Gracie Totner, Mrs. Wilbonr, Miss F. Guernsey, the Rev Phoebe Hanaford, Mrs. Harriette Dey, Mrs. Banback, Miss Marie Coffin, Dr. Frances Monell, Mrs. Rothermel, Mies Emily Dunover, Mire Mary Shaefley, Mrs. Curtis, and Mrs. S. Van Anderson. M. and Mme. Emiel Chauziere, Deputy de la Seine, are also interested in the success of the musicale. There will be a number of odd features introduced in the course of the evening's entertainment, and Edmund Russell will speak.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles O. Maas will leave their home, 57 West Seventy-fifth Street, late in the Spring and sail for Europe, to be gone several weeks.

Miss Mary Brodhead Bradley, daughter of the late Herbert N. Bradley and granddaughter of the late Capt. Edgar Brodhesd, U. S. N., will be married to William Kepner Grove on Wednesday, the 23d, at 8:30. The wedding will take place in All Angels' Church, West End Avenue and Eighty-first Street, the Rev. Dr. F. De Lancey Townsend officiating. The matron of honor will be Mrs. Herbert N. Bradley, the best man H. Ray Paige of New Haven, Conn. The six maids will be the Misses Asenath Deming, Alice Baker, and Helen Martin of Gloversville, N. Y.; Eleanor D. Brodhead of Port Jervis, N. Y., and Emily Dras and Mabel L. Haskin of this city. The ushers selected are Messrs. Hudson Booth, Charles G. Nichols, George K. Le Van, Allen N. Corwin, Ward B. Belknap, and George B. Campbell. Green and white will be the color scheme throughout the church and home of Mrs. H. N. Bradley, the bride's mother. After the reception the young people will leave for a week's trip in a Smith-Mabley Simplex, the gift of H. N. Bradley. They will be at home in the Fall at 166 Park Avenue, East Orange, N. J.

Cards are out for a reception and dance to be given on Friday evening in the Waldorf by the Georgia Society, City of New York. The President, Bedell Parker, and Mrs. Parker will receive, assisted by the officers, Messrs. T. J. McGuire, Erle L. Austelle, and C. J. Dunn. Chester Alexander is Chairman of the Entertainment Committee, and J. F. Allen is Chairman of the Membership Committee. About twenty-five new members have been received by the society in the last two weeks.

Mrs. Frank Coster, 152 West Seventy-fifth Street, gave a large bridge party in her home on Thursday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock.

A number of cards have been sent out for a bridge party to be given on Tuesday afternoon by Mrs. Clarence E. Sherin in her apartments in the Marie Antoinette.

Mrs. Charles E. Sprague, 116 West Seventy-fifth Street, will entertain the members of Auxiliary No. 1 of the Little Mothers to-morrow afternoon from 4 until 6 o'clock. Those who have been asked to receive with Mrs. Sprague are Mrs. Benjamin Lillard, Mrs. Lyon De Camp, Mrs. Brand, and Mrs. Wols. It will be an informal reception to about 100. Col. and Mrs. Sprague and Mrs. De Camp expect to leave town the latter part of the week for a trip to Washington, Hot Springs, and Jamestown. They will be absent some weeks.

One of the prettiest of the Spring luncheons wee that given on Monday by the Ideala Club. It was a small select affair to about 50, and was dainty and attractive. It was served in the East Room of the Waldorf. Mrs. Edward D. O'Brien is the President. The guests of honor were Mrs. Donald McLean, Mrs. Clarence Burns, and Miss Letbrop, Regent of the New York City Chapter, D. A. R. There were songs by Miss Flora Hardy and Miss Lippincott and recitations by Miss Anna McIntyre. The guests were given huge bunches of violets as souvenirs. Ideala was formed fifteen years ago by two women, and has grown until it has a membership of forty, with a waiting list.

Mrs. George Huntington Throop, 215 West 108th Street, gave a reception in her home on Thursday afternoon and evening.

On Tuesday there was a dinner, concert, and dance given by the New York Southern Society in the Hotel Astor at 6:45. Dr. John A. Wyeth is the President of the society. Those appointed to serve on the Committee of Arrangements were Major Edward Owen of the Confederate Veterans, Chairman; Bedell Parker, Georgia Society; Francis G. Coffey, Alabama Society; Howard R. Bayne, Virginia Society; J. Lynch Pendergast, Maryland Society; Albert T. Massey, North Carolina Society; William A. Barber, South Carolina Society; Dr. William M. Polk, Tennessee Society; John C. Breckinridge, Kentucky Society, and Walter Alexander, Missouri Society.

A wedding that will interest the west side will be that of Miss Grace Oakley to Robert T. Bryant on Wednesday, the 24th. The ceremony will be read in St. Stephen's Church, Sixty-ninth Street, by the Rev. Nathan Seagle. Eight hundred invitations have been issued for the marriage, which will be followed by a small reception in the home of the bride, 203 West Seventieth Street. After a Summer in Larchmont, the young people will keep house on the west side.

Mrs. Fabius M. Clarke, 306 West Eighty-second Street, was the hostess recently at a small tea given in honor of the birthday of Miss Harriette Ruthrauff.

The Cafe Chantant entertainment and dance for the benefit of the Mary Fisher Home took place on Thursday from 3 until 6 and from 8 until 11 in the Astor. The committee in charge were Mesdames George Howes, Charlotte Wilbour, E. A. Greeley, Albert Schaefer, J. Fitch Swinbourne, and Frelinghuysen Seward. Thirty young society women acted as waitresses.

Mrs. H. L. Borden and Mrs. Moffitt, 235 West 103d Street, have sent out invitations for a reception which they will give on Tuesday afternoon from 4 until 6.

There were 292 players at the pivot bridge and point euchre given on Monday in the Waldorf by Auxiliary 1 of the Stony Wold. The Chairmen of the Entertainment Committee was Miss Le Fevre, 55 West Ninety-second Street. Serving with her were Mrs. C. Albert Jacob, Mrs. J. Burton Meeker, Mrs. Ward B. Hoar, Mrs. Benjamin Jackson, Miss Emma le Groot, Mrs. Charles Park Logan, Mrs. C. O. Maas, Mrs. S. M. Jarvis, Mrs. Jacob Litt, Mrs. James Baker, Mrs. John Udall, Mrs. Frank Hodgman, Mrs. John Williams. There were fifty-four tables of bridge and nineteen of euchre, with a prize for each table.

Mrs. John J. Bradley, 378 Central Park West, was the hostess yesterday afternoon at a musical tea given for a friend who is going to Europe. Mrs. Bradley, Mrs. Burnbohm, and Mrs. Callahan sang for the entertainment of the guests. Some of those invited were Miss Louise Thomas, Mrs. Charles Rustmann, Mrs. William Bradley, Mrs. Charles Dollmer, Mrs. Matten, Miss Elsie Jaburd, Mrs. Archibald Dolby.

The second meeting of the Columbia Luncheon and Bridge Club, organized last Spring by Mrs. Foster Coates, 331 West Seventy-first Street, will be held to-morrow in the Columbia Yacht Clubhouse. The fifty members of this unique club, which meets on Mondays in the Spring months, wear dainty Spring gowns, and there are table decorations of fresh green things and early Spring flowers. Among the members are Mesdames J. J. Amory, Augustine Banks, Wendell C. Phillips, Arthur Elliott Fish, Frank Louis Sheldon, Lionel Emdin, F. K. Taylor, A. K. Wright, H. J. Swift, Franklyn B. Files, Ira McCormack, J. Turner, A. B. Carrington, and John Williame.

Mrs. Harry Cameron Grant, 236 West Seventy-fifth Street, will sail for Europe early in May, to be gone the greater part of the Summer.

Miss Florence Bear, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. F. L. Bear of the Hotel Netherland, will be married to-morrow noon to Harry William Vogel in the Hotel St. Regis. Dr. Mendes will perform the ceremony, which will be followed by a breakfast and reception. About 150 invitations have been sent out. It will be a pink-and-white wedding, the bride wearing white chiffon cloth, with pearl and silver trimmings, and a veil of point applique. Her only ornament will be a string of diamonds, the gift of the bridegroom. The bride's only attendant will be Miss Rena Weinberg. The best man is to be Bernard Vogel. The ushers will be Messrs. Jerome Bansig, Gay Millus, Albert Cahn, Beno Vogel, Howard Vogel, and Martin Vogel. The young people will leave town for a ten days' auto trip through the Berkshires, and will sail for Europe on April 30 on the Deutchland. They will remain abroad all Summer, returning to the Hotel Netherland in the Fall.

Mrs. Ashbel P. Fitch, 730 West End Avenue, is spending the Spring and early Summer traveling in Mexico. She will later go to California, where she will remain some time.

Mrs. O. H. Gardner, 57 West 140th Street, gave a reception on Monday afternoon for the Colonial Chapter of the Daughters of the Revolution. The Regent of the chapter, Mrs. William Hotchkin, assisted in receiving. There were recitations and music during the afternoon, and a buffet luncheon. The decorations were in blue and buff, the society colors.

There was a meeting on Friday of Auxiliary 5 of Stony Wold in the home of Mrs. R. H. Greene, 245 Central Park West. Mrs. Greene is the first Vice Chairman of the auxiliary. Mrs. J. L. Eddy the Chairman. Other officers are Mrs. B. C. E. Becker, Mrs. A. W. Harris, Mrs. Gardner Wetherbee, and Miss A. Valerie Old. Auxiliary 11, Mrs. J. G. Wells, Chairman, has a bridge planned for Tuesday, to be given in the Waldorf.

On Wednesday Cilo will give its annual Spring luncheon in the Hotel Savoy at 12. Those invited as guests of honor are Mrs. May Wright Sewall, Mrs. Ida Bonel Judd, Mrs. Wilbour, Mrs. William Todd Helmuth, Mrs. Philip Carpenter, Mrs. Howard McNutt, Mrs. White, Mrs. Demorest, Mrs. Cynthia Westover Alden, and other club Presidents. The decorations will be in yellow and white, the club colors. The club is limited to 100 members, but there will be about 150 present at the luncheon. When it was founded twenty years ago this society was for the purpose of studying history, but it has turned into a departmental club and takes up music, the drama, and literature. There was an election of officers on Monday, and the following were elected: President—Miss Elizabeth Reid; First Vice President—Mrs. Andrew J. Shipman; Second Vice President—Mrs. George E. Steel; Corresponding Secretary—Mrs. E. R. Rich; Recording Secretary—Mrs. Harry Lilly; Treasurer—Mrs. Judson G. Wells; Auditor—Mrs. Frank E. Thompson; Historian—Mrs. E. Eugene Allendorf. The last meeting of the club for the season will be held on Monday, the 22d of this month. The subject will man, has a bridge planned for Tuesday, to be be "Current Events." Mrs. Fernando Rogers will be Chairman for the day.

There were 230 young people present at the last dance of the Cotillion and Unique Assemblies on Thursday. It was the final one of the series. Next Winter, the third season for these dances, the membership will be extended to 125 regular attendants. The dates have not yet been decided upon.

A Potpourri of Fashions--Some Original Wedding Gowns

MISS GRACE PARKER, who married Dr. Loanedr Shearer, in Trinity Chapel, was perhaps the first of the well-known society girls to eschew satin on her bridal gown, for, although the foundation may have been satin, the robe itself was white chiffon flounced with lace and caught with sprays of orange blossoms. The skirt was rather full and the train rather short. A lace ruffle some six or seven inches wide went around the bottom of the skirt, being raised at the sides, where sprays of orange blossoms were fastened. Orange blossoms also decorated the corsage, which was soft and full, a sort of draped effect in point lace over chiffon, with a lace stock and guimpe. The sleeves were full flounces of point lace that fell to the elbow, and the voluminous tulle veil was fastened with orange blossoms.

The little flower girl, Miss Katharine Bissell, was a picture in her lace-frilled gown and her quaint bonnet with the white framework sprayed with what seemed to be sprays of maidenhair ferne, and with a spray of white daisies at one side. She carried a basket filled with daisies, in one end of which was fastened a spray of roses.

Mrs. George Homer Tower of Boston was the matron of honor. When Mrs. Tower, then Miss Addie Storm Boyd, was married about a year ago, Miss Parker was one of her attendants. Mrs. Tower wore a pink chiffon frock and small white hat trimmed with palest pink ostrich plumes, and carried pink roses. The bride's other attendants, Mrs. E. Henry Harriman Simons and Miss Margaret Shearer, were dressed, like the matron of honor, in pink, but their small round hats were trimmed with ruches of wide pink ribbon, and had clusters of large, full-blown pink roses at the right side. All the attendants carried pink rosee.

Miss Wetmore's Immense Train.

Miss Wenonah Wetmore's marriage to Arthur Lithgow Devens of Boston occurred too late in the week to describe her wedding robe last Sunday, but it, like some others, was too distinctive to be omitted.

The train was fully six yards long, and looked at least seven. It was slightly squared at the ends, and was really superb. At the sides, where the train was probably tacked to the skirt proper, a flounce of point lace, widest at the floor, curved gracefully up and gave a draped effect. The bodice had a little coat effect given it by a point-lace postillion at the back below the draped belt. The bodice was close-fitting, and was made of satin folds drawn over the fitted lining. In the front the bodice was largely of point lace, laid in loose effect and having sprays of orange blossoms fastened at the side. The sleeves, which were quite long, coming below the elbows, were of flounces of point lace, held in to the arms near the top by twists of white satin, and, if I remember correctly, there were sprays of orange blossoms on each of the sleeves. The stock and guimpe were of point lace, and there was also more of the point lace on the jupe.

The tulle veil was a voluminous one caught with orange blossoms in loose fluffs above her dark hair, and her bouquet was an immense, irregular shaped one of lilies of the valley.

Miss Annette Markoe, who was to have been in the bridal party and who is Mrs. Devens's half sister, was not able to take part, but the other four girls, grown-ups in this case, were the bridesmaids. They were the Misses Janet Fish, who is to be the only attendant of her cousin, Miss Marion Fish, daughter of Stuyvesant Fish, when she marries Albert Zabriskie Gray in June; Miss Dagmar Wetmore, her sister; Miss Sibyl Douglas, whose brother married Miss Annie Ward Kountze two days earlier in the week, and Miss Elizabeth L. Devens of Boston, who is to marry Gerald Boardman in June. They were in white chiffon empire gowns with blue sashes. These gowns were, however, strictly modified empire effects, the bodices being a bit shortwaisted in the back only, for the full empire gown, with its fullness beginning a little below the shoulders and the rather loose fronts and sides, is seldom seen.

In detail the gowns had stocks and guimpes of plaited chiffon and the bodice was arranged in bretelles with crosswise connecting bands, all of folds of white chiffon bound with silvery white satin, and between the double bretelles of the bodices at each side were inch-wide insertions of cloth of silver or silver-gauze ribbon. The elbow-length sleeves were in flounce effect of chiffon and lace.

The skirts were each finished with three wide, touching tucks, and the overdress or jupe curved up a little each side of the back breadths. This was full, falling in folds, and was bordered at the bottom by a five-inch flounce of white lace headed by a fold of white satin or silver gauze.

The sashes were quite wide and of ciel blue liberty satin ribbon, with a sort of chou bow at the girdle. The ends came nearly to the floor. The gowns were tight at the front and sides.

The small round crinoline hats were trimmed about the crowns with a box-plaited ruffle of ciel blue satin ribbon, the plaiting being near the top of the crown and the plaits falling to the edge of the narrow round brims. Over these the white lace was plaited, and at each side were fastened sprays of three or four large pink roses. They were extremely pretty.

The bouquets carried by the attendants were novel in shape, being club-shaped bouquets with double ends tied near the base with wide pink satin ribbon with short bows and ends. They were made of large pink roses, and were in all about twenty-four inches long, and were as large at one end as at the other, the ribbon being tied perhaps eight inches from the base.

Mrs. Markoe's Maize-Colored Robe.

Mrs. James W. Markoe, the mother of the bride, formerly Mrs. William Boerum W. Wetmore, wore a maize-colored chiffon cloth gown effectively decorated with lace of the same hue, and on her brown coiffure was set a rather large, light yellowish or cream leghorn hat, simply but picturesquely trimmed with two large full blown shaded roses and two immense maize-colored ostrich plumes. This hat was oval in shape with a wide brim and moderately high oval crown. The brim was curved slightly. Near the left front was placed one of the roses having a deep orange-colored centre, shading to apricot at the outside, and this covered the bases of the two yellow ostrich plumes, one of which partially rested on the crown and the other drooped over the ear, both swept far over the back. At the left side near the back the other shaded rose was caught. Both these were neat-shaped flowers and of large size.

The chiffon gown had a stock and narrow pointed guimpe of point lace, and resting on these was a superb diamond necklace, fully two inches wide, with pendants. This was flexible and followed the oval of the guimpe.

The bodice had a wide section, fully nine or ten inches broad, of the maize-colored lace going over the shoulders and down each side of the front and ending just above the girdle, where the ends were twisted into a soft, flat knot. The girdle was moderately wide.

The skirt was laid at the top in very narrow box plaits, I think, that held the skirt rather flat until past the widest part of the hips, thence the skirt flowed in graceful folds and swept the floor. It had a six-inch hem, and above this was inserted a ten-inch band of the maize-colored lace that extended to the centre panel of the gown. Down the centre front from girdle to hem extended a wide panel of similar lace. The elbow sleeves were not large, and were bordered with the lace.

Original Wedding Gowns.

The brides' gowns of the past week showing the most original features were those of Miss Mary Picton Stevens, who married Ogden H. Hammond at Castle Point, and Miss Helen Gillette Ballard, who married Walter Heyward Powere.

Miss Ballard's gown had a long court train entirely of rose point edged across the squared end and up the sides with a white satin hem four or five inches wide. The gown itself was of white chiffon over satin, and was embroidered about the bottom and sides with large white popples done in silk and, apparently, narrow white ribbon.

Over this lace train came a long veil of tulle, bordered with rose point, and this was fastened at the top of her golden pompadour with a diadem of orange blossoms.

The point lace yoke of her robe was worked in seed pearls. The front of the bodice was formed almost entirely of lace in draped effect, with a panel outlined from the waist line to the hem, and at each side of the outlined panel at the bottom of the skirt were large white popples. She carried lilies of the valley and white orchids, and wore the bridegroom's gift, a diamond brooch, and also an amethyst bracelet, the gift of her attendants.

Miss Marie L. Hoopes, the maid of honor, wore a rose pink Empire robe of satin crêpe de chine, the bottom of the robe having a rolled finish or deep hem above which came to the bottom of the jupe proper or a separate rolled tuck some eight inches deep, finished with a ruffle of cream lace. There was a panel effect in cream white lace down the centre front. The top had a yoke of white lace. The sleeves fitted quite closely and ended at the elbows. They were of pink tulle encircled by two up-and-down plaited bands of the crêpe, each ending in a little plaited ruching, with the chiffon puffing out between. The extreme tops of the sleeves rose in high, but tiny, puffs, and narrow frills of white lace finished the bottom.

The hat worn by Miss Hoopee was one of the most effective possible. It was a large round yellow Tuscan straw, with a crown at least six inches high and perfectly round. The crown was banded with tight folds of pink ribbon, and at the left front large sprays of small pink roses shading to mauve were fastened so that they rose partially against the crown, with some of them standing above it, and others resting on the wide brim. The hat was lifted quite a bit at the left, slanting toward the right, and was also evidently raised all around by an invisible bandeau.

Starting from the left side, back of the ear, was a long trailing end of wide pink silk ribbon and a scarf of white tulle; these after reaching the top of the shoulder were brought forward and caught midway between the top of the shoulder and the bust with a spray of small pink roses, the tulle and ribbon ends floating over the bodice. She carried a mass of pink rosee.

The bridesmaids were the Misses Margaret S. Scott, Georgia Gray, Madeleine Gelshenen, Gertrude Knapp, Lucy Reiss, and Ruth Eaton. They were in white lace frocks, the skirts in double flounce effect although in one piece, apparently, over palest pink, and the bodice had round girdles of pale pink shading to mauve. Each carried loose sheaf bouquets of pink roses shading through various pink hues.

All wore large white hats trimmed at the left side and front with many loops of pink ribbon, and at the right side and front with masses of pink roses shading to mauve. Near the left back of each hat a long end of the pink ribbon and scarf of white tulle started, and like the tulle and ribbon on the hat of the maid of honor, these were similarly caught to the shoulder with sprays of shaded pink and mauve roses. They also wore, as did the maid of honor, pink pearl pinks, the gifts of the bride.

Miss Stevens's Embroidered Robe.

Miss Mary Picton Stevens's wedding gown had an Empire back, but the draped front fitted the figure. The sleeves and yoke were of rose point, and the lace on the bodice was draped in sloping folds, and from this yoke to the floor in the centre front was a narrow stole effect done in white chiffon roses, embroidered in seed pearls. At the bust line this stole separated and went in two narrow bands over along the lace and to the top of each shoulder, where a lappet end of the embroidered rosee drooped over the sleeves, and on each lappet was caught a spray of orange blossoms. The skirt was slashed at each side of the centre front up some twelve inches, and this had lines of pearl and chiffon embroidery at the sides that terminated at the top of the slashing in sprays of chiffon roses. Fine chiffon plaitings were inserted under these slashings. As the skirt was very plain and close at the feet, these gave a fluffy, full effect.

Her point lace veil had a tulle centre and was shirred under orange blossoms. Her bouquet was a shower of valley lilies.

The maid of honor, Miss Martha Marvin of Louisville, Ky., wore a princess robe of white chiffon cloth, having cream lace insertions, topped by a coat of yellow lace. It had a sash of flowered silk ribbon, and the elbow sleeves had knots of the flowered ribbon at the elbows. Her large yellow leghorn hat was decorated with pink roses and her flowers matched them.

The four little girl attendants, cousins of the bride, the Misses Caroline and Emily Stevens, and Mary Chapin and Elsie Stevens, wore short-waisted white frocks, with tucked skirts and pink sashes and white hats, trimmed with pink ribbons and roses.

Miss Loew's Bridal Gown.

Miss Marguerite Loew, now Mrs. Robert Cutting Lawrence, whose home wedding occurred on Thursday, wore a princess gown of heavy white satin perfectly plain below the bust line, fitting like a glove and having a very long train. It had a V-shaped rose point yoke, with rose point draped in fichu effect and outlining the yoke, the lace being knotted at the V of the yoke, and having a spray of orange blossoms caught in the lace. The back and the front were alike. The short sleeves were puffs of rose point, ending at the elbows and gathered in with a narrow ruffled edge of the rose point drooping over the tops of the gloves.

The veil of rose point was extremely long, coming nearly to the end of the train, and was held to her coiffure by a diamond coronet, the gift of her brother, E. Victor Loew, Jr. She also wore a diamond necklace, a gift from the same brother; a diamond-studded comb, a present from her elder brother, W. Goadby Loew and Mrs. Loew, and an immense solitaire pearl ring, the gift of Mr. Lawrence, and carried lilies of the valley.

Mrs. Howard Brokaw's Frock.

Mrs. Howard Brokaw, the matron of honor and sister of the bride, was in thin white lace over deep, cream-colored chiffon and satin. Her large yellow leghorn hat, with drooping brim, was trimmed with three large apricot yellow ostrich plumes, starting from the front and falling off the back. These plumes were the sole decoration. They were so heavy where they started that they needed nothing but their own tendrils to cover the stems. There was no cachepeigne and no crown trimming, the hat being one of the very latest things evolved in the millinery art.

The bridesmaids' gowns were of pale-blue chiffon and white lace. These girls were Miss Angelica Gerry, (her sister, Miss Mabel Gerry, was also to have been in the bridal party, but an attack of measles quarantined her, and no one took her place,) the Misses Edith Lawrence, a sister of the bridegroom; Vera Gilbert, Beatrix Hollins, and Marion Stoddard.

Their frocks had skirts and bodices without any suggestion either of princess or empire effect. They were elaborately trimmed with insertions of white lace and bands of embroidery. The skirts had a narrow panel outlined down the front by a band on each side of white lace. These bands, like all the others on the skirt, were narrow at the top and widened as they went down the skirt until at the bottom they were about three inches broad. There was a band of embroidery around the bottom of the skirts. On each side of the skirts was another of these white lace insertions, and between these lace insertions extended straight bands of embroidery done on blue chiffon. These bands were perhaps two inches wide and two inches apart. At the top in the back the skirts were shirred until they fitted smoothly, and there was a panel effect down the back outlined with graduated insertions of white lace.

The bodices had deep pointed yokes of unlined white lace, and these were outlined and framed with a wide shaped band of the shaded blue embroidery going over the shoulders down each side, and loose at the outer edges. In the front the point of this embroidery almost touched the wide folded satin girdle. The front and the back were alike, and between the embroidered bands under the arms above the high, folded girdles the bodicee were of white lace.

The sleeves were formed of a succession of narrow lace ruffles set on a chiffon puff, and they ended above the elbows.

Starting from a chou-like knot at the centre of the girdle in the back, wide, soft, pale-blue taffie ribbon was carried up each side, and, going up the back, was carried and crushed softly over the tops of the sleeves and carried from there down the bodice at the edge of the embroidered bands to the bust lines, where the ribbons were pulled under the bands and brought again at the centre point of the embroidery and lace yoke and made into soft chous, having rhinestone ornaments in the centre. They also wore the pearl and sapphire brooches given them by the bride.

Miss Steele's Wedding Gown.

Miss Ruth Steele, the daughter of the Rev. Dr. J. Nevett Steele, now Mrs. Joseph Carleton Borden, wore a trained white satin princess wedding robe, the skirt of which was edged around the bottom with a foamy fluff of rose-ruchings of white tulle perhaps six inches wide, and as deep. From the bottom similar foamy lines rose, and, curving up each side the centre front, stopped perhaps eighteen inches from the waist line; these outlined a panel effect, or, rather, gave an overdress and petticoat effect to the gown that was new and charming. The bodice and sleeves were almost entirely of old point, the lace on the bodice being arranged in fichu and drapery effects. She wore a pearl necklace worn by her grandmother, mother, and sisters at their weddings. Her tulle veil was caught with orange blossoms.

The maid of honor, Miss Margory C. Lawrence, wore an Empire frock of stain-striped white gauze, with a little yoke and stock of unlined cream lace, white lace, and short puffed sleevee. The girdle had a twisted knot effect in the back and was of the striped gauze. The skirt was trimmed at the bottom with a deep hem of white satin, and over this drooped the jupe proper, the first satin band being on the foundation skirt of silk, a straight ruffle of white lace perhaps six inches deep falling from a four-inch satin band going around the Empire overdress. This band was really not in one, as it terminated at each side in a picket point that touched the picket points of the band coming from the back.

Her white leghorn hat was trimmed with several pale-pink plumes that nodded over the front from the crown and longer plumes drooped to the back. Loops of pale-pink satin ribbon appeared at the other side of the hat.

The bridesmaids, the Misses Helen Aldrich, Marjory H. Rice, Dorothy Greene, Helen Rae, and Marjory Wessels, wore gowns made exactly like that of the maid of honor, only in rose pink, and their hats were trimmed with pink ribbons. Sprays of pink wietaria covered the brims and drooped off the sides and back. They carried pink sweet peas, and Miss Lawrence carried pink roses. Mrs. Steele, the mother of the bride, was in lavender striped chiffon with white lace on the bodice, and wore a white lavender trimmed hat.

Mrs. Theodore Morris, Jr., a sister of the bride, was in a pale green gown topped by a white hat trimmed with yellow ombre ribbon and marguerites. Mrs. Léon Moran, another sister, was in a changeable silk frock in gray, changing to lavender and pink, topped by a black picture hat with black ostrich plumee, and Mrs. J. Nevett Steele, Jr., was in white Shantung delicately striped with black hair lines, showing point applique and touches of pale blue about the bodice. She wore a black plumed hat.

Miss Neeser in White Satin.

Miss May H. Neeser, now Mrs. Charles Lestelle, whose marriage occurred in St. Patrick's Cathedral on Tuesday last, wore a white satin Empire gown with fichu and sleeves of point lace, the lace being in fichu effect. Shirred white tulle came down the sides of the robe. The lace on the bodice formed sleeve caps, and where the tulle was festooned at the side of the skirt a large spray of orange blossoms was fastened. The sleeves themselves were of finely shirred tulle. Her long tulle veil was fastened with orange blossoms, and she carried a beautifully tooled white leather prayer book.

The attendants, the Misses Elvine Neeser, Rosina Sherman Hoyt, Mary Redmond Cross and Alice Everard Strong, wore white lace princess robes with pale green girdles, and their large white Neapolitan hats had sweeping ostrich plumes. Their large sheaf bouquets of American Beauty roses added a much needed note of color to a dark and stormy day. Mrs. Neeser, the bride's mother, was in black chiffon cloth, with a cream lace yoke and stock, and wore a small black toque with feathers.

Miss Barney in White Satin.

Miss Katharine Lansing Barney, who married Courtland Dixon Barnes on Wednesday, had a white satin gown quite plain at the bottom and having much point lace about the top. The stock yoke and fichu were of point lace, lace was also carried down one side of the skirt, and sprays of orange blossoms appeared in the lace of the corsage and also on the skirt. The very long point lace veil was also attached to the train, coming nearly to the end of the latter. The attendants, the Misses Dorothy Whitney, daughter of the late William C. Whitney and cousin of the bride, and the Misses Jean Reid, daughter of Ambassador Reid; Miss Sallie Barnes, sister of the bridegroom; Miss Anita Peabody, daughter of Charles A. Peabody, and Miss Cornelia Harriman, second daughter of E. H. Harriman, wore pale-green chiffon robes trimmed with insertions of white lace and having white lace yokes. Their large white hats were trimmed with clusters of yellow, white, and green sweet peas, and they carried white forsythia bouquets.

QUEENS WATER SUPPLY.

City Mains Soon to be Laid in Broadway-Flushing and Douglas Manor.

According to Deputy Water Commissioner Wissel, Broadway-Flushing and Douglas Manor are to at last receive their new water supply, which has been delayed for several months on account of the inability of the contractors to secure the pipe. The mains to be laid by the city in Broadway-Flushing extend along State Street, from Sixteenth to Twenty-second Street; thence along Crocheron Avenue to Twenty-eighth Street. The Rickert-Finlay Realty Company have already laid private mains on most of the gross streets, which will be connected with the city mains.

The city mains to be laid in Douglas Manor will extend along Hillside Avenue to Centre Drive, and thence along Centre Drive and West Drive to Douglas Point. From the city mains the Rickert-Finlay Company will lay private mains on the cross streets to supply immediate requirements of residents until the future extensions of the city main are made.

The Citizens' Water Company is also laying new mains from the new Alley Pond pumping station along Alley Road to Broadway, thence along Broadway to Great Neck. Arrangements have been practically completed with the Citizens' Company for laying mains in the streets of Westmoreland, lying between Broadway and the Little Neck station. Building throughout this entire district has been seriously held back by the delay in securing water, and it is expected that as a result of the certainty of an immediate water supply great building activity will follow throughout the district.

TORRENS MASS MEETING.

Speakers at To-morrow's Discussion in the Real Estate Auction Room.

To-morrow afternoon's mass meeting under the auspices of the Real Estate Board of Brokers, in advocacy of the Torrens system, will be held at the Real Estate Salesroom, 11 and 16 Vesey Street at 3:30 o'clock.

Sir Daniel O'Connor of New South Wales, Australia, a member of the Parliament which passed the original Torrens act, will be among the prominent speakers at the meeting. The title companies also have been asked to send representatives to offer their objections to this measure. A number of civic societies have expressed their intention of sending representatives.

In a recent article in these columns relative to the Torrens system it was stated upon what seemed to be adequate authority that Louis A. Seeburger of Chicago had said, before the St. Paul Real Estate Board, that the law was unpopular in Illinois and the revenues did not pay the expenses of operation. Mr. Seeburger, in a letter to President David A. Clarkson of the Real Estate Board of Brokers, says that he never made any such statement, and that he has never appeared before the St. Paul Real Estate Board.

Mr. Seehurger adds that the system is popular in Cook County, as appears from the fact that whenever questions relating to it have been submitted to the people the favorable majority has been greater on each successive occasion.

HUGHES REVIEWS THE 7TH.

Crowded Galleries Applaud Him—Crosses of Honor Presented.

Gov. Hughes was the guest of honor last night at the review of the Seventh Regiment, held in the Armory at Sixty-sixth Street and Park Avenue. The galleries were crowded with spectators and the Governor was heartily applauded when he appeared.

Among the other guests were Adjutant General Henry, Lieut. Col. Treadwell, the Governor's Military Secretary; Gen. George Moore Smith and Col. Morris, of the Ninth Regiment.

In recognition of their twenty-five years' service, gold crosses of honor were awarded to Col. John H. Tackaberry and Private Horace E. Fox.

DEATH OF TRUTHFUL JAMES.

Bret Harte's Mining Partner, the Original of That Character.

SONORA, Cal., April 13.—James Gillet, at one time Bret Harte's mining partner, and original of that author's "Truthful James," died to-day.

It was in "Plain Language from Truthful James" that Harte told of Ah Sin, "with the smile that was childlike and bland."

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

EDWARD G. OSTERMAN.—Edward G. Osterman of 2,412 Seventh Avenue, formerly a skirt manufacturer, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $10,318 and no assets. Among the creditors are Adolphus E. Karelson $2,500, Ephraim A. Karelson $2,500, American Woolen Company $1,200, and Abraham Seideman $500. He was formerly partner in the firm of Osterman, Emanuel & Seidman, skirt manufacturers at 4 West Sixteenth Street, which dissolved in October, 1906, and of Osterman & Emanuel, who dissolved in December, 1906.

PINCUS JACOBS.—Pincus Jacobs, a baker of 262 East Broadway, has filed a petition in bankruptcy, with liabilities of $1,725, contracted in 1905, and no assets. Among the creditors are I. & H. Krulowitch $800, Jakob Rosenberg $400, and Jacob Rulla $400.

TO HEAD THE THEOSOPHISTS.

Mrs. Annie Besant Was Named by Col. Olcott on His Deathbed.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., April 18.—An official announcement was received to-day of the nomination of Mrs. Annie Besant as World President of the Theosopohical Society, to succeed the late Col. Henry Steele Olcott, the President and co-founder of the organization. Col. Olcott died recently following his return to India from Chicago, where he had attended the annual convention of the American section.

The official announcement states that on his deathbed Col. Olcott named Mrs. Besant, who had for years been a co-worker with him, to succeed him, a prerogative which he held.

The nomination must be ratified by a two-thirds vote of the societies of the world. The vote is soo nto be taken. Mrs. Besant is coming to America from India in June.

Tombs Still Crowded.

Commissioner Coggey and Warden Flynn supervised the departure from the Tombs yesterday of over fifty prisoners to various institutions. Before these were sent away the record for the Tombs had been broken, 621 prisoners being on the roll. The largest previous number ever confined in the prison was 610. Thirty-four new prisoners were received yesterday, and the Tombs is still crowded.

SPRING RESORTS.

Atlantic City.

Marlborough-Blenheim

Atlantic City, N. J.

April

The ending of Lent this year coincides with the beginning of April, the gayest and most distinguished month in Atlantic City's famous Spring season. During this month more eminent visitors and "the people" are to be found in the great hotels than in any other month of the year, and the absence of the Easter Sunday "INTERRUPTION" enables guests to completely enjoy all the attractions of climate and artificial entertainment of this festive season with entire satisfaction.

The hotel claims distinction for its location, its ample public space devoted to its guests, its high-class music every night throughout the year, but particularly attractive with solo singers at the week-ends during the Spring season and its ownership management.

All the four dining rooms (two American plan, with the excellent cooking heretofore so popular, and two a la carte, with separate kitchens and French cooks) have white service throughout, and in one of the American rooms, called the "American Palm Room," and in the a la carte rooms smoking is permitted. These are particularly attractive. Ocean and suites with large rooms 34 by 20 feet and a private bath (supplied with both sea water and fresh water and with running ice water) is with every alternate room in the Marlborough and with every room in the Blenheim, which in construction is reputed to be the most completely fireproof hotel in the world. Golf privileges.

CITY CLUB HONORS MEN WHO FOUNDED IT

Fifteenth Anniversary Made the Occasion of Praise for Hughes and Bingham.

BETTER POLICE PROMISED

R. Fulton Cutting Says Reformers Should Get Closer to the Wage Earners.

The fifteenth anniversary of the founding of the City Club was celebrated in the clubhouse, West Forty-fourth Street, last night. Eight of the original founders were present, and the occasion was one of successive demonstrations in honor of the men who had made the City Club what it is, or of others, among them Alexis Aladin, the Russian revolutionist.

George McAneny, the new President of the club, presided at the dinner, and in his speech told of the things the club has done in the past and the things that it hopes to accomplish for the betterment of the city in the future. The Bingham bill, just made a law at Albany, he declared, was an epoch in the police history of New York City. He predicted that when Gen. Bingham took the force in hand, under its provisions, it would be the beginning of a new régime in the Police Department.

Mr. McAneny also praised Gov. Hughes. Mayor McClellan, he added, likewise stood in a sympathetic attitude toward the objects of the club. Mr. McAneny then introduced as the first speaker John J. Chapman, one of the original founders present last night.

"I am glad that a man like Charles E. Hughes is Governor of New York," said Mr. Chapman. "Mr. Hughes is the kind of a man for whom the people of this country have been groaning, and if he is the kind of a man that I think he is, he is going to be the next great man in the United States. My impression is that there has been a great moral awakening on the part of the American people which at the present time is only beginning."

Problems of the Multitude.

After Mr. Chapman came R. Fulton Cutting, another of the original founders. Mr. Cutting began his talk by referring to the Citizens' Union, of which he is the head, as an inspiration of the City Club. He added that in his opinion the City Club, if it was to accomplish its mission, should make it a point to get in closer touch with the daily wage earning element in our population.

"You ought to get a little closer in touch with the wage earners of New York City," he said. "The great problems of this community are the problems of the multitude, and they are the problems that this club will have to grapple with, and to do it successfully the club should establish those closer relations with the laboring people. You should have conferences with labor leaders and find out if it is not profitable to establish these desired relations. I believe that it can be done."

Charles Noble Gregory, Dean of the Law School of the University of Iowa, an honorary member, told of conditions in the West. Dr. Gregory is against stand patters and stagnation, and is a warm supporter and admirer of Gov. Cummins. The Legislature that has just adjourned in Iowa, he said, had passed more reform measures than any Legislature in the history of that State.

A Voice for Russian Freedom.

Alexis Aladin, who followed Dr. Gregory, spoke briefly, and, as was to be expected, his speech was one of hope for the coming of the day of democratic institutions in Russia. Conditions, he said, had changed greatly in Russia in the past twenty-five years, and that such work as the City Club is now doing in New York can be and is appreciated by the people of Russia, who are struggling to accomplish similar results in their own unfortunate country. The men who are in charge of the reform work in Russia, he said, realized the immensity of the task ahead of them, which now is only starting. The leaders, he added, have to lead the people to an understanding of the great rights that are theirs, and they were fully aware of the responsibility that rests upon them.

When Mr. Aladin sat down Mr. McAneny introduced Richard Watson Gilder, another of the Founders, who was the last of the speakers, and who was down to deliver what Mr. McAneny termed a "Civic Benediction." Mr. Gilder's reception was the heartiest of the evening, the cheering that greeted him lasting several minutes.

Mr. Gilder said there was a spirit among the people to accomplish results that was going at a speed that was impossible to compute. He referred, as an instance, to the peace movement, and in a jocular way said he wondered what the fighters would do for their amusement when the day of universal peace arrives. President Roosevelt, he added, had had his fight, and must now look to the era of peace in which to have his fun. Mr. Gilder said that when Mr. Roosevelt had his fight he either "went up the hill on horseback, or on foot, or both."

Mr. Gilder concluded his remarks by reading a poem entitled "In the Cities." It follows:

Richard Watson Gilder's Poem.

IN THE CITIES.

In the cities no longer the blare of trumpets,
that summon to battle;
From splendid towers the banners flash not forth in the breeze,
No longer the ringing of war bells and the sound of shouting soldiers,
The clangor of sword on shield, nor the cries of the feudal fighters
Hurrying into the streets to strike with bullet and steel
Clamoring, battering down; assailing high walls and windows;
Rushing maddened, furious, to the killing of citizen neighbors;
Yet still a clangor of bells and a loud, shrill
whistling and shouting;
But the sharp, quick sounds that startle proclaim not anger but mercy,
For now, like winds and thunders, rush by the glittering engines,
And the wagons, with ladders and axes, laden with well-trained men
Eager to quench the flame and scale the dangerous battlements;
Eager to risk their lives in the hissing blaze and the smoke
That blinds, and that gripe the throat like the throttling hand of murder;
On come the engines and wagons, and the chief in his hooting chariot;
And a boy, who hears them approaching, rushes out to the crossing of ways,
And swinging his arms and shouting clears a path for the rushing engine
That rushes like winds and thunders down a vale of death and destruction;
And every man at his post on the flying winds of the storm,
Mad for the saving of lives of men and of women and children—
To swing in dizzying chasms, to creep to the edge of death
To save the children of strangers, forgetting their own in their madness;
And then if a comrade fall, how wild each man to the rescue
Descending into the pit, poisoned, choked, unconscious;
Revived—they struggle back 'gainst their officers vainly commanding,
Mad, mad, mad, for the saving of human life!
And now, in the days of peace no squadron charging by,
But swift down the street a sharp reiterant stroke and clamor,
A rhythmic beating of hoofs, a galloping louder, closer,
And again a month leaps quick to the crossing of crowded ways,
And he swings his arms and shouts, and clears through the human currents
A path for the clattering ambulance, hurrying, hurrying, hurrying
To a place where a child has fallen—is wounded
nigh unto death,
That the child may be tenderly lifted, and skilfully nursed and tended;
Engines and well-equipped ambulances, screaming, ringing, impatient;
Filling the frightened streets with echoes of old-time wars;
Not as of old to maim, to harry and scatter destruction;
Not to take life, but to save it; not to kill, but to rescue the perishing.

R. W. G.

The founders present last night, in addition to those already mentioned, were W. Bayard Cutting, J. Noble Hayes, R. W. G. Welling, John J. Schieffelin, and James B. Ludlow. Others present were Jacob H. Schiff, Dr. A. Jacobi, Norman Hapgood, Prof. John Dewey, A. S. Frissell, George Haven Putnam, Charles H. Strong, Carl L. Schurz, and E. R. Finch. District Attorney Jerome, who was expected, was too tired as a result of his labors in the Thaw trial to be present.

BURGLAR MAKES $5,000 HAUL.

Rob Brooklyn Home of Family of the Late William Hughes.

It came out yesterday that on Friday night burglars entered the home at 67 Fort Greene Place, Brooklyn, of the family of the late William Hughes, Assistant Corporation Counsel, who died last Fall while running for a Supreme Court Justiceship on the Democratic ticket. They went through the house unmolested, Miss Margaret Hughes, sister of Mr. Hughes, who now occupies the house, being away visiting an aunt in Scranton, Penn.

The burglars carried away jewelry, silverware, and paintings valued by Miss Hughes's friends at $5,000.

Mrs. Charles Johnson of 54 South Elliott Place discovered the burglars at work. She saw a light in the house, and knowing that Miss Hughes was away, notified ex-Deputy Police Commissioner Henry Haggerty, who lives at 28 South Elliott Place. He sent word to the police by telephone, and several men hurried to the house from the Classon Avenue Station, but the burglars had gone.

NO TRACE OF HIS CHILDREN.

But Brown Says He Knows the Woman Who Took Them.

Special to The New York Times.

OCEAN CITY, N. J., April 13.—T. Wister Brown, a wealthy resident of this place, said to-night that he had learned who the woman was who mysteriously disappeared with his three children yesterday while they were returning from school. Steps would be taken at once, Mr. Brown said, to have her arrested. He declined to name the woman, but the alleged kidnapping is believed to be another phase of the troubles in the Brown family which reached the courts last Winter.

"I don't know where my children are," said Mr. Brown to-night, "but I do know who stole them, and just as soon as I can consult with my attorney, ex-Judge Wescott of Camden, I will swear out a warrant and prosecute the guilty party or parties to the full extent of the law.

"I don't know what the motive of the people back of this can be, but I believe that the woman who stole the children was hired to do it. She certainly did not steal them on her own account, and I have a good idea of who hired her."

At the trial of Mr. Brown in the Cape May County Court on six indictments for cruelty to his children and two of assault and battery, it was testified that the father beat the little ones severely for what others regarded as small faults; that he kept them all Winter in a house heated barely enough to keep the water pipes from freezing, and that he compelled them to bathe in the ocean up to Nov. 12. There was no question that he was sincere; it was believed that he wished to make his children as hardy as himself, but exception was taken to his methods. A jury on Jan. 23 found him guilty of the six cruelty charges and acquitted him of the assault and battery charges. On each of the six charges Brown was fined $100. He took an appeal, which still is pending. Relatives thereupon asked the court to appoint a guardian for the Brown children. That, too, is undecided.

Mrs. Brown intimated to-day that the missing children had been severely punished on several occasions after the conviction of the father. She intimated, too, that the children might have gone away of their own free will.

CITY BREVITIES.

The annual Spring dinner and meeting of the New York Credit Men's Association is to take place at the Hotel Savoy next Wednesday evening.

The Associated Employes of the Building Bureaus, composed of the attaches of the Building Department in all five boroughs, are to have their third annual dance on Tuesday night in the Lexington Avenue Opera House.

Michael Newman, manager of the Long Acre Athletic Club, and the two pugilists who were discharged on Friday because of insufficient evidence, were again arraigned in Jefferson Market Court yesterday on the charge of violating Section 458 of the Penal Code, relating to holding prizefights. They were paroled for examination on Tuesday.

NEW TRACK INQUIRY FOR N. Y. CENTRAL

Company May Yet Have to Pay for 300 Lots It Has Used for Twenty Years.

OLD AGREEMENT FOUND

It Was in the Lenox Library, and How It Got There Is a Mystery.

In a report just made to the Mayor and the Board of Estimate, Harry P. Nichols of the engineering staff of the board, has revived the subject of the alleged "grab" by the New York Central Railroad of approximately 800 city lots between Twelfth Avenue and the river and Sixtieth and Seventy-second Streets, which the company is now using as a freight yard and which it obtained through a law passed in 1887. In view of Mr. Nichols's report and the present agitation against the Central's track on the West Side, it is exceedingly likely that an investigation into the alleged "grab" will be held and it is possible that the company eventually may be forced to pay the city a large sum in compensation for the rights it has held so long for nothing.

The Eleventh Avenue Track Removal Association asked the Board of Estimate last January why the Central was not paying taxes on the land occupied by the freight yard. Mr. Nichols was ordered to investigate. He learned that subsequent to the passage of the law referred to an agreement had been made between the city and the company, which materially qualified the important provisions of the law and which the company promised should be as binding as the law itself. This agreement had gone astray and Mr. Nichols could not find it until he was quietly informed that it might be well to look in the Lenox Library, where the document had no right whatsoever to be. On one of the shelves the agreement was found.

The law of 1887 gave the company the right to build a parapet wall east of its right of way and contained a "joker" to the effect that all streets to the west of the wall should be stricken off the map. The agreement provided that the city could extend its sewer system through what is now the yard and "that the company should make fair and just compensation to the city" by paying the sums that had been expended by the municipality in laying out the streets, together with interest. It was agreed further that the company should aid the city in getting legislation permitting the reopening of the closed streets at any time the city saw fit. As far as Mr. Nichols has been able to learn no compensation has been paid except that for the half of the property that comes within the jurisdiction of the Dock Department, and no legislation such as proposed has been enacted.

In all the yard occupies about 1,474,450 square feet of land. For 712,940 square feet of this it pays the Dock Department $32,500 a year. Of the remainder, $758,510, Mr. Nichols says in his report: "It will thus be seen that the railroad is at present and has been for twenty years last past, occupying more than 800 city lots, or something less than twenty acres, without compensation to the city."

All the papers in the case have been turned over to Corporation Counsel Ellison, who will go through them and try to ascertain if Mr. Nichols is right in his contentions.

NEED NOT GRANT A LICENSE

Officials of the Trotting Club Were Sanguine of Success of Their Mandatory Action.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., April 13.—There will be no racing at the track of the Empire City Trotting Club this year according to a decision handed down today by Supreme Court Justice Mills. The officials of the Empire track had all along expected that the Racing Commission would be compelled to assign racing dates for their track, but the decision of the Judge to-day puts an end to all controversy, at least for this season.

The contention began on Jan. 23, when the Empire people made an application to the State Racing Commission for dates on which they could hold meets at the track. The commission met in New York on Feb. 23 and the matter of assigning racing dates to the Empire track was taken up, and after a long discussion it was decided that no dates could be given to the Empire track. The findings of the commission were to the effect that there were already six metropolitan racing associations, together with the Saratoga Club, which had been holding meetings on its tracks for many years and had established valuable annual stakes, and it should have the preference this year also. The commission also announced that the racing dates for these seven associations had already been assigned and they comprised all the available dates allowed by the statute.

The law provides that there shall be racing in New York State only between April 15 and Nov. 15.

Another reason given by the commission for the refusal of the request of the Empire Club was that it was impossible to have racing on two tracks on the same day, and it would not be for the best interests of the association to grant a license to the Empire Club, and it therefore denied the application.

The Empire Club then applied to Supreme Court Justice Mills for a permanent writ of mandamus to compel the State Racing Commission to grant it a license to hold races at the track this year. Argument was heard in the matter two weeks ago, and the counsel for the Empire people held that it was not discretionary with the Racing Commission where it would issue a license or not. It was held that it was compulsory on the part of the commission to provide the Empire track with racing dates. The Racing Commission, on the other hand, held that it was discretionary with it as to whether a license should be issued or not, and it had decided not to grant a license.

The decision handed down to-day by Judge Mills upholds the contention of the Racing Commission and says it is not mandatory upon it to grant a license to the club, and he therefore denies the application for the writ.

CONFERENCE OUSTS MICHIGAN

Severs Relations with University for Non-Observance of Rules.

CHICAGO, April 13.—Michigan University was to-day ruled out of the Western Conference athletics because of its refusal to observe conference rules, and all athletic relations between the university and the other colleges composing the conference were severed. It was insisted by the other members of the intercollegiate conference that the rules adopted at the close of the football season of 1905, limiting the time of all athletes to three years, and the number of football games to not more than five, should be observed by Michigan, or that university should be left out of the conference. The representatives of Michigan declined to promise that the university would observe these rules, and it was then announced that all athletic relations had been terminated.

The meeting was attended by Dr. C. P. Hutchins of Wisconsin University; A. A. Stagg and A. W. Snall of Chicago University; N. G. Weatberly, Indiana University; T. F. Moran, Purdue University; A. G. Smith, Iowa University; R. E. Wilson and L. O. Gillesby of Northwestern University, and V. H. Lane and H. M. Bates of Michigan. The University of Minnesota was not represented.

A game of baseball between Michigan and Chicago, scheduled for to-day, was postponed indefinitely, and all the games between Michigan and the University of Illinois, and those with Northeastern University were likewise canceled.

The committee also decided that no members of the conference shall hold athletic relations with schools competing for State championships which do not observe conference rules.

Michigan's position was set forth by Prof. Victor S. Lane at an alumni dinner last night. He said that the university has not intended to defy the "Big Nine." In any way, but that it considers that there is nothing improper in playing outside colleges under other rules.

Beat Harvard and Then Lose to the Lafayette Nine.

Special to The New York Times.

ANNAPOLIS, Md., April 13.—In a splendidly contested game here this afternoon the Naval Academy boys defeated the Harvard nine by a score of 3 to 2. Only six innings were played, as the regularly scheduled Lafayette team appeared late, and the Harvard game was stopped to permit the navy to play the Pennsylvanians. Harvard got only one clean hit off Lanphier, and was lucky to escape a shut-out.

The navy was defeated by Lafayette by a score of 9 to 2. The Pennsylvaniane found the three navy pitchers without difficulty. The scores were:

NEW YORK LEADS AMERICAN LEAGUE

Yankees Play Tie With Washington, but Other Leaders Are All Beaten.

NO NATIONAL LEAGUE GAMES

Griffith's Team Plays Ten Innings Without Result, Evening Up the Senators' Early Lead.

Rain again prevented the game at the Polo Grounds between the Giants and Phillies and interfered with all the other games scheduled for the National League. With fickleness, it smiled on the American League, and all four games were played. The Yankees played a tie in Washington, the game ending with the score 4 to 4. By reason of the reversal of the results of the opening day in all the other games, New York leads the league, however. Chicago's World's Champions beat St. Louis, Cleveland downed Detroit, and the Athletics won from Boston. The results of the games played follow:

TEN INNINGS; NO RESULT.

Yankees Tie Washington's Early Lead, but Cannot Win Out.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—After New York and Washington had played ten innings with a 4 to 4 score to-day, Umpire Connelly called the game because of the cold and darkness. The game was started under favorable conditions, but gradually the weather became colder until the players of both teams and the spectators suffered considerably.

The Highlanders put up a pretty uphill fight, tieing the score after Washington had a lead of 3 to 0. The visitors outbatted the home team, but fast fielding by Cantillon's infield kept the score down. Elberfeld was banished from the game for disputing ono of Umpire Connelly's decisions in the opening inning, and his absence was severely felt by the Yankees.

Hogg started to do the pitching for New York, but was wild, and allowed six bases on balls, besides hitting one batter. At the beginning of the eighth inning Hogg was taken out and Walter Clarkson replaced him. The former Harvard Captain was in prime shape, and allowed only one hit during his two innings on the rubber.

Graham, Washington's California recruit, got a good start, but he lasted only until the beginning of the third inning, when Falkenberg went in. In the sixth inning Falkenberg was taken out to allow Blankenship to go to bat with the basee filled, and Kitson went into the box.

Washington got a run across the plate in the first inning. Schlafly was safe on a fieler's choice, stole second, and scored on Hickman's double. A base on balls to Heydon, followed by Graham's triple to left centre, netted the locals one in the second.

Now York got buey in the next session and a man was forced across the plate. Hogg got a base on balls, Conroy a hit, and Keeler was hit by pitcher, and Brockett was passed. In the fourth inning hits by Laporte and Kleinow, and Keeler's eacrifice gave New York another tally.

The Highlandere took the lead in the sixth by ecoring twice on singles by Williams, Hoffman and Kleinow, and Ganley's two wild throws to the plate. Three bases on balls, a etolen base, and Perrine's hit along the first base foul line gave Washington the final run of the game in the second half of the eixth. Thomas was removed from the grounds for talking back to Umpire Connelly. The score:

Cleveland's Good Sixth Inning.

DETROIT, April 13.—On an easy chance to retire the side in the sixth inning, Willett threw wide to first base, missing the third out. Cleveland then batted in four runs, taking a lead that decided the result. The game was played in a snowstorm, but to a good crowd. Stovall's hitting was the one bright feature of the game. Scora:

New Orleans Racing Ends.

NEW ORLEANS, April 13.—The longest Winter racing season in the history of New Orleans tracks closed to-day. To celebrate the wind-up City Park Track offered two stake events, each $1,000 added, the Ladies' Stake and the Orleans Handicap. Whisk Broom, favorite in the Ladies' Stakes, was off poorly and finished outside the money, while Black Mary, second choice, won easily.

AQUEDUCT OPENING CARD.

Nineteen High-Class Horses Named for the Carter.

Secretary Fred Retberger of the Queens County Jockey Club late yesterday afternoon made public the official list of entries for the opening day's racing programme at Aqueduct. The event marks the ushering in of the racing season on the tracks of the metropolitan circuit, operating under the jurisdiction of the Eastern Jockey Club.

The ten-thousand-dollar Carter Handicap, for three-year-olds and upward, is the feature of an otherwise excellent card that the club offers. The list of entries is remarkably large, the owners of no less than nineteen of the highest class horses in training being named to face the starter. The entries are as follows:

FIRST RACE.—For three-year-olds and upward, selling; five furlongs.

Pounds.		Pounds.
Pantoufle	111	°Veronese 101

FAVORITES LEAD AT BENNING TRACK

Attractive Card Draws Large Crowd for Closing Races at Washington.

HEAVY DAY FOR BETTING

Rose of Dawn Wins by Length in Lively Finish—Mr. Taylor on Essex an Easy Victor in Steeplechase.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—Rose of Dawn, played from 8 to 1 down to 13 to 5 and running in the colors of J. W. Colt, won the second Benning Spring Handicap to-day in one of the prettiest finishes of the meeting. Billie Hibbs, from David Dunlop's Stable, an odds-on favorite, took the Jesse Brown Cup, and Dion Kerr's Essex, ridden by Mr. Taylor, a 1 to 2 shot, was an easy winner of the eighth Spring Hunters' Steeplechase.

These three stake events, with three other overnight races, made up the banner card of the Benning Spring meeting, and the crowd was one of the largest that has been in attendance. The weather was still cold and raw. The winner in nearly every race was well backed, and it is probable that Rose of Dawn, which won the handicap, carried more money than any of the other starters, though Lord Boanerges was a favorite so far as odds were concerned.

The handicap was a very open race. Graziallo, Rose of Dawn, Slickaway, The Clown, Campaigner, and Lord Boanerges were the medium of plunges, and it is probable that the race was the best betting affair at the meeting. There was some delay at the post, but the start was a good one. Tickle showed in front at the start, but she was quickly outrun by Graziallo, Lord Boanerges and Slickaway. At the far turn Graziallo had increased his lead to two lengths, with Boanerges running second and Slickaway third, while Rose of Dawn was well up. Turning for home, Graziallo still led and was going easily, but hearing the field coming behind him, hung out his usual sign of cowardice and retired, while Lord Boanerges came along in a game manner. A sixteenth from home it looked as if he would win, but Rose of Dawn closed with a rush and passed Boanerges a few strides from the wire, winning by a scant length. Slickaway held third position.

The cup race was an easy victory for Billie Hibbs, getting the best of a poor start.

Only three went to the post in the Spring Hunters' Steeplechase. These were Dion Kerr's half-breed Essex, ridden by Mr. Taylor of Baltimore, J. W. Colt's Lysistrata, with Jay O'Brien up, and Guardian, Mr. Levring's jumper, ridden by Mr. Harrison of Virginia. Essex was played heavily at 1 to 2, while the others had scattering support. Guardian led for a half. Then Mr. Taylor let Essex go to the front. Lysistarta stumbled badly at the fifth fence and lost a lot of ground, but on the last round Eeeex and Lysistarta ran like a team to the last jump, where Mr. Taylor took a two-lengths' lead. Lysistarta again making a bad landing. Taylor made a fine finish, winning Wonderful Work Being Done in the Physical and Moral Development of the Boys in the Schools of the City by Organized Athletics.

Privileges of Competition Only Allowed Scholars Who Rank High in Their Classes and Who Deport Themselves Well at All Times.

THE greatest athletic organization in the world is unquestionably the Public Schools Athletic League. It is greatest in size, greatest in conception, and greatest in beneficent influence. In many of its aspects it is remarkable; in a few phenomenal. Not even those who conceived it, in a moment of inspiration, dreamed of the marvelous growth that has marked its brief career.

Originated but three years ago, it has developed in that short time until it embraces within the schools of New York over 150,000 competitive members, until it holds upward of 700 distinct competitions in the course of a year, and has as many as 2,000 contestants in a single meeting. Important as it is as a developer of athletics among boys, it is of especial consequence in its moral influence. So striking has been its success that it has imitators already organized in various cities throughout the country—imitators, who, benefiting by its experience in the new field, have met with similar success in the brief time which they have operated. The day will come when the appreciative observer of social influences will recognize the benefits of the Public Schools Athletic League to society in general, and where to-day it is considered mainly in its athletic aspect, it will be regarded as a potent moral force.

Training the Rising Generation.

This is not the view of a mere athletic enthusiast, but the sober judgment of a student of municipal problems. Real reforms that are to be worked in the body politic must arise from the younger growing generation. The proper training of the school boy is essential to solution of future pregnant problems that will face the nation in times to come. An influence that works at once for the education and the physical development of the young is necessarily important. When moral training—not didactic theory, but practical demonstration—is added to these two potential forces, the benefits cannot fail to be tremendous.

This is what the Public Schools Athletic League is striving for—though I confess it was not this that occasioned its organization. The problem then was physical. A brief experience revealed its moral and educational potency. The movement unquestionably had its origin in a conference held in my office with Dr. Luther Halsey Gulick, who had accepted the direction of the physical education of the schoolboy of New York. Others were quickly interested in the plans outlined, but no one of those instrumental in the formation of the league realized its tremendous possibilities until the first real big meeting was organized. Then the phenomenal size of the movement was revealed for the first time, and gradual experience has developed the other characteristics.

Don't Seek to Make Champions.

The Public Schools Athletic League has not sought to develop athletic champions. The gradual development of skill in any one athletic exercise has not been the real object. It has sought rather to upbuild the physical well being of the mass of schoolboys than to increase the prowess of the individual. To this end it has held competitions merely as an encouragement to exercise. It has tried to make the single performer subservient to the team excellence and the team development incidental to the general advance of the whole student body. It has been found the general physical condition of the schoolboy of New York has improved tremendously through its efforts, until to-day there is no schoolboy in the country of so high a physical type. It has emphasized the necessity of the boys reaching a moderate grade of development rather than sought the increased skill of the natural athlete.

Until the realization is brought home by personal observation of conditions no one can appreciate the handicap under which the city boy labors as compared to his country brother by reason of the crowding of the city population. The streets of New York afford no opportunity for athletic exercise. The capacity for mischief in the average boy is tremendous. Unless some outlet is found for his superabundant spirits, they will lead him into devious and often demoralizing ways. The lack of opportunity for play is a tremendous natural handicap, and it was to overcome this lack that the league was first conceived. In one block in a crowded district of New York two hundred children were once counted playing about in the streets dodging congested traffic and indulging in all manner of mischievous pranks, simply because the natural childish propensities had no legitimate opportunity for development.

Simply Organizing Play.

We have simply sought to organize this tendency to play and by organization to control it for the physical betterment of the child. This done, the moral influence grew apace, and to-day there is no better behaved and healthy child than is found in the schools throughout the city.

The physical benefit has been so manifest that there is no need to emphasize it, and the moral improvement, which has been marked and illustrated in many ways, has yet to show full fruition in the years to come, when its real benefits have had an opportunity to be demonstrated.

PHYSICAL DEVELOPMENT REQUIRES BIG EQUIPMENT.

THERE is nothing like outdoor exercise to develop the physical well-being. The well-conditioned body means the quick, alert mind. The well-developed body and the keen mind mean healthy morals. The three are linked inseparably. The importance of providing outdoor exercise for the young is therefore paramount from a purely practical as well as an academic standpoint. The Public Schools Athletic League seeks to provide outdoor exercise. It has organized baseball so that in a championship series over 150 teams representing the various schools have taken part in competition for a trophy. It has held track games and it has extended its activity to other fields. Basket ball, tennis, shooting, and recently swimming and rowing have been added to the competitions. Interclass, interschool, intersectional, interborough, and finally intercity contests have been held, all seeking to afford incentive to the boys, while all the while standard competitions for a representative trophy have been offered to encourage the boy of moderate ability. All these have aroused the interest of the youngster who is keen to take part.

As a means of improving the scholarship of the boys, it has been determined that no boy of low standing in his classes can participate, and the rule has proved a wonderful stimulus to work in the class rooms. So, also, any boy whose deportment in his classes has been bad is prevented from taking part, and the result has improved the discipline. Then he has been compelled to live up to the rules of sport and disqualified for breaches of sportmanship, learning fair play and honesty in the school of experience. The three regulations, stringently inforced, have brought about a complete metamorphosis of the mischievous, inattentive youngster, and has created a new interest in school work. Men like Superintendent Maxwell of the city schools, who at first were not impressed with the possibilities of the league, are now its most enthusiastic advocates, and none who have had an opportunity to observe it has withheld appreciation.

Pressing Need of Playgrounds.

The activity of the league has, however, emphasized its lack of facilities. The absence of suitable grounds on which to conduct its games has been a tremendous handicap. There are in the City of New York to-day some twelve or fourteen playgrounds where there should be fifty. There are from six to eight public baths where there should be a hundred. Were the facilities available there would be weekly trips to the outlying districts and games every Saturday under the direction of willing teachers. The result would soon be evident in the firm step, the erect carriage, and elastic stride that comes from outdoor life. I do not advocate competitions merely, but the opportunity of organized play. Above all I do not believe in schoolboy training. Dieting and overwork along restricted lines have no part in the schoolboy life. When he reaches the high school, considerations of that nature may be given weight, but in the average boy it is harmful. The natural boy playing, runs hard in games of tag, or similar sports, and is busy from early till late. As long as this spirit of hard play is maintained, without restrictions to too many competitions and too much regularity, the result must be beneficial. This is the ideal that requires playgrounds for its realization and the sooner the city authorities appreciate the importance of making provision for them the sooner will the full benefits of the public school movement be realized.

Organize Movement for Parks.

Gradually the city officials are being brought to see the advantages of making adequate provision for the children. Mayor McClellan and Controller Metz are ardent advocates of more playgrounds. The Controller has been especially interested in the public schools movement, and has personally presented one field to the schools for the purpose. He has urged a big widespread movement for the creation of more fields of play, and has declared that the reason more was not given was that the demand had not been made for them. The movement is of such character that no public official or politician can afford to ignore its demands. The child is too close to the parent not to be a potential factor in any political campaign, and provisions for its benefit must meet with the approval of men who depend on the voter for their positions and influence.

Take the example of London in the matter of public baths alone. There are to-day over a hundred public baths in the City of London that are free. The fact shows the woeful lack of attention that has been given the consideration of public health in this city.

GRADUAL EXTENSION OF THE ATHLETIC MOVEMENT.

THEN, three years ago, in order to crystallize this movement for the organization of a Public Schools Athletic League, a big indoor meet was planned to be held in Madison Square Garden, there were hopes entertained that there would be three or four hundred of the schoolboys to contest. When on the day of the meet 1,018 individuals appeared to compete there was not one of those who started this great big movement that could realize the tremendous import of the gathering. It was the biggest athletic meeting that had ever been held up to this time, and the enthusiasm with which it was received was astounding to even those confirmed believers in athletics who thought the youngsters would take hold of the movement eagerly. When I declare that during the past Winter a meeting was held in Madison Square Garden in which novices alone competed—boys who had never won a prize of any character in competition of any kind—and that there were then over 1,500 contestants, the growth and magnitude of the whole movement can be in a measure appreciated.

When the movement started had there been given the schoolboys in New York a series of athletic feats to perform such as they now perform in order to win what is called the athletic badge there would not have been a score that could have performed them. To-day there are in the schools upward of 2,000 boys that have won this badge, which indicates a certain measure of proficiency in certain events. All this indicates the growth of the purely athletic side of the competitions.

Development of Uniform Excellence.

It is this athletic badge competition that is the real mover of the League. The controllers of the movement do not wish to develop champions or produce exceptional skill. No effort at all is made in this direction. There is no specific training that will bring out the strength and correct the poor form of one or another athlete and improve his performance such as characterizes most athletic training. The effort is to bring the physical standard of the whole school body up to a higher plane.

Track athletics first occupied the attention of the League to the exclusion of other sports. There were running contests—short distances for the little fellows; longer races for the older. There were relays—which were favored because they developed the idea of team co-operation rather than individual effort. There were jumps and weight throwing and field contests. All these things were the natural bent of the youngster.

Baseball naturally was the next sport to claim attention. It was soon possible to organize an interscholastic championship. In the latest of these over a hundred teams competed, and it was found that in both baseball and track athletics it was necessary to divide the city up into districts and have the boys compete and win in their districts, and then send their representatives to meet the winning representatives of other districts. These district contests resulted in borough championships, and borough championships in final contests for the championship of the city.

It was Public School No. 10 of Brooklyn that finally won this baseball championship, while track honors were more divided, the all-around championship indoors going to Public School No. 6, Manhattan, in the elementary schools, and outdoors to Public School No. 77, Manhattan. The all-around championship for the high schools went to De Witt Clinton School.

Following this, basket ball championships were organized, and these were finally won after interesting competitions by Public Schools Nos. 188 and 109, Manhattan, in the elementary schools in contests decided only last week. Then shooting was added, sub-target guns being presented to the various schools, who competed both in indoor tournaments and outdoor. De Witt Clinton won the outdoor trophy at Creedmoor, and the Curtiss High School the indoor. Recently cross-country running was taken up, ad the High School of Commerce won this trophy for the championship. Lastly the boys have begun swimming, and in a recent championship held in February the High School boys decided various championship events. Last week the elementary schools began racing in the public baths, and next year a championship will be contested to encourage these youngsters to greater effort. So from time to time other branchos of athletics will be introduced, and in all the boys will be taught clean, wholesome sport first and proficiency later, deriving all the benefits physically and morally that the League affords.

Teaching the Youngster Loyalty, Honesty and Manliness by Stringent Regulations That Prevent Malpractices and Punish Them Severely.

The Object of Athletic Government, Generally Misunderstood by Even Participants in Games, Made Clear to the Future Champions.

I KNOW of no better illustration of the moral training undertaken by the Public Schools Athletic League than afforded by a personal experience with a well-known New York teacher, who is an enthusiastic athletic supporter and interested in one particular school in this city. I had occasion, as referee, to disqualify three different boys in an athletic meet for different offenses against the athletic rules. He was indignant at the discrimination against his protégés, and lodged a vigorous protest against it. When the explanation of the rulings was made to him, he went away, to return a little later and apologise for his heat and declare: "I did not appreciate what it was you were trying to do here. I only saw the robbing of my boys of a victory which they deeply desired. I did not realize that in their overanxiety to win it they might break the law. You are teaching them honesty and fair dealing and I am with you heart and soul now that I understand it, even though it hurts."

That is characteristic of the attitude of all those who see rulings that affect their personal interests and do not appreciate the reason. Athletic law is made as other laws are for the protection of the interests of the mass. They must be stringently enforced without fear or favor in order to prevent some thoughtless, overanxious competitor from taking an unfair advantage that is an injustice to every other contestant against him. The abuses in athletics that have been so much talked of are not the outgrowth of viciousness or natural dishonesty. They are the result of ignorance, just as are most breaches of the legal statutes; the result of lack of training, lack of appreciation of right and wrong.

Conducting Moral Campaign.

The Public Schools Athletic League is conducting a great moral campaign for the education of the boy. The athlete of to-day had no such opportunity to learn fair dealing in a school of experience when he was yet a youngster. He had no one to point out the pitfalls that might beset his path. He was not taught to avoid those things that under amateur law would professionalize him, and was not told that the evil in the practices was in their deceit and false pretense. He was not told that to compete when ineligible was to rob a legitimate competitor of his opportunity to win the trophy which each desired equally. He was not warned that to cut a corner or to elbow a competitor was an unfair advantage to take that he would resent in another. The smartness of his trick was applauded rather than condemned and dishonesty encouraged rather than discountenanced.

To revert to the instance of the disqualifications cited above. The first was that of a team of relay runners, because one of the boys of the team started away before the boy who was to "touch him off," according to the rules, had finished his part of the run. To have allowed him to run and win would have been unfair to every one of those teams that observed the rules. That youngster was not malicious in his breach, but was overanxious, yet he learned by bitter experience to consider his fellow competitor as he would himself. The second was the case of a boy who cut a corner, gaining an unfair advantage over his fellows. His case was worse, but he learned he could not hold advantages unfairly gained. The third was the case of a team limited to ninety pounds weight, one boy of which was three pounds overweight. He was taught to observe the regulations. All three were not vicious, but the correction of their minor offenses was salutary in its influence.

Teaching Honesty and Loyalty.

The result is the league is developing better men, honest, manly fellows, and loyal. The league teaches loyalty by teaching the boy that he cannot compete for any other team than his school or his church. If he breaks this law, he is immediately disqualified. When these boys go to college later, you will not find them running for athletic clubs in Summer time, grafting board and lodging in the season and learning to loaf. He is taught that he cannot take money for athletic competition and continue as an amateur; that is defrauding others when he does so. That boy, when he goes to college, will not be a Summer ball player, accepting money by all sorts of devices under guise of legitimate expenses, nor will he be an athlete who does the same thing, going from city to city to compete for a virtual wage. He will know what athletic law is and why it must be enforced, and he will compel the elimination of the grafter and the crook from athletics and inaugurate the condition for which this true lover of amateur sport has been consistently striving against such odds for so long.

These things are incidental in life, perhaps, but they are indicative; and character building can be carried on as well in the incidental doings of life as certainly as in the material pursuits, and more effectively many times. This is why the Public Schools Athletic League is the greatest athletic organization in the world more than for any other reason

"MIDDIES" TO ROW AT POUGHKEEPSIE

Secretary Metcalf Grants Permission to Compete in Intercollegiate Regatta.

WILL HAVE STRONG CREW

Have Already Defeated Georgetown and Look for Victories Over Both Yale's and Columbia's Eights.

WASHINGTON, April 13.—The Naval cadets at Annapolis to-day received permission to enter the intercollegiate regatta at Poughkeepsie by Secretary Metcalf of the Navy Department. The middies had made application to the department that those cadets who might be the rowing crew might be allowed to remain behind their classmates when the annual cruises of the cadets started, and rejoin their classes after the completion of the intercollegiate races. As their request was supported by a strong representation of naval officers, and it was found that their absence would not materially interfere with their work during the summer Secretary Metcalf determined to grant the request.

The Naval officers here were much elated by the news of the permission today. Heretofore the cadets have not been allowed to row any races, except in their own waters on the Severn. They have annually turned out crews that have been able to make an excellent showing against the various college crews that went there to row against them. But the colleges would only row these races in the early days of their preparations for the June regattas, and in consequence insisted on short distance races. The middies, therefore, never had a real opportunity to try their strength in a four-mile race.

This year the crew will be able to leave Annapolis and go to the Hudson for training, and will meet in the varsity race the crews representing Cornell, Columbia, Syracuse, Pennsylvania, Wisconsin, and Georgetown. They will row four miles and be able to prove their ability with the strongest college representatives in the country. In the early work that has been done on the Severn the crew has already given excellent promise. It easily defeated Georgetown in the first race of its schedule, and has yet to meet Columbia and Yale.

THE COLLEGE TRACK TITLE.

Cornell and Penn Expected to be the Real Contenders.

The college athletes have begun their outdoor work on the track, and in two weeks will be competing in the first championship of the year—the relays in Philadelphia. These games invariably give a line on the possibilities of the intercollegiate championships in May, and are looked forward to with keener interest on that account. With Michigan coming East there is more uncertainty than last year as to the issue of the championships, and it is not at all unlikely that Michigan will make the winner of the title finally.

At present Cornell and Pennsylvania are looked to for a battle royal for the championships. Both teams are strong and have a decided call over any of the others. Yale has a good team and Harvard has a fair lot of men, but neither of these can possibly win unless Michigan should make such inroads into Pennsylvania and Cornell as to knock them out of the victory. The title will be won and lost in the distance runs where Michigan, Pennsylvania, and Cornell fight it out.

Michigan sends practically nothing else East but distance runners, and Patterson and Garrels. Garrels might be good enough to win both hurdle races, though the low hurdle is unlikely to go to him. Patterson is a fine high jumper. In the distances she has three men, in Ramey in the half, Rowe in the mile, and Dull in the two-mile, any one of whom is good enough to win.

Cornell must score heavily in the distance runs to take the meet. She has no sprinters, and only average hurdlers, and only a few good field men. The field events are more uncertain this year than ever, especially in the weights, where good new men are springing up every day. With Townsend, Colpitts, Lemon, Lewis, Magoffin, Trube, and a few others who may develop for the distance runs, there is where her chances lies.

Pennsylvania is in a better position in that she has men in nearly all the events who are good enough to be reckoned in the hunt. With Cartwell and Whitman topping the sprinters, with Taylor and Bonsack in the quarter, Taylor in the half, Jones and Haskins and Root in the distances, she is in a good position. With McClellan in the hurdles, Moffett, Greene, Swain, and Folwell in the field events, she is well provided.

YALE'S SPRING PRACTICE.

Football Men Begin Two Weeks' Training To-morrow.

Yale will begin to-morrow Spring practice at football. Play will continue for two weeks, during which kicking and passing practice will occupy the men principally. Various plans have been devised to test and encourage skillful handling of the ball, and speed, accuracy and distance will be the determining factor in all the passing contests. Kicking and catching will be gauged similarly—kicking for distance, accuracy, and placing, both in putting, side kicks, drops, and place kicking. All the contests will be scored by a point system and prizes will be awarded to those making the best showing in the entire series. There will also be practice in new formations and trick plays evolved since the close of the past season, some of which are said to promise especial effectiveness in view of the undeveloped character of the new game introduced last season.

Every one who is expected to be a candidate for the team next Fall will be required to participate in the Spring practice. To such as show a considerable degree of proficiency footballs will be presented with which they will be expected to practice during the Summer vacation.

Yale is in an unfortunate position with respect to backfield candidates next Fall on account of the graduation of nearly all of the backfield men as well as the leading substitutes. Morse, Knox, and Veeder, the three regulars, are all to graduate, as well as Bomar, Roome, Lynn, Werneeken, and Dines, leaving "Tad" Jones alone of the backfield candidates who earned their "Y" last Fall. It will be necessary to recruit almost exclusively from the freshmen team that did so well last Fall, as the incoming freshmen will, of course, be ineligible.

Longboat May Run Under Protest.

Chairman John J. Dixon of the National Registration Committee of the Amateur Athletic Union yesterday announced the decision of the committee to permit Thomas Longboat, the Canadian Indian distance runner who was recently reinstated after a month's suspension by the Canadian A. A. U., to run at Boston in the Marathon race to be held under Boston A. A. auspices on April 19, pending investigation of his status. The investigation will be conducted at Boston by Frank J. Tracey of the National Committee, who will report his findings to the National body, which will then act in the premises.

Another communication was yesterday received by Chairman Dixon from Secretary Crowe of the Canadian A. A. U., which still failed to throw light on the peculiar disqualification of March 12 and the reinstatement of April 11, and the A. A. U. investigation was ordered in consequence.

N. Y. A. C. FENCERS HOLD CUP

Swordsmen Repeat Victory of Last Year for Saltus Trophy.

The annual dueling sword team competition for the J. Sanford Saltus Cup was held last night in the rooms of the Fencers' Club, in the Windsor Arcade, and in a short, sharp contest the New York Athletic Club team, winners of the trophy a year ago, again scored a victory. The cup is held through the year only by the winning team, but handsome medals offered by the Amateur Fencers' League of America were awarded to the members of the successful team.

Four clubs were entered for last night's tournament, but the Brooklyn Fencers' Club failed to compete, while the absence of Paul Benzenhelg compelled the New York Turn Verein to put in a substitute. Only a light crowd witnessed the fencing, which, under the rules requiring but a single touch to decide a bout, called for swift action. The members of the competing teams were as follows:

New York Turn Verein—John Allare, George Reimherr, and A. Rieth; Fencers' Club—W. Scott O'Connor, G. H. Breed, and Charles Tatham; New York Athletic Club—C. G. Bothner, W. D. Lyon, and V. Curti.

The judges were Dr. M. J. Echeverria, Dr. J. H. Woodward, and Otto Renne.

The New York Athletic Club trio of swordsmen took the lead at the very start, winning six of nine bouts from the Fencers' Club in the first round, and then by taking seven of nine bouts from the Turn Verein ending the tournament on the second round. The summary:

First Round.—Bothner, N. Y. A. C., beat O'Connor, F. C.; Lyon, N. Y. A. C., beat Breed, F. C.; Curti, N. Y. A. C., beat Tatham, F. C.; O'Connor, F. C., beat Lyon, N. Y. A. C.; Breed, F. C., beat Curi, N. Y. A. C.; Tatham, F. C., and Bothner, N. Y. A. C., tie on double touch; Curti, N. Y. A. C., beat O'Connor, F. C.; Bothner, N. Y. A. C., beat Breed, F. C.; Lyon, N. Y. A. C., beat Tatham, F. C. Score—N. Y. A. C., 6; Fencers' Club, 2.

Second Round.—Allaire, N. Y. T. V., beat Bothner, N. Y. A. C.; Lyon, N. Y. A. C., beat Reimherr, N. Y. T. V.; Curti, N. Y. A. C., beat Rieth, N. Y. T. V.; Bothner, N. Y. A. C., beat Reimherr, N. Y. T. V.; Lyon, N. Y. A. C., beat Rieth, N. Y. T. V.; Allaire, N. Y. T. V., beat Curti, N. Y. A. C.; Bothner, N. Y. A. C., beat Rieth, N. Y. T. V.; Lyon, N. Y. A. C., beat Allaire, N. Y. T. V.; Curti, N. Y. A. C., beat Reimherr, N. Y. T. V. Score—N. Y. A. C., 7; N. Y. T. V., 2

Total score—New York Athletic Club won 13 bouts; Fencers' Club won 2 bouts; New York Turn Verein won 2 bouts.

CYCLING FOR CHAMPIONSHIP.

Eiffler Wins State Honors in Annual Home Trainer Meet.

A large crowd of cycling enthusiasts, including many women, attended the fourth annual home trainer meet of the Tiger Wheelmen of New York at Turn Halle, 305 West Fifty-fourth Street, last night. Five events were decided.

Considerable enthusiasm marked the one-mile race for the amateur championship of the States of New York and New Jersey, under N. C. A. rules. The clubs that competed were the Century Road Club Association of New York, the Tiger Wheelmen of New York, the Century Road Club of America, and the National Turn Verein Wheelmen of Newark. Three members were to represent each team, but at the last moment Fred E. Mommer of the Century Road Club of America became indisposed and would not ride. Consequently Frank Eiffler had to go it alone in his heat. In the opening heat C. C. Tassmaro, Century Road Club of America, fell, and his opponent, Charles Milkowalt of the Tiger Wheelmen had the race to himself, covering the distance in the slow time of 1:42.

J. H. Haigin, holder of several records in long-distance riding, and Floyd Krebs, both of Newark, who won the six-day bicycle race at Madison Square Garden in 1902 with the late George Leander, met in the one-mile race for the professional championship of Newark. Krebs took the first heat in 1:19, and the second and the race in 1:39.

Charles Shlee of the National Turn Verein Wheelmen of Newark and Urban M. Donald of the Tiger Wheelman, with a flying start, figured in a stirring exhibition. McDonald looked like a winner at the outset, forging ahead about an eighth of a mile. In the second lap Shlee went to the fore and remained there until the end, taking the initial heat in 0:33. The second and final heat was also won by Shlee, beating McDonald by a close margin in 0:35. The summaries:

One-Mile Race for Amateur Championship of the States of New York and New Jersey.—Five Heats—Won by J. M. Eiffler, Century Road Club Association, New York. (time 1:23;) J. Magin, National Turn Verein Wheelmen, Newark, second, (time 1:29 3-5;) Frank Eiffler, Century Road Club Association, New York, third, (time 1:33.)

One-Mile Match Race for the Professional Championship of Newark between J. T. Haigin and Floyd Krebs, best two in three heats. —Won by Krebs. Time, final heat, 1:39.

Half-Mile Exhibition for World's Record, flying start, by Alfred Judge, Tiger Wheelmen. Time—0:37 2-5.

Half-Mile Match Race, flying start, between Charles Shlee, National Turn Verein Wheelmen, Newark, and Urban McDonald, Tiger Wheelmen, New York, best two in three heats.—Won by Shlee. Time, final heat—0:35.

Quarter-Mile Exhibition against time, with flying start, by Alfred Judge, Tiger Wheelmen. Time—0:17.

GIRLS AT BASKET BALL.

Normal College Wins Close Game with West End Team.

Normal College defeated the West End five at basket ball yesterday afternoon in an exciting game played on the Normal court, Sixty-eighth Street and Park Avenue. Both teams were evenly matched and the contest was close. The score at the end of the second half stood a tie at eight points, and the referee ordered an extra period. After several minutes of close playing, during which the excitement was pronounced, as first one team and then the other would carry the ball down the field, Miss Amy Lee succeeded in securing a basket on a brilliant shot from the midfield, thus winning the game for Normal. Miss Evelyn Reilly played exceptionally well for West End, and aided materially in keeping down Normal's score. The line-up follows:

Normal, 10.	Position.	West End, 8.
Miss E. Frederick	Forward	Miss Anne Hoag
Miss Mary Brady	Forward	Miss Lillie Parker
Miss Ethel Lane	Centre	Miss Evelyn Reilly
Miss J. Rosenbend	Guard	Miss Grace Kircher
Miss Avis Hotchkiss	Guard	Miss Mabel Garvey

Goals from field—Miss Frederick, (2,) Miss Reilly, (2,) Miss Gervey, (2,) Miss Hotchkiss, Miss Lee. Goals on fouls—Miss Brady, Miss Lane. Referee—Mr. O'Connell, Columbia. Umpire—Miss C. Blauvelt, West End. Time of halves—Fifteen and twenty minutes

CAMERONS TAKE CUP TIE.

"Soccer" League Champions Defeat Brooklyn by Score of 2 to 0.

Playing under somewhat adverse conditions, the Camerons, champions of the New York Amateur Association Football League, survived another round of the league's "cup tie" series by defeating the eleven of the Brooklyn Football Club yesterday by 2 goals to 0 at the Cove, West New Brighton, S. I., and thereby earned the right to meet the Boys' Club team in the deciding game for the cup. The turf was in a soggy condition, which made the footing anything but sure; in addition the sky was cloudy throughout, and frequently the rain fell in torrents. Through it all the two elevens played at top speed, furnishing a remarkably fast exhibition of football, which was particularly free from fouls, considering the circumstances. Line-up:

Tierney	Goal	Ensor
Milne	Right back	Guthrie
H. Owen	Right half back	Clerk
W. Owen	Centre half-back	Hastings
Jeffries	Outside right	Isaac
Watts	Inside right	Lane
Williams	Centre forward	Cameron

Goals—Lane, Hastings. Referee—A. H. Dale. Cameron F. C. Linesmen—D. McAusland, Brooklyn, and E. Shaw, Cameron. Time of game—Forty-five-minute halves.

MILITARY SHOW IN TWELFTH'S ARMORY

Sheppard Wins 600-Yard Invitation Race from Charles Bacon and B. Freeman.

NOVEL EVENTS IN GAMES

Regiment Holds Special Review—Calisthenics, Gymnastic and Keen Competitive Track Contests.

To martial music, competitive drills, a review, and athletic events made up a miniature Military Show last night in the armory of the Twelfth Regiment, Sixty-first Street and Columbus Avenue. The occasion was the annual reception of Company C and the programme hristled with features. In the athletic events Melvin W. Sheppard distinguished himself by winning the 600-yard invitation race. On the stretch Sheppard had it nip and tuck with Charles Bacon. The latter had spurted to a stride ahead of Sheppard when he stumbled and fell. He rolled clear of the track and Sheppard breasted the tape with Freeman, the fleet runner of the First Regiment of the N. G. N. J. second. Bacon got up quickly and got third place.

The two-mile relay race brought out some good racing by the regimental companies represented. After the first mile mark had been passed Company C's second team runners began to forge to the front. They were repeatedly challenged by the runners of Company G, but the latter were never successful in quite making the pace and the lead. They finished in the foregoing order, with Company L a close third.

The midget drum corps of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, composed of little lads not a yard high, opened the military manoeuvres. They were reviewed by Col. George R. Dyer. He also commanded the general review of separate companies of every regiment in th First and Second Bridgades of the N. G. N. Y., and the special review of a detachment of the Twelfth Regiment. The main review was led by the music of the band of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum, whose cadets also went through the evolutions of an exhibition drill.

Soldiers and Sailors of the United States Army and Navy displayed the athletic side of warfare. They scaled walls, built pyramids, and executed calisthenic exercises under arms.

At the close a detachment of soldiers made up as a Chinese Cadet Corps executed burlesque manoeuvres of a novel and somewhat military character. The summary of the athletic events:

440-Yard Run, Novice.—Won by G. Walsch, Company C; J. F. Sulzer, Company D, second; W. Fisher, Company C, third. Time—0:59.

600-Yard Invitation Race, Closed to Military Athletic League.—Won by M. W. Sheppard, Twenty-second Regiment; B. Freeman, First Regiment of New Jersey, second; Charles Bacon, Twenty-third Regiment, third. Time—1:23.

220-Yard Run Handicap.—Won by G. McDonough, Company C, (8 yards;) W. Munson, Company C, (11 yards,) second; William M. Freund, Company E, (7 yards,) third. Time—0:24 4-5.

Three-Legged Race, Handicap.—Won by H. Correll and W. Munson, Company L, (8 yards;) C. McIntyre and J. Kautzman, Company C, (12 yards,) second. A. Walsh and G. Rafter, Company C, (3 yards,) third. Time—0:24 2-5.

Two-Mile Relay Race, Handicap.—Won by Company C second team, Callan, Rafter, Kautzman, and A. Walsh, (78 yards;) Company G team, Leon Benaway, James Gahan, P. Holler, and J. Beulein, (85 yards,) second Company L team, Zenner, Schurr, Barry, and Moran, (112 yards,) third. Time—9:45.

SCHOOLBOY ATHLETIC MEET.

Annual Games of P. S. 24 Attract Big Field of Competitors.

Nearly 500 young athletes took part last night in the annual indoor athletic games of Public School No. 24, held at the Eighth Regiment Armory, Ninety-fourth Street and Park Avenue. An attractive programme of sixteen events was provided, and about 3,000 relatives and friends of the contestants enjoyed a good night's sport. Enthusiasm ran high, and the rivalry between the different sections of the school brought out keen competition and kept the spectators thoroughly interested in each event.

As additional attractions, the Hebrew Guardian Sheltering Band of fifty pieces provided an instrumental concert and the glee club from the school sang a number of popular selections. The long delay in getting the events started made these features doubly welcome to both contestants and spectators, as it was nearly 9 o'clock before the first heat was started.

A deal of confusion was caused in the fifty-yard dash, owing to the fact that the boys were sent away from scratch instead of handicap. The committee decided that the heats should stand, and the boys were allowed to compete in the final instead of running over again. In the seventy-five-yard dash, handicap, the contestants in the first three heats insisted upon running the entire cap, which made the distance 275 yards instead of 75. The boys were good naturedly guyed, but took their mistakes in excellent part.

The best-contested event on the programme was the half-mile relay for elementary schools, in which the struggle between 24 and 18 Manhattan was very close throughout. No. 24 led for the first two laps, when 18 took up the running, but could not maintain the lead, and the fourth relay of 24 won by a scant two yards. Summaries:

60-Yard Dash, Handicap.—First Heat—Won by Brody, 8 A. 5, (scratch;) Wolfson, 8 A. 5, (3 yards,) second; Lynch, 7 B. 6, (3 yards,) third. Time—0:07 2-5. Second Heat—Won by Freund, 8 B. 2, (4 yards;) N. Freedman, 8 A. 2, (4 yards,) second; Haas, 8 B. 2, (3 yards,) third. Time—0:08.

Schmulewitz Protest Dismissed.

The charges against Nathan Schmulewitz, a member of the basketball team which won the championship in the junior tournament of the Public Schools Athletic League, were disproved by an investigation by the League authorities and Schmulewitz exonerated. The charges were made during the tournament for the championship of Manhatten Borough by Public School No. 79, and alleged that Schmulewitz was not a scholar at School No. 109. The roll book and monthly report cards were offered in refutation, and established the fact of his attendance, and the case was dismissed.

Superintendent Farrell of the upper districts of the Public Schools declared that Schmulewitz is at present a scholar of Public School No. 109, in Class 8C, receiving as his report for the month of March: A in effort, B in proficiency, and A in deportment.

Atlas A. C. Acquires Clubhouse.

The Atlas Athletic Club has leased a clubhouse adjoining Huber's Casino and will use the track and field at Macomb's Dam Park for athletic training. The club has been handicapped hitherto by lack of facilities, and expects its acquisition to materially aid its growth. In spite of disadvantages in the past, the club has steadily increased its membership, and has now enrolled an active list that numbers nearly three hundred. The club is to be incorporated

It is planned to branch out in future into other lines of sport and enter in the various competitions under A. A. U. and Young Men's Hebrew Association auspices.

Flounders can be caught in the Shrewsbury River, Jamaica Bay, Prince's Bay, South Beach, City Island, Long Beach, and Gravesand Bay. They are expected any day from Cliffwood to Amboy in Raritan Bay. Capt. Travs Bloodgood and Walter Ryerson of Morgan's Station expect to have their motor boats ready in another week to take parties out fishing.

The members of the Seaside Fishing Club will open their house at the Highlands about May 1. The portion of the house that has been set aside for rent will be ready about the last of June. The large sloop belonging to the club will be put in shape this Summer, as the members expect to make early starts to the fishing grounds.

All the nets along the Jersey shore are in working order. Striped bass from a half pound to thirty pounds are being caught. On the incoming tide yesterday a number of four or five inch dead bass were picked up in the lower bay. Shad are also being caught in the drift, gill, seine, and pound nets in Sandy Hook and Raritan bays.

The trout season, which will continue until Aug. 30, is furnishing excellent sport for the anglers on Long Island. The change in the law gives many the benefit of whipping the streams two weeks' advantage over the other parts of New York State.

The swift running brooks and creeks of Canadensis, Penn., according to the predictions of those conversant with the habits of the trout, promise this year to fulfill the prophecy of a record-breaking catch, and at Spruce Cabin rod, reel, line, hook, and fly is the all-absorbing topic of gossip. It is recalled that the height of water in the Fall and early Winter prevented the brooks from freezing solid to the bottom and that the fish consequently enjoyed immunity from extinction from the elements and the animals which prey upon them.

The stocking of the streams with trout has been attended with much success in New York and New Jersey. During the last two years thousands of them have been distributed, and the following streams received an allowance: Pequannock River, Black Brook, Wallkill, Fmullinskill, West Brook, Post Brook, Burnt Meadow Brook, High Mountain Brook, Pine Brook, Hockhockson, Eatontown Brook, Mage's Brook, Davis Spring Brook, Hunter's Brook, Tanner's Brook, Picatinny Brook, Spring Garden Brook, Pohatcong Brook, Musconetcong Brook, Hohokus River, Saddle River, Sprout Brook, Passcack River, Pearl River, Black Spring Brook, Spring Brook, Shark River, Sarah Green Brook, L. I. Y. Brook, Mill Brook, Ventors Brook, Hog Brook, Whitehead Brook, Trout Brook, Big Lebanon Brook, Little Lebanon Brook, Cheese Man's Brook, Big Buck Horn, Beavor Brook, Little Buck Horn, Pequest Brook, Waldon Brook, Harper's Brook, Indis Brook, Bonnet Brook, Peapack Brook, West Creek Brook, Bamber Brook, Musseloughy Mountain Brook, Pluckemin Brook, Davenport Brook, Chimney Rock Brook, Bum Valley Brook, Sweet Hollow Brook, Commissionary Brook and tributaries, Incquacomissicong, Weasahawka, Gravel Creek, Gold Brook, South Branch of the Rockaway, Mill Brook, North Branch of the Rockaway, Fredon Brook, Black Brook, Johneonburg Brook, Slabtown Brook, Brend's Brook, Solomon's Brook, Baker Brook, Compton Brook, Stephen's Brook, Stoney Brook, Midvale Valley Brook Le Barr Brook, Asylum Brook, Spear Brook, Squaw Brook, Preakness Brook, Haycock Brook, Rhinehard Brook, Cold Spring Brook, and Turkey Brook.

Alex Devine will remove his motor boat from the Jersey shore to Jamaica Bay for the Summer, and is talking of organizing a fishing club for the season.

Fish Commissioner Meehan of Pennsylvania has sent for distribution in the waters adjacent to Spruce Cabin a large quantity of healthy fry, so that there is no danger of depletion of stock.

Although the open time for sea salmon fishing on the Penobscot began last Monday, the river has been frozen during the past week and the season will not begin before the latter end of the month. The best fish may be looked for in May or early in June.

Among the best fishing centres on Long Island are Nissequagua River, Mill Pond, Smithtown, Glen Cove, Wading River, Brown's River, Trout Pond, Southampton, and Carmen's River.

Samuel Brill put a twelve horse power machine in his fishing boat this year and expects to do some bluefishing off the Jersey coast.

Much has been done in the vicinity of Canadensis, Penn., to render more attractive the pleasure to be derived from an outing away from the hum of city toil and grind, and the reports from the hotel centres indicate the advent of hosts of sportsmen.

YACHT CUP RACES; DATES ARE FIXED

International Contests at Jamestown for King's Cup, Roosevelt and Lipton Trophies.

TWO FULL WEEKS OF RACING

Keen Interest in the Events as Indicative of English Chances in Next America's Cup Race.

The dates for the big yacht racing fixtures to be held in conjunction with the Jamestown Exposition have been fixed by the Regatta Committee of the exposition, and were announced yesterday. The races for the big cups are all to be decided by a series of three days' racing, the winner to be determined by point scores and the cups going to the yachts making the best showing in the series. Three of the important events are fixed, but as yet no dates have been set for the schooner cup, which was announced to be offered by Kaiser Wilhelm.

The Roosevelt Cup, for boats of the twenty-seven-foot class, will be contested for first on Wednesday, Sept. 11. One day will intervene and the second race be held on Friday the 13th. The third and deciding race will be held on Monday the 16th. The same days are fixed for the International race for the cup given by King Edward, which is offered for boats of the twenty-two-foot class. The last three days of the regatta series, Sept. 19, 20, and 21, are fixed for the race for the Lipton Cup, which is given for the large classes of sloops of over 48 feet measurement. The remaining races to be given occupy the intervening days of the two weeks' racing demand.

The twenty-two-footers that will race for the King Edward Cup ought to evoke widespread interest. Besides the lot of boats that raced last year on Gravesend Bay in the class there will be two new boats in the class built there. On Long Island Sound there are two new twenty-twos and there are five new boats built, on Massachusetts Bay in addition to Orestee, last year's champion. Canada is building one boat especially for the race, and Baltimore and New Orleans syndicates are each building a boat.

The twenty-seven footers' race for the Roosevelt Cup also constitute a popular class. All the New York thirtles classify for it, and the three new boats that afforded such good racing on Gravesend Bay last year. Peculiar interest will attach to the race by the presence of the Canada Cup boats now building. Nat Herreshoff and William Gardner have each designed boats to defend the cup on behalf of the United States, and the three crack designers of England have boats building for the Canadian challenging club. One is by William Fife, one by Alfred Payne, and one by Arthur Payne. These boats are more important than would appear on the surface for the reason that the Canada Cup races will mark the first meeting of the big American and English designers under the new universal rule of measurement, which will undoubtedly govern the next America's Cup contest, while two of the Englishmen—Fife and Mylne—are said to have prepared America's Cup designs for Sir Thomas Lipton.

The race for the big sloops will be in effect a repetition of the race for the Astor Cup, and will be of interest in that it will bring together the new Herreshoff racers built for the fifty-seven-foot class and the Effort, winner of the King's Cup last year, as well as all the big sloops in commission.

LARCHMONT'S RACE WEEK.

Plans for the Big Annual Yachting Fixture Announced.

Larchmont plans for race week were announced yesterday by Chairman Tower and include the usual six days of racing and the ladies' day event. The series racee are offered for 90-foot schooners, 68 and 57 foot sloops, the New York thirty footers, the 27, 22, 18, and 15 foot classes, the raceabouts, Larchmont one-design boats, and the two divisions of the handicap class. Open regattas for all classes will be held on the opening and closing days, July 20 and 27, and for Wednesday, July 24. The Spring and Fall fixtures of the club are fixed for June 15 and September 2, while the annual regatta, including the race for the Colt Cup, will be held July 4. The special Larchmont Cup race for schooners of all classes will be held on September 14, besides races for the 68 and 57 foot sloops, and for the Larchmont one-design class.

For the first time in some seasons a motor boat regatta will be given by the club—on Saturday, Aug. 31, in which all classes of motor boats will be provided for.

New Yacht Club on the Hudson.

Residents of Englewood, Leonia, Palisade and Edgewater have organized a new yacht club, the Edgewater, with a membership of nearly 100 yachtsmen. The following officers have been elected: Commodore W. H. Hinners, rear commodore, W. H. Elchs, vice commodore, A. E. Newman; secretary and treasurer, W. C. Helm; fleet captain, C. Mack; measurer, John Hinners. A clubhouse will be immediately erected on the New Jersey shore, just north of the West 130th Street Ferry slip.

EIGHTEEN WANT KAISER'S CUP

Expected That Sonderklasse Trials Will Have Big Entry.

There will be about eighteen contestants entered in the American trial races at Marblehead to choose the trio of sonderklasse boats that are to go to Kiel to race against the German trio for the Kaiser's Cup, and subsequently to race at San Sebastian against Spain. Six new boats have been built in the class to contest for the honor of racing abroad. Of the seventeen that were entered in last year's trials, it is expected that a dozen will again be competitors in the trials. These are fixed for June 10 and the succeeding days, and will probably be conducted on the same lines as last year, with triangular and windward and leeward races on alternate days and accurate times recorded on every leg and

BIG AUTO CAMPAIGN FOR FEDERAL LAW

President Hotchkiss Outlines Policy for Strong State Representation.

NEW ASSOCIATIONS FORMED

Tendency Increasing Throughout the Country to Extend More Liberal Touring Privileges.

Automobilists are beginning to appreciate the real reason for the active campaign that has recently been started by the American Automobile Association under its new officers for the organization of new State associations. It is principally for the purpose of securing a strong backing of representative motorists throughout the country who will exert a National influence at the proper time in favor of the Federal Automobile act, introduced into the last session of Congress, in addition to agitating the movement through the various State Legislatures for uniformity in State automobile laws on the main points of registration and identification of motor cars and penalties for violations of the law.

President William H. Hotchkiss, who attended the annual meeting of the Pennsylvania Motor Federation in Pittsburg last week, and came away with its application for admission to the National body, spent two or three days in New York on his way to his home in Buffalo, and spoke freely of what he hoped to see the American Automobile Association become before the close of the present year.

"If the association is to exert any influence as a National body," he said, "it must have the States of the country affiliated with it. When we go before Congress at the next session, as we hope to do, to advocate the passage of the new Federal Motor act, we would look ridiculous if we could only show a State membership of half a dozen States. At the first of the year we had five States. Two came in last month—Connecticut and Minnesota. Pennsylvania and Maryland have already applied and will be elected at the meeting of the Executive Board this month.

"Indiana, Missouri, Wisconsin, and Michigan are preparing to form associations within the next week and Secretary Elliott is now on a Western tour to attend their meetings and explain the purposes of the American Automobile Association. I have also received letters from prominent motorists in South Carolina, Georgia, Iowa, Vermont, Maine, Colorado, and Delaware, saying that they were anxious for State representation on the National board. I do not want to be oversanguine, but I fully expect to see twenty States affiliated with the American Association before 1908. This will give us a splendid working force, and already serious efforts have been started in many States toward the enactment of reasonable laws, particularly in granting tourists the privilege of traveling through the different States without the necessity of obtaining additional registration numbers and paying extra license fees, provided they have complied with such regulations in their home States.

"Legislators realize that automobilists furnish a very comfortable revenue for the State treasury, and where the money so paid is used in the maintenance of the highways, there is little objection. But if these taxes are paid once there is a strong feeling on the part of the motor car owners that they should not be subjected to similar taxation in other States. New York does not exact any fee from the autoist who has conformed to the law in his home State, and, while it is perhaps too much to expect that all States will be so lenient, the tendency toward this end has been shown by the recent enactment of laws offering from ten days to two weeks' privileges, without additional registration. A bill is now before the Pennsylvania Legislature granting ten days' touring privileges for outside autoists. Delaware has done the same thing. Connecticut and Massachusetts are liberal in this respect and some of the Western States, it is interesting to note, are more liberal than many of the Eastern States. New Jersey has undoubtedly the strictest automobile law on the calendar. The amendments to the old law only provide for three days' travel, without conforming in every particular to the State law, and even for these three days a fee of $1 must be paid. With the more liberal laws of the New England States and Pennsylvania. I believe that many New York motorists will give New Jersey a wide berth this year."

Hand in hand with this National and State work for reasonble and uniform laws, the Good Roads Board of the A. A. A. has started a movement for highway improvements throughout the country. Robert P. Hooper, the Chairman, has devised a plan of securing, if possible, one representative from each State for his committee. This State representative will then form his sub-committee, calling upon as many men as necessary in different clubs or localities who are interested in furthering the cause of good roads as his assistants. By this means more energetic work can be planned and the National association will be kept accurately informed regarding the results that are being accomplished in the various States.

Ready to Enter Auto Endurance Run.

There will be no lack of entries for the proposed endurance run this season to be conducted by the Automobile Club of America. Since the announcement was made that the club was arranging such an event, to be held under regulations severe enough to make an all-around practical test of the competing cars, many assurances of immediate entries have been made. R. G. Kelsey, the Brooklyn motorist, who made a mid-Winter run from New York to Chicago and then from New York to Boston in his Matheson car, states that he will participate in the contest. Mr. Kelsey will also be a competitor in the A. A. A. Glidden Cup tour. A second Matheson car will be entered in the Automobile Club of America's contest by the Matheson Company of New York, provided the rules governing are severe enough to thoroughly test out the cars.

Lower Bay Yachtsmen.

R. A. Brown's new 22-footer, building at Bay Shore from Henry J. Gielow's design to race under the Atlantic Yacht Club flag and for the King's Cup at Jamestown, is to be named Ving-et-Trois.

Two more Lipton Cup boats have been ordered from Gielow for members of the Crescent Athletic Club. They will be different in design from the two already under way for C. Lemcke of the Atlantic Yacht Club and D. D. Allerton of the New York Canoe Club.

D. R. Floyd of the Newark Bay and Brooklyn Yacht Club is the first of the yachtsmen to get his boat overboard for the season. He will enter her—the yawl Lila—in the race to Bermuda again.

S. Wicks of the Atlantic Yacht Club has sold his catboat Hester.

W. H. Childs, Commodore of the Bensonhurst Yacht Club, is understood to be building three boats—one for the Lipton Cup contest, one for the King's Cup contest, and one for the Sonderklasse trials—for the privilege of representing America in the race with Germany at Kiel. He is credited with owning the three boats building from designs by Charles D. Mower.

The Gravesend Bay Yacht Racing Association, at the meeting Friday night, adopted new racing rules, practically uniform with the changed code of the Long Island Sound Association.

Baseball Contract and Releases.

President Harry C. Pulliam of the National League announced the following contract and releases yesterday: Contract—With St. Louis, John Baxter. Releases—By Cincinnati to Waterbury Athletic Association, William Poll; by Pittsburg to Des Moines, W. F. Rogers; by Pittsburg to McKeesport, Penn., Fred Miller.

Catcher Erwin Leaves Detroits.

DETROIT, Mich., April 13.—Secretary Navin of the Detroit American League Baseball Club to-day announced that Catcher Rose Erwin has been released to the St. Paul American Association team, from which he was drafted last Fall.

DOG SHOW FOR LAKEWOOD.

New Association Likely to Hold Exhibition Next Month.

The desire of owners of dogs to get a chance of exhibiting without sending their dogs a few hundred miles or waiting till the Ladies' Kennel Association finally decides upon where to hold the show at the end of May is likely to be catered to, as the great probability is that a show will be held at Lakewood in the first week in May. Lakewood is an exceptional situation for a dog show at the beginning of May, and the exhibition will be an added attraction to the horse show. The premium list will be specially arranged for the best display of the various breeds which are favorites with society exhibitors, with ample provision for the dogs which are recognized as the best supportere of dog shows.

This is the one show which will break the monotony for exhibitors of the main centres of New York and Philadelphia from the middle of February until the end of May, when four shows are scheduled together. The tentative arrangement is that the dog show be held in connection with and on the last day of the horse show, and on the same grounds, so that visitors to the one can also see the other.

It is announced that the Ladies' Kennel Association of America will again hold its annual show at Mineola Fair Grounds on May 28 and 29. It was first announced that it was to be held at Claremont, on Riverside Drive, but Mr. Mortimer's official announcement is that the venue will once more be Mineola.

Detroit and Milwaukee shows were in progress last week. To these far distant shows the majority of the handlers made their way, and an excellent turnout of dogs resulted. Viewed through Eastern glasses, some of the decisions of the Western judges seemed peculiar, Norman the Monarch being placed over Mayor of Watford 2d St. Bernards being one sample.

W. E. Mason of England, who has found it so profitable to sell his absolutely best collies to Americans at exorbitant prices, says there is far too much delay in the judging ring, and that there is no likelihood of improving this condition of affairs under present methods, so offers the following idea as a solution. He would have the dogs that are entered in the same series of classes all brought together. That is, all the fox terrier dogs, for instance, and after them all the fox terrier bitches. The judge would then go through the entire dog section at one time, giving each dog a number as he would place him in order of merit. With every dog thus tagged, all the steward or the Secretary would have to do would be to take the puppy class as it appears in the catalogue and put to each catalogue number the order of merit number, the one with the lowest number taking first prize, and so on through the class. The same thing would then be done with the other classes, all this part of the work being simply clerical.

The idea is one of those which are more theoretical than practical. It might do at some shows of about 300 dogs, where the most that would come together to be judged would not exceed twenty dogs, but at New York they would have to hire a building as large as Madison Square Garden in order to get room for the judging rings. Even if the amount of space could be afforded, it would be found that there was no saving of time, as five classes of twenty dogs each would not take nearly so long to place as one of one hundred dogs. The fewer number of dogs enables the judge to compare them much quicker and also to remember what he has done and is doing.

In addition to fox terriers, in which, according to visiting Englishmen, Americans lead the world, it is now evident that the cocker spaniels are being accorded the position abroad they have long deserved. C. A. Phillips has now two American-bred cockers which are being extensively advertised in the English kennel press as dogs to improve the cockers of that country.

The next meeting of the American Kennel Club is announced to be held on May 2, and it promises to be an important event. At the last meeting of the directors, August Belmont advised his associates to resign in view of the manner of their original election. The official notice of the meeting states that twenty-one of the thirty directors have resigned and the remaining nine are hardly likely to make themselves conspicuous by holding on. There is not likely to be any great change in the roll call when the election is over, for it was not so much the membership of the board as the secret and very peculiar manner in which they were elected to office.

COLUMBIA CREWS RACE.

Second 'Varsity Eight Leads Over Three-Mile-and-a-Half Course.

Columbia's crews had their first race of the season yesterday afternoon, when Coach Rice sent the three 'Varsity eights over a three and a half-mile course on the Harlem, starting at the drawbridge at 215th Street and finishing about opposite 140th Street. The race served to bring out the fact that Rice has been able to develop his crews very much on an even basis, for the finish was close, considering the distance rowed. The second crew came in ahead by about two lengths, but cannot be credited with beating the first, as the latter was started more than that distance behind them, and purposely got this disadvantage because it had the middle course, where the tide was strongest against them. The third crew finished about three lengths to the bad. Rice is an acknowledged believer in the theory that the men should be made to work their hardest, and not content with rowing them in a race over a longer distance than the Blue and White crews have ever rowed at this time of the year, on the return journey he had the first and third crews use up the last half mile in three short sprints. Much surprise was occasioned by the fact that the latter crew was able to hold the first in two of the sprints, and get slightly the better of them in the third.

The crews were somewhat shaken up yesterday, which was primarily due, however, to the absence of two of the men in the first boat. Robinson and J. Mackenzie were put in the first boat, the former in place of Starbuck, who was shifted to the second boat, and Boyle, the Captain, was moved from 3 to 5.

The first freshman crew was boated for the first time in a shell yesterday, and after their practice Rice expressed himself as well satisfied with the way they had handled themselves for the first time out of the barges. They are disappointingly light to him, but they have succeeded in catching the Rice stroke better than some of the 'Varsity men, as they had nothing to unlearn.

During the past week the crews have begun a training table at night at Durando's Hotel, just back of the boathouse. Rice's theory in regard to training has made quite a hit, as he allows the men to drink ale instead of the customary milk, which he absolutely forbids. This was rather amusingly demonstrated at the junior class dinner held during the week, for while the members of the other athletic teams who were present rigidly abstained from any liquid refreshment, the crew men imbibed copious draughts of ale. The coach holds that milk is harmful to men in training because it curdles on the stomach and does not afford the proper basis of nourishment. Besides acting as a sort of tonic, he believes that ale has the effect of increasing the appetite for meats. The crews were made up yesterday as follows:

First 'Varsity—Cerussi, stroke; Helmrich, No. 7; G. Mackenzie, No. 6; Boyle, No. 5; J. Mackenzie, No. 4; Robinson, No. 3; Jordan, No. 2; Braun, bow; Winslow, coxswain.

Second 'Varsity—Mitchell, stroke; Sneviley, No. 7; Gillies, No. 6; S. McLean, No. 5; Cheadle, No. 4; Starbuck, No. 3; Suarez, No. 2; Hnight, bow; Durant, coxswain.

Third 'Varsity—Norris, strike; Spalding, No. 7; H. McLean, No. 6; Ostarhout, No. 5; Robbe, No. 4; Hauser, No. 3; Kendall, No. 2; Taylor, bow; Rockwood, coxswain.

First Freshman—Murphy, stroke; Keator, No. 7; Saunders, No. 6; Renshaw, No. 5; Dellenbaugh, No. 4; Hauser, No. 3; Klepetko, No. 2; Hamann, bow; Bangs, coxswain.

Johns Hopkins Wins Lacrosse Game.

BALTIMORE, April 13.—The Johns Hopkins lacrosse team to-day defeated Harvard by a score of 7 goals to 1. Harvard's single goal was scored by Vance within thirty seconds after play began. The playing of Wendell of Harvard was a feature.

AUTO ROAD RACING GROWING IN FAVOR

Florio Cup Contest in Italy This Month Starts the European Circuit.

EXCEPTIONAL ENTRY LIST

German Emperor's Cup Leads with 94 Cars—America Only Represented in the French Grand Prix.

Automobile road racing has never before held a position of such prominence in the motor circles of Europe and America as this year. Despite all statements to the effect that interest in competitions chiefly intended for racing machines was dying out, the tendency seems to be exactly the contrary. A striking illustration of this has recently been shown in this country by the establishment of separate races for American and foreign touring cars over the Long Island Motor Parkway, both of which will be held either immediately before or after the Vanderbilt Cup contest.

The interest in the big events of the year lies not alone in their racing features, but in the fact that they will be held under such varying conditions, indicating that new methods will prevail hereafter in long-distance events for testing the reliability of motor cars. The cylinder displacement idea as against the weight limitation has come prominently to the front, and in all of the big events with the exception of the Grand Prix in France and the Sporting Commission Cup for smaller cars, to be run in connection with the former race and the Vanderbilt Cup contest, some regulations on the basis of cylinder displacement have been enforced. It is by no means certain that the American event will not require something of this sort, as changes in the rules are to be made at the coming meeting of the Racing Board, but in view of the fact that the majority of American cars preparing to enter are being constructed to compete under the old conditions, nothing radical is contemplated at this time.

The racing circuit abroad will open on April 21, with the Targa-Florio Cup competition in Sicily under the auspices of the Automobile Club of Milan, and will conclude with the Florio Cup contest over the Brescia course, conducted by the Automobile Club of Italy on Sept. 1. Between and including these dates there will be nine prominent events, of which three will be long-distance competitions for touring cars. They are:

April 21—Targa-Florio race, 282 miles over 94-mile course in Sicily. Four-cylinder cars limited to cylinder bore between 120 and 130 millimeters, with weight limit of 2,200 pounds for minimum bore. Six-cylinder cars, same weight limit for cars with cylinders of 85 millimeter bore, with addition of 88 pounds for each additional millimeter bore.

May 28—English Tourist Trophy race, Isle of Man, 240 miles over 40-mile course. Fuel allowance limited to one gallon for 16 miles, with minimum weight for chassis of 2,240 pounds, with special requirements for size of chassis, wheel base, and body.

June 8-12—Herkomer Cup contest for touring cars over 1,150-mile route through Germany, starting from Dresden and ending at Frankfort. Limited to cars of cylinder capacity of from two-thirds of a gallon to 2¼ gallons, and to be driven by amateurs.

June 15—German Emperor's Cup race, 300 miles over 75-mile course. Maximum cylinder capacity limited to 2 gallons. Minimum weight limited to 2,585 pounds, including racing body and tires, but without gasoline, oil, water, or spare parts.

July 2—Grand Prix, 500 miles over 50-mile circuit, starting from Dieppe, France. Fuel consumption limited to 6.6 gallons per 62.1 miles. No weight limit or other restrictions.

July 2—Sporting Commission Cup, 300 miles over same circuit as Grand Prix. Fuel consumption 3.8 gallons per 61 miles. Other conditions similar, this race being intended for smaller cars.

July 21—Ardennes Circuit, 372 miles over 53-mile course, starting at Bastogne, Belgium. Cylinder capacity, 2 gallons; minimum weight, 2,585 pounds, including racing body and tires, but without tools or spare parts. Gasoline of 69 degrees to be furnished by Racing Board.

July 31—Liedekerke Cup for touring cars over Ardennes Circuit, Belgium. Cylinder, capacity limit.

Sept. 1—Florio Cup over Brescia circuit, Italy.

America will be represented in but one of these big foreign events, the Grand Prix, in which Walter Christie has entered his new racing car, which will probably be driven by Louis Strang, his mechanic of last year in the Vanderbilt Cup race. The entries for the two Belgian events and the Brescia circuit race in Italy have not yet closed, but it is not likely that any American drivers will go over for those events, as all of the racing men and cars will be occupied here in preparing for the Vanderbilt Cup race.

The large number of entries that all of these events have brought out is another strong evidence of road racing popularity. For the big Italian event this month forty-six cars are entered, representing four nations—Italy, France, Germany, and Switzerland. Thirty-four cars will compete in the French Grand Prix, five nations being represented, but for the German Emperor's Cup race the unprecedented number of ninety-four cars have entered, Germany naturally having the largest number, France and Italy, however, will send some of their best drivers and cars, while England, Switzerland, and Belgium will add to its international features. This trophy is the first one ever offered by the Emperor of Germany for an automobile speed race, and, while national patriotism has led nearly all of the German manufacturers to enter care, the general favor with which the rules have been received has contributed, perhaps more than anything else, to the willingness to compete. The committee was the first to advance cylinder capacity restrictions as among the conditions for eligibility, and the German rules have been virtually copied for the Florio Cup event. The headquartere for the German race will be at Kloster-Thron, a few miles north of Homburg.

With such an array of entries for the speed contests, the demand for high-class drivers is naturally at a premium. All of the men whose names are familiarly known here on account of their presence in the Long Island cup contests have been busy for months preparing for the European circuit. The opportunity for new drivers to make a name for themselves has never been brighter, and it would be no surprise to see some of the veterans dethroned from their former positions.

Wagner, the winner of last year's Vanderbilt Cup race, will drive a new Darracq car in all of the big events, and so will Duray, the Ardennes winner last year and the third man for the Vanderbilt Cup, Lancia, Nazarro, and Dr. Wellechot, the Italian Fiat team, will compete for the Florio and the German Cups. Albert Clement, the popular young Frenchman who was fourth in the race here last year, has entered the Florio and Grand Prix races, while Jenatzy, the best Mercedes driver, will be seen in the German race and the Grand Prix. George Callois, who drove one of the Thomae cars in the Vanderbilt Cup race last year, has been engaged this season to drive a Darracq car, and he will probably be seen in all of the events as well as Wagner.

Speculation on the speed possibilities of this year's races is already rife. The records made last year were of so high a standard that it will require exceptional cars and rare drivers to create new speed marks. Duray, by his victory in the Ardennee race, averaging 66 miles an hour, holds the speed record for long distance events. Szisz did practically as well in the Grand Prix, which was 769 miles long last year, twice the distance of the Ardennes race, by averaging 63 miles, and Wagner averaged 61½ miles in the Vanderbilt Cup race. What effect the new conditions will have upon speed records remains to be seen. Judging from the high horse powered cars being built for the Grand Prix, it seems likely that the French event will produce the highest speed averages, be the conditions for the Italian and German events are designed more for the purpose of demonstrating the serviceability of motor car engines than the encouragement of especially constructed racing machines.

Football at Tuskegee Institute.

ELMIRA, N. Y., April 13.—"Deacon" Costello of this city, one of Cornell's most famous football men, has received an offer to coach a football team at Booker T. Washington's Tuskegee Institute. He will probably accept.

ORIGIN OF "CRAWL STROKE."

New Swimming Style Made Popular by Daniels Started in Australia.

The "crawd stroke," which is now adopted by many of the swimmers in America, was brought into prominence through the wonderful prowess of C. M. Daniels of the New York Athletic Club, whose phenomenal work in the natatorium has resulted in the establishment of a number of new records during Daniels's swimming career. Nearly every swimmer is trying to master the knack of this stroke.

The new stroke originated in an odd way. Two friends in Australia were swimming a race, and one of them easily out-distanced the other. The next time they swam the former winner, as a handicap, had his legs tied. Under these conditions his second victory was as conclusive as the first. After experimenting he expounded the theory that in old-fashioned swimming the resistance of the water as the legs are drawn up and spread out quite counter-balanced the power gained when the legs were struck out.

CRESCENT SHOOTERS WIN.

Brooklyn Clubmen Beat Boston A. A. Team at Riverside.

BOSTON, April 13.—A return shoot between the Crescent Athletic Club of Brooklyn and the Boston Athletic Association was held to-day at the traps of the latter club at Riverside, the Crescents winning by a score of 651 to 648. Moffett of the visiting team was high gun, with a score of 91. The first match at Brooklyn was won by the Crescent Club by 24 points.

Yale-Harvard Football Game Nov. 23.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., April 13.—Manager Dutcher of the Harvard football eleven went home to-day after an important visit to Yale. He arranged with Manager Foster of the Yale team to have the annual Yale-Harvard game played at Cambridge Nov. 23. He also started negotiations for a Yale-Harvard general athletic conference to construct a new Yale-Harvard general athletic agreement in place of the one which expired last March.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

Energetic work is being done by the committee in charge of the Orphans' Day parade in this city on June 12 to secure sufficient cars to give several hundred inmates of the different asylums an enjoyable day's outing. Requests have been sent to the forty-one members of the American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association asking them to encourage their agents in supplying cars for the event.

Cortlandt Field Bisbop, chairman of the Maps Committee of the Automobile Club of America, has notified motorists touring in New Jersey that the highway between Rahway and Metuchen is in a dangerous condition, due to faulty construction and neglect. Mr. Bishop's automobile fell through a section of the macadam a few days ago, and it required two hours' work with a team of horses to pull it out.

While in New Yorkers the taximeter idea is new, Parisians have had the benefit of the service for two or three years. A most satisfactory car for city service in Paris has been found in the 16-20 horse-power Brasier, with a short chassis fitted with a landaulet body. It is speedy, starts very smoothly, and has sufficient power to be used for short runs into the country. E. B. Gallaher is importing a number of these cars, equipping them with limousins and landaulet bodies.

Walter C. Martin, the American representative of the English Rolls-Royce car, will have on exhibition this week a chassis of the highest powered Rolls-Royce car imported to this country. It is of 40-50 horse power, with a touring body by an English firm.

C. L. Lawrence of the B. L. M. Motor Car Company will sail for Europe on April 19 to visit the Krupp iron works in Germany and several large automobile factories for the purpose of studying motor conditions abroad.

Charles Schmidt, the designer of the 1907 cars manufactured by the Peerless Motor Car Company of Cleveland, Ohio, sailed this month for Europe. He is expected to be away about six weeks, and while in France will make contracts and select materials to be used in the construction of the 1908 models. He will visit all the important European automobile manufactories.

Having been shown at many automobile shows in American cities, the Golden Dragon has left the Philadelphia factory and is now on its way to Canada, where it will be exhibited at the Montreal show and in other Canadian cities.

The following names have been proposed for membership in the New York Motor Club: W. W. Haskell, George H. MacWilliam, Louis H. Perlman, A. F. MacWilliam, L. C. Pulsifer, Wayne Murray, Henry F. Holbrook, R. A. Albee, Jr., and R. D. Garden.

Cars have been sold in many different ways and sales have been made in very short periods of time, but one of the most novel sales recently made was when Chriton R. Mabley sold a 30-35 horse-power S. & M. Simplex car upon an order from Boston over the long-distance telephone in the short space of three and one-half minutes.

Although there has been some talk that the early shows would prevent the importers from having their cars here in time to exhibit, Robert Fulton, manager of the Mercedes car in America, states that the 1908 Mercedes model will be here by Oct. 1.

The American Motor Car Manufacturers' Association is continuing its strides in the line of increased membership, as shown by the announcement yesterday that the Mack Bros. Motor Car Co., of Allentown, Pa., has been elected to membership. Two other applications are now pending. The Mack Bros. Motor Car Co. make the Manhattan eight-seating cars, which are in use in many prominent cities.

The agents of the Mora car state that one of the speediest and best equipped of all the Mora cars will be on exhibition at their salesroom, 110th Street and Broadway, this week. The new car is one of the racy types of 24 horse power, shaft driven, with pan support for the motor and gears. The motor and gear side is first bolted to a pan support, and then the entire support is bolted to a composition wood armored frame.

Arrangements have been effected between Milton Roblee, general manager for the Actors' Benefit Fund Fair, and Wyckoff, Church & Partridge, whereby this latter are placing in the Metropolitan Opera House a Babcock Electric Stanhope carriage. It will be raffled off during the fair, tickets selling for $1 apiece.

Harry S. Houpt reports that the interest of the public in automobiles and the demand for cars is surprising, though he had expected a tremendous trade this Spring. He says that last week was one of the greatest of the season for Thomas cars. Among the purchasers were: B. Hoffman, Wallie Eddinger, B. M Fellows, Fred A. Stone, L. D. Hebbard, Franklin Pettit, J. H. Townsend, J. C. McCoy, W. M. Halloway, K. W. McNeil, Lawrence S Kohn, Dr. J. W. Moore, M. J. Sbewan, W. H. Reid, and C. C. Valentine.

"With the prospect of good weather automobilists are eager to get out on the road," said A. M. Robbins, manager of the Aerocar agency, last week. "For the last ten days we have sold a car a day, and our demonstrating cars are always busy." Among the purchasers of 40 horse power cars were Charles E. Miller, Joseph F. Brown, and William H. Thompson of this city, and Harry B. Tuttle of New Haven.

The fast run recently made by an American Mora car, from Camden to Atlantic City in 69 minutes, was a topic of interesting comment last week, and many requests for demonstrations were made at the Broadway salesrooms of the American Mors. Every car has been sold, and Mr. Hopkins, the manager, has sent word to the St. Louis factory to hasten early deliveries.

Thomas Henderson, Vice President of the Licensed Association of Automobile Manufacturers and of the Winton Motor Carriage Company, has returned to Cleveland from a month's trip through the Far West. "I was astonished at the remarkable prosperity of the Western country," he said, "particularly of the Pacific Coast section. Motor cars have so emphatically demonstrated their usefulness under severe conditions, in cities, country, and mining camps, that sales are made to Far Western buyers with considerable less effort than in the East, where details rather than general practicability wield an influence out of proportion to their importance."

The United States Government has issued a patent to Hiram P. Maxim of this Electric Vehicle Company for an interchangeable motor vehicle running gear made in two distinct parts, one part consisting of the steering mechanism and the other of the driving mechanism. As this system of design is used by all manufacturers of this electric vehicles in America, the granting of this patent has caused something of a sensation in the electric carriage trade, and there is some speculation among the other manufacturers as to whether the company will exercise its right to this exclusive use of the Maxim patents.

Some one counted up not long ago and found that there were sixty-four trades and professions represented in the work done on a motor car before it is completed. At one of the factories in the country, that of the E. R. Thomas Motor Company at Buffalo, there is one which was not included. It is that of interpreter. John Krutchen holds the position, and he can write and speak English, German, French, Italian and Spanish. All of these are called into use every day except Spanish. Most of Krutchen's work is concerned with the members of the foreign engineering department of the company. He is also a gas engine expert, and has designed several speedy motor boats.

Herman Broecsel, Jr., who piloted the Simplex VIII. in the recent Miami motor boat regatta, has received word that the Simplex VIII. has been awarded the Miami shield for the best general performance by a speed boat during the regatta.

A report has just been received in this city that a combination has been effected between the Isotta Fraschini Automobile Company of Italy and the De Dietrich Company of France. It is generally conceded that the combination will continue to turn out two types of cars similar to those made by the separate companies at present. If the deal has actually been consummated, the concern will be the largest manufacturers of automobiles in the world.

POLO CLUBS READY FOR ANNUAL GAMES

Association Delegates to Meet Here This Week to Apportion Tournament Dates.

NEW METHODS PROPOSED

Joshua Crane, Jr., Wants Event Limited to High Handicap Players —Many Local Contests.

Prominent polo ists from a majority of the leading clubs throughout the country will meet in the Riding and Driving Club, Fifty-eighth Street, near Fifth Avenue, on Tuesday evening for the annual meeting and dinner of the Polo Association. This meeting practically heralds the opening of the polo season, and from the large number of acceptances received last week by the chairman, H. L. Herbert, interest in the sport seems to be increasing. The association is now composed of thirty-nine clubs, the largest number in its history, and it is expected that at least twenty-five of these will be represented by delegates.

Besides the election of officers chief interest in the meeting lies in the apportionment of dates for the annual club tournaments and championships. A new tournament plan which is to permit the high handicapped men from various clubs to form picked teams for a special competition, somewhat on the lines of an open championship, will be presented by Joshua Crane, Jr., the delegate of the Dedham Club, near Boston. In view of the fact that there is a bare possibility that the National championship may be awarded to a Western club this new plan is attracting wide attention. Mr. Crane has sent a circular letter outlining the conditions under which the event might be conducted to the representatives of most of the big clubs in the East, and if the National event should go to the West a big tournament for the best players in this section of the country will undoubtedly be authorized.

An unusually large number of applications has already been received for club tournaments. It will be no easy matter to arrange the dates so as to prevent conflicts between clubs in the same districts favoring particular dates. To obviate this difficulty and so as not to entail too much labor upon visiting teams in requiring them to ship their ponies to a number of clubs the method adopted last year of consolidating the events in certain sections into district tournaments will be repeated. This was done last season with great success in Philadelphia, and to some extent in the metropolitan locality, but so many club events are held here that those which do not secure choice dates early in the year have an opportunity of holding Fall tournaments in which local teams are the chief contestants.

The Westchester Country Club will not hold a tournament this season, and the first big event will probably be at the Meadow Brook Club, followed by Essex County, Rumson, and Rockaway. The Philadelphia tournament will be held in June, as usual, and the National championship, as well as the junior championship, if it is decided to continue that lesser event, will probably be held in that month, as the majority of polo ists believe that the early part of the year is better than later in the season for the big games.

There is no possibility of an international polo match this season. A satisfactory American team cannot be secured before another trial for the cup now held by the Hurlingham Club of England, and the international subject is not likely to be discussed at the meeting.

The Riding and Driving Club of Brooklyn, which joined the association last year, is going to try to revive polo this Summer on the Prospect Park parade ground, and it is barely possible that some games with the Troop C players may be seen there. At Van Cortlandt Park Squadron A will begin practice within the next two weeks. The polo club of the squadron will ask for an open tournament in the Fall, but a number of special matches for May and June are being arranged. Efforts are being made to secure some of the college teams and the squadron will go to West Point on May 25 to play the Cadets.

No change in the present officers of the association is likely. H. L. Herbert will be re-elected Chairman, and William A. Hazard of the Rockaway Club Secretary. The Executive Committee consists of R. L. Agassiz, Myopia; George J. Gould, Lakewood; John C. Groome, Philadelphia Country; O. W. Bird, Meadow Brook; Joshua Crane, Jr., Dedham; Charles Wheeler, Bryn Mawr, and Sidney C. Love, Onwentsia.

Future Major Leaguers.

Branch 1, Consolidated Gas Company Street Department, will be represented by a strong baseball team this season. The nine is prepared to book games through Manager Joseph J. Murphy, 3 Lexington Avenue, Maspeth, L. I. Games with Hollywoods, Englewoods, Haverstraws, Nyack, Rockville Centres, and Hempstead teams preferred.

Any first-class amateur team wishing to arrange dates, from 17 to 18 years, will be accommodated by the Guilford Athletic Club. The McGinnitys, Villages, Seminoles, Osceolas, and other teams of equal strength preferred. Address James O'Neill, 247 Taylor Street, Brooklyn.

J. W. Robertson will manage the Railway Steel Spring Company team this year, and wishes to secure games for his nine with any first-class amateur team.

The Metz Athletic Club, with players averaging from 12 to 13 years, would like to hear from teams relative to arranging Sunday games. The battery is J. Hillgreen and Patrick Fishback. Address Thomas Hogan, 235 West Broadway, New York.

The Allerton Field Club, managed by C. Newak, 527 West Thirty-ninth Street, New York, has been organized for the season. The club desires to hear from out-of-town nines offering suitable guarantees.

The Carlton Athletic Club has several open dates for teams willing to secure a good attraction. Address B. K. Frankel, 162 East Fifty-ninth Street, New York.

Any uniformed team averaging from 15 to 18 years of age can be accommodated with games by addressing William Faul, manager, Hudson Athletic Club, 387 Eighth Avenue, New York.

The Unknowns of Elmhurst, L. I., have organized for the season. Teams offering suitable inducements should address George W. Walsh, Elmhurst Avenue, corner of Third Street, Elmhurst, L. I. The Unknowns average from 15 to 16 years.

Commencing June 22, the Correspondence Bureau of the Adams Express Company will be represented by a strong baseball team. The team wants to hear from all transportation companies in Greater New York or out-of-town clubs which will defray expenses for Saturday afternoon games. Address Samuel Shoulberg, manager, 53 West Fourteenth Street, New York.

Thirty-four teams are entered in the Manhattan baseball tournament this year. In order to play, the boys are compelled to go to either the Parade Grounds, Brooklyn, or in the Bronx.

The season of the baseball tournament in the Public Schools Athletic League lasts from April 15 to June 20. The District League games will be decided between April 15 and May 4, the borough games between May 6 and May 25, and the city championship games between May 29 and June 22. The District League games are a sort of tryout to qualify to compete in the borough championships.

The members of the team winning the city championship in the Public Schools Athletic League baseball tournament will receive gold medals this year. The successful members of the teams in the city championships will be presented with silver medals, while nine regular and two substitute medals also will be awarded. The school winning the city championships is entitled to hold the Spalding Trophy for one year, and to the victors of the borough championships the following trophies, which they are permitted to retain for one year, will be donated: Manhattan, Hyler Trophy; Brooklyn, McCarren Trophy; Bronx, Spalding Trophy; Queens, Brooklyn Eagle Trophy; Richmond, Spalding Trophy.

Capt. R. A. McGovern and Manager H. E. Burnes of De La Salle have mustered the following players to represent the school team this season: Abrams and Doyle, pitchers; McGovern, catcher; Saunders, first base; Burnes, second base; Meenan, short stop; Mitchell, third base; Murphy, centre field; Herrera, right field; O'Keefe, left field; T. Doyle and J. Meenan, substitutes.

The Carlstadt A. A., semi-professional champions of Bergen County, will again be represented by a strong team this season. Last season this team won twenty-four games and lost eight, defeating some of the best teams in New York and New Jersey. The team has its home ground in Carlstadt, N. J., and travels on Saturdays. There are still several Saturday dates open which the management would like to fill with out-of-town teams who offer a reasonable guarantee. E. Fisher has been elected Manager of the team, and R. Hagedorn Captain. For games address R. Hagedorn, 391 Webster Avenue, Jersey City Heights, N. J.

The Bronx Field Club will open the season with the Broadhurst Field Club at Broadhurst Oval next Sunday.

School Teams in Baseball.

The Public Schools Athletic League baseball championship, which begins to-morrow, has ninety-three teams entered in Greater New York. Trophies will be presented to the winners of the borough championships, and these winners play in the city tournament for the championship of Greater New York, the winner of which will receive the Spalding baseball trophy for the year 1907-8. The following is a list of schools which have entered teams from the various boroughs:

Manhattan—Public School Nos. 2, 5, 6, 10, 14, 18, 19, 21, 22, 23, 24, 25, 26, 27, 30, 32, 40, 43, 44, 49, 58, 62, 69, 70, 74, 82, 87, 89, 109, 147, 168, 169, 171, 184, 186.

Brooklyn—Public School Nos. 1, 3, 10, 16, 19, 23, 25, 26, 27, 80, 82, 34, 36, 43, 44, 45, 55, 70, 72, 73, 78, 82, 84, 85, 88, 100, 107, 109, 119, 122, 123, 128, 134, 136, 138, 144, 147, 149.

Bronx—Public School Nos. 5, 9, 10, 23, 29, 37.

Queens—Public School Nos. 1, 4, 5, 14, 17, 19, 20, 23, 27, 31, 87.

Richmond—Public School Nos. 12, 14, 19.

NEED TO DEFINE AMATEUR STATUS

Frequent Misunderstandings Emphasize Obscurity of Law.

WHAT IS SPORTSMANSHIP

Effort to Unify Regulations for Gentleman's Games Involves Appointment of a Court of Review.

What constitutes an amateur?

Since the government of amateur athletics was first undertaken the question of amateur status has been a constant source of irritation and dispute. A general idea of the proscriptions, which must not be violated, is widely held, but specific definition that shall settle all such questions has not been adopted by any body of control and accepted generally. Differences of opinion have been frequent, and have led to acrimonious disputes, recrimination, and general misunderstandings that have been harmful. It is necessary that some step be taken to prevent them if anomalous conditions are not to continue.

The latest case to give trouble is that of the fancy skater, George Kirner of Brooklyn, who was permitted to compete in the Amateur Athletic Union championship and to win second place when he had specifically violated the rules of the Amateur Athletic Union. He had been a skate boy at St. Nicholas Rink prior to 1900, and had received money for instructing skaters. The Amateur Athletic Union especially prohibits the competition of any person who, directly or indirectly, receives money for training or coaching another in any athletic exercise, and the Amateur Skating Association had repeatedly refused to accept Kirner's entry for the fancy skating championship. Although these facts were well established and known, he was permitted to compete in the Amateur Athletic Union championship because none of his fellow competitors would lodge a protest against him.

The case is now in the hands of the Registration Committee, which has held a hearing and taken evidence, Kirner admitting the facts, but no decision has yet been rendered. It seems a hardship that a boy who was forced to earn his living in this way should have the stigma of professionalism; yet the law is unquestionable. The whole decision rests upon the equities of the case—whether or not the Amateur Athletic Union should recognize extenuating circumstances. Some of the colleges that have faced the same situation have decided there is extenuation for some offenses and have abrogated to themselves the right to determine when offenses disqualify and when they do not.

Taking the gamut of sport it is found that widely different amateur regulations exist. The strictest in the letter of the law is the definition of the Intercollegiate Association of Amateur Athletes of America, under which, for instance, it was possible to disqualify Arthur Duffy, the discredited sprinter, where the Amateur Athletic Union rules did not cover his case. The Tennis Association has very lax regulations, but one which drew the sabre over the eligibility of Beals C. Wright, which caused a considerable stir and placed the association in an unpleasant light abroad. In tennis circles there is to-day regrettable laxity, one illustration of which is given in the open betting by players upon the outcome of matches in which they contest.

Cricket is another sport which presents anomalous conditions, where professionalism is recognized and professionals regularly play on teams which they coach, something that disqualifies an amateur in baseball, for instance. Capt. Collins of the Columbia University nine was disqualified both by his university and by the Amateur Athletic Union for just that offense.

Another illustration of lax government is afforded in hockey, where the Amateur Hockey League permits regularly men who have acknowledgly received salaries for playing, and who have been imported from Canada for the specific purpose of playing hockey, in the past to compete as amateurs. The hockey players say that their organization is a close corporation and they have the right to play whom they please as long as it is so and no one has the right to object to their practices.

While this may be true in the abstract it is easy to see how the abrogation of such a right if permitted to extend to all organizations would soon undermine all amateur sport, and instead of having law to protect those who wish to compete with men who do not engage in sport for a livelihood and in consequence have scandals of "thrown games and races" and like constantly creeping out, such as once was characteristic of the turf racing game.

The cleanest organization in existence to-day is unquestionably the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen. Yet in it such cases as that of the Vesper Boat Club at Henley develop, and America is forced to submit to such ignominious snubs as grew out of that case at Henley.

In the last analysis the question of amateurism involves one's conscience. It is not the idea to set up a standard which shall be rigidly enforced because there is anything ignominious in professionalism. The professional athlete has again and again in individual instances abused and defrauded the public by hippodroming and worse. It is to prevent such men from entering in competition with clean men that an amateur standard is demanded to avoid the unpleasant necessity of explaining one's reason for prohibiting an objectionable person from competing.

It has been demonstrated repeatedly in various sports that men, whose personal honor is generally regarded as unassailable, will take petty advantage of an opponent, will trick and deceive in an effort to secure a prize the monetary value of which has no interest to them whatever. The reason for this condition undoubtedly is moral—the lack of appreciation of the underlying principles of true sportsmanship. To minimize this unfortunate attitude the most earnest effort is being made by such organizations as the Public Schools Athletic League and the Intercollegiate Athletic Association of the United States, which seeks to raise the plane of sport on just those lines.

It would be well if some central body could be organized to contain such men as to place its dictum beyond question to unify athletic laws and to enforce as a court of last resort its regulations; in which should be vested the right to qualify the letter of the law to prevent injustice and yet to maintain the highest code of honor and to generally prevent the creeping into gentleman's sport of the insidious influences that before today have brought it into disrepute.

GOLFERS PLAY THIS WEEK.

First Big Tournament of the Season at Garden City.

Local golfers will get busy this week, and with the opening of the three-day tournament at Garden City next Thursday the competitive season on Northern links will be fairly under way. The popularity of the Garden City links insures a big entry from the Metropolitan players, and it will be the first event in which the new handicap ratings recently issued by the Metropolitan Golf Association will go into effect. Walter Travis, the ex-National champion, and Jerome D. Travis, the present Metropolitan title holder, will be among the starters. A field of from fifty to sixty will be seen in the eighteen-hole qualifying round. Two sets of sixteen will qualify for two cups and additional trophies have been offered for the beaten eights in each division.

Following Garden City, the second big tournament of the season will be at the Lakewood Country Club, beginning April 25 and continuing three days. The return of many of the Southern players has occasioned active playing on the Lakewood course since the first of this month, and within another week the greens will be in admirable condition. The Atlantic City tournament will come during the week of the Lakewood, and as the Metropolitan championship will be held at the end of May, local golfers will not suffer from lack of practice in preparation for the various trophies offered in the Metropolitan event.

"JEFF" AS A RACONTEUR.

Champion Makes Fame of Baron Munchausen Pale.

Baron Munchausen lives in fame as the hero of unexampled achievement and marvelous adventure because "Jim" Jeffries has never gotten his due. Great as is the pugilistic ability of the champion and widespread as is his renown in consequence, they would be dwarfed to insignificance were his power as raconteur generally known. That Jeffries is the hero of his tales is incidental. Of course none would question their verity—in Jeffries's hearing. Some of them are so remarkable as to merit preservation.

Imagine a solitary hunter being caught in a trap by a mountain lion with nothing save nature's weapons with which to defend himself, and killing the lion with one blow of his powerful fist. Or of finding himself alone on a lost mountain trail and lying down beside his horse, being aroused in the night by tarantulas crawling over him, killing sixteen of the poisonous insects by crushing them under his feet in the space of sixteen seconds. These are characteristic of Jeffries. But the crowning glory of Jeffries's repertoire is a poker yarn he told to a quartette of gamblers in a Newark café once.

The café was in the theatre where the champion was showing during the week, and it was Jeffries's custom to visit the place every night after the performance. Joe Maxwell, an intimate friend, was with the pugilist at the time and can vouch for the telling of the story.

After one of the gamblers had related a commonplace tale about pinochle Jeffries told how he had participated in a table-stakes game of poker out West that lasted seventy-two hours without cessation.

"It happened in Los Angeles," began "Jeff" in that suave way he has, "and I won't forget it as long as I live. There were five of us when we started. I had about 2,000 simoleons before me and I was determined to increase my pile to $10,000 or go clean broke. Well, my pile went down and rose by turns, and at the end of two days I was about $8,000 to the good. My pals dropped out and by the fiftieth hour why there was only three of us left.

"At the sixtieth hour I had only one player and at the end of the seventy-second hour I was the only one left. Well, I didn't feel sleepy a bit, but to be sure that I wouldn't get groggy I just bathed my face in water saturated with borax and in a jiffy I was as fresh as ever and ready to continue for another seventy-two hours. Copped, all told, about $12,000 in the game.

Jeffries did not flinch a muscle when he told this. His countenance was as immobile as if it were made of stone, and he never smiled. He evidently believed the story himself, judging from the pleasure he derived in telling it. His listeners, one by one, fled, and when the fighter came to the end of his "dream" he was practically alone.

SHOOTING IN THE RAIN.

Cup and Trophy Handicaps at Travers Island—Other Scores.

Trap shooters faced a northeast gale for love of the sport at the New York Athletic Club's traps at Travers Island yesterday. It was the sort of weather that tried the eyesight because of the rain which at times fell in torrents, while the wind caused the gunners to display the best of judgment as to the flight of the "clay birds." Even under these conditions the scores were good, and in the April Cup contest Fred A. Hodgman and F. H. Schauffler tied. The former finally won on the shoot-off, with his total of 25 kills, while Schauffler was only one behind him.

George F. Pelham, shooting from scratch mark, made an even score of 23 kills, with Fred A. Hodgman, handicapped at 1, in the competition for the E. N. Huggins Cup. On the whole, Pelham was in much better shooting trim than the other scratch man of the squad that faced the traps, W. Dudley. The latter was bothered by the gusts of rain so that he would occasionally miss a comparatively easy kill. The scores:

April Cup, Handicap, 25 Targets.—George F. Pelham, (scratch,) 43; Fred A. Hodgman, (4,) 45; F. H. Schauffler, (2,) 45; O. M. Brazier, (1,) 43; George W. Kuchler, (4,) 40; W. Dudley, (scratch,) 40; F. A. Dugro, (8,) 43. In shoot-off of tie, Fred A. Hodgman, 24; F. H. Schauffler, 23.

NORTH RIVER GUN CLUB SHOOT.

The North River Gun Club trap shooters had a good day's sport at their traps yesterday at Edgewater, N. J., despite the inclement weather. William Bussing won a leg on a case of shells, and in the shoot-off of the tie of last Saturday with John Ropes he again scored the greater number of targets. The shooting was exceptionally good considering the wind and rain, but not a clean score of targets was made by any of the gunners. The scores:

News of the Golf Links.

Unusual interest will be centred this year in the women's championship tournament of Great Britain, which will begin May 13 at the Newcastle Club links, County Down, Ireland, from the fact that two of America's leading players are entered for the event, Miss Margaret Curtis and Miss Harriot Curtis. Mrs. C. F. Whitney and Miss Grace Keyes are also in Europe, but they will not compete in the championship. Miss Harriot Curtis is the present amateur champion of the United States.

E. F. Beyers, the United States amateur champion, will sail for Europe this month to compete in the amateur championship of Great Britain, which begins May 27, on the old St. Andrews links, Scotland.

A number of team matches will be played this season by the Princeton Golf Club. On April 27 the collegians will play the Montclair team on the Montclair links, and early in May they will go to Englewood to meet the team there. Princeton has a very good team this year, and expects to make a strong bid for the championship at the next inter-collegiate tournament, to be held in the Fall.

The open championship of Great Britain will be held on June 17 and 18, on the Hoylake links, near Liverpool.

A few changes have been made in the eighteen-hole course of the Essex County Country Club at Orange, and the greens have been improved. The length of the course is a trifle less than 6,000 yards. The regular club competitions will begin May 4, when a trophy presented by J. E. Bailey of the Trentham Golf Club, England, will be played for.

The links of the Dunwodie Country Club, which were opened last Summer, have undergone extensive improvements, and the Tournament Committee is arranging a long series of matches to begin next month. The cup presented last Fall by Frank Presbrey as the championship trophy of the club will be played for in a three-day tournament later in the season.

A home and home team match has been arranged between the Dyker Meadow and Englewood golfers. The first match will be played on May 11, on the Dyker Meadow links, near Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn, and on May 25 the return game will be played on the Englewood club course.

TENNIS MATCHES ON INDOOR COURT

Boston Girls on Winning Teams in First of Mixed Doubles.

MISS JEAN REID DEFEATED

Play of the Dashing Variety Characterized the Contests in St. Nicholas Rink.

Miss Eleanora Sears and Miss Marion Fenno, the Boston lawn tennis players, displayed their top game yesterday. Their play was snappy and brilliant, and materially helped their partners through to victory in the opening matches of the mixed doubles tournament, the second of the indoor series on the court of the St. Nicholas Rink, Sixty-sixth Street and Columbus Avenue. Miss Sears was paired with William A. Larned, the National ex-champion, while Miss Fenno had as partner George L. Wrenn, Jr.

These pairs contested in the first round of the doubles event, which produced excellent sport. Miss Sears and Mr. Larned were the first to take the court, and they defeated Miss Jean Reid, daughter of Ambassador Whitelaw Reid, and Theodore Roosevelt Pell, after three hard-fought sets. In the other match Miss Fenno and Mr. Wrenn won in straight sets from Miss Phyllis Green and Edgar W. Leonard, the Harvard ex-champion.

Despite the cloudy afternoon, the light was excellent on the court. It was reflected from the white walls, while the grass-green canvas playing surface and the backstops made it easy to keep track of the ball. A large gallery of society folk were present, and among the most enthusiastic were Mrs. Lorillard Spencer, Jr., Mr. and Mrs. Frank H. Gould, Mrs. R. V. L. Pruyn, Miss Cooper, Miss Irwin, Mrs. Knapp, Miss W. Moran, Mr. and Mrs. W. F. Hadden, Mrs. James Brown, Mr. and Mrs. Raymond D. Little, and Mrs. Theodore Roosevelt Pell.

Miss Reid and Mr. Pell played a dashing game at the net in the first set of their match. They led throughout this set and won after nine games. Then Larned began to drive for passes from deep court, while Miss Sears scored the aces by volleyed returns from close to the net. The Boston girl and the ex-champion fairly romped through this set. They devoted considerable of their attention to Miss Reid. The latter pluckily endeavored to play her part on her side of the net. She frequently made telling shots for clean passes. On the whole, Miss Sears and Larned relatively outclassed the opposing pair, and after taking the second set at 6—1, they made a runaway finish to the match.

The Philadelphia girl, Miss Phyllis Green, provided the features of the second game. She bounced around the court and kept the ball moving at a lively pace. Her smashes and cross-court shots were cleverly manoeuvred and she frequently embarrassed Wrenn by catching him off his guard and scoring the ace by smashing the ball directly to his feet. The playing of Miss Fenno and Wrenn had the quality of balance and steadiness about it that pinched out the close games. The summary:

Indoor Mixed Doubles.—First Round—Miss Eleanore Sears and William A. Larned defeated Miss Jean Reid and Theodore Roosevelt Pell, 3—6, 6—1, 6—0; Miss Marion Fenno and George L. Wrenn, Jr., defeated Miss Phyllis Green and Edgar W. Leonard, 6—4, 6—4.

PATRONS FOR TENNIS GAMES.

President Roosevelt May Lend Name to State Championship After English Custom.

The English custom of having honorary patrons and officers for the lawn tennis championships is to be followed this season in one or two of the more important tournaments in this city. It may find its first trial in the holding of the New York State championship by the New York Athletic Club. As President Roosevelt is a son of the Empire State and also a member of the New York Athletic Club, it is likely in this connection that he will be asked to be the chief patron of the tournament, as he is an ardent lover of the game. Gov. Charles E. Hughes has also been mentioned, and President Eliot of Harvard as well, in connection with the holding of the metropolitan championship by the West Side Lawn Tennis Club.

This is only one of a number of things of distinctly British flavor that gives evidence of the National Association, and the more active players, taking a leaf from "John Bull's" tennis book, and adapting the lessons to their needs. The prospect of holding several of the more important championships under the patronage of these of high station interested in the development of the game, it is believed, will create a marked stimulus in this country. The remarkable rise and development of the game in England has been due in no inconsiderable degree to the interest royalty has taken in lawn tennis. In Germany Emperor William and the Crown Prince have set their seal of approval upon it, which has rapidly advanced its interests, especially as the Crown Prince has won some distinction as a player. Even in Spain King Alphonso takes his daily turn on the tennis courts. And a greater number of open tournaments are being held at the resorts each year at which tourists compete.

The movement to bring about the desired patronage was favored last Autumn by Frederick G. Anderson, a member of the Executive Committee and President of the Kings County Lawn Tennis Club. He has carefully made a collection of programmes of many of the more important meetings in England, showing the representative list of patrons under which the tournaments are played. Thus early in the season the plans formulated promised to follow the ideas of the established English usage in the larger tournaments.

As an indication of what might be done a lawn tennis official suggested the following list for the New York championship, as representative of the Empire State:

Patron—Theodore Roosevelt.
President—George B. McClellan.
Vice Presidents—Bishop Henry C. Potter, Archbishop Ireland, Gov. Charles E. Hughes, Nicholas Murray Butler, President Columbia University; Chancellor McCracken, Col. John Jacob Astor, Col. Daniel Appleton, and Andrew Carnegie.

Already the stimulus of President Roosevelt and his tennis Cabinet has created widespread interest in the game. It is believed by several of those high in tennis circles that all of those named on the list would be only too ready to lend their influence toward such a dignified and all-eminently amateur sport as lawn tennis. The minor positions on the list would be supplied from among the immediate club members, so that the executive management of the tournament would be in their hands.

City College Strength Test.

Under the supervision of Physical Director Thomas A. Storey of the College of the City of New York, a competitive strength test will be held in the college gymnasium April 17, 18, and 19. A similar competition was decided last year, but the apparatus in the new gymnasium has aided materially in developing promising and enthusiastic candidates. Four medals have been donated by Drs. Stratford and Cairns of the Natural History Department for the best man in each collegiate class. The intercollegiate Strength Test rules will govern the contest, and the records made will be official.

The following will compete: 1907—Hubert, Holdgerd, Oboler, Strumwasser; 1908—Brown, Book, Stillwell; 1909—Brandt, Goldman, Weinstein; 1910—Davidowitz, Gladstone, Katz, Moore, Norman, Langman, Warren, and Wolfson.

GLIMPSE OF APRIL SEEN,

But It Won't Last—Blizzard Weather in the West and Cold Coming.

April really arrived yesterday, just thirteen days late, but looking as natural as ever.

Alternate showers and sunshine was the weather programme, and the New Yorker wore his raincoat on his back and on his arm and carried his umbrella up and down in an effort to adjust himself to the new conditions. The rain was gentle and soothing and many persons preferred to enjoy the pleasant sprinkling, walking along with their collars turned up, and carrying their umbrellas in their hands.

Spring came, too, after many false warnings. Those who make their living by putting the seasons into rhyme and rhythm, piped a new note.

But while all this was going on in New York nearby places were shaking camphor balls out of the bed comfortables and blankets, preparatory to using them again. In Western New York, it was cold and snow was falling. Further West it was bitterly cold and snow fell plentifully. The cause of it all was a cold wave from the weather rookeries in the Rockies that started across the country some days ago. It has left much sickness in its wake.

Reports from the West and Southwest indicated that great damage has been done to fruit crops. From Milwaukee came reports of a blizzard in Wisconsin. At Green Bay, Wis., ten inches of snow fell. Telegraph and telephone wires were down, and the street car and railway service was badly hampered.

From Cleveland report came that snow had fallen in quantities over the entire State, with a big drop in temperature, which had done great damage to fruits and small vegetables. Snow fell in Nashville for several hours, and advices from other parts of Tennessee, Southern Kentucky, and Alabama indicated that early fruit had been killed.

Temperatures varying from 36 to 16 degrees were reported from Missouri and Oklahoma points. Shipping in Boston was completely tied up by the storm. A gale, which at times reached a velocity of fifty miles an hour, accompanied by snow and sleet, prevented the departure of sailing vessels.

Under these circumstances April will not be with us long. Last night the weather man predicted fair and colder weather for to-day and fairer and still colder Monday. He refused to take a chance on snow. He also said that the temperature yesterday fluctuated between 39 and 43 degrees, and the humidity was high.

PICTURES BY W. L. LATHROP.

Views of New Jersey and Long Island in Spring and Winter.

Till April 27 the Montross Galleries will contain a score of paintings by Mr. W. L. Lathrop, N. A., the greater number representing recent work. They fill the larger gallery, leaving plenty of distance between frames, and thus the twenty pictures are seen to good advantage.

Mr. Lathrop is a landscapist who has won prizes and medals at the Academy and the late Society of American Artists. He is a bit of an impressionist, and something of a painter of atmosphere, too; but he stops short of the color scheme invented by the Neo-Impressionists and pursues the even tenor of his way unharassed by the nervous excitement under which the artists of that school labor.

A view of hills and distant woods called "Melting Snow" brings out the painter's ability to halt midway between a simple transcript of Nature and one that tells a good deal more than ordinary realism does. Atmosphere and a sense of loneliness and cold take this picture out of the common rut. "On the Canal" is remarkable for excellent cloud painting and the employment of a single canalboat in the middle distance as a color note which gives the key to the entire composition. Here again the distances are managed with excellent tact.

"Coming Storm" presents a brilliant management of light in the dramatically moving clouds. "A Neglected Farm" is at the opposite pole, for the scene lies absolutely quiet and unmoved under a soft and windless spell of sunshine. "The Cliff," were it only a little less broad in its brushwork, might be by Kensett or Sanford Gifford. "April in an Orchard" has the same intensely quiet and restful air, while "Misty Day" is an exercise in the painting of distances enveloped and made mysterious by veils of vapor.

Notable pictures are "Old House in the Glen" and "Pasture Land in Summer." But Spring is the favorite season with this landscapist, as we see from "Stony Pasture," "Early Spring," and "April"—to mention only a few of the farmland views taken just before the unfolding of the leaves. Autumn's slightly richer colors are told with great reserve in "A Corn Field," "A Little Valley," and "Fodder Stacks."

The solitary figure piece is a portrait of George H. Clements, the artist, taken in his painting shirt, with palette and brushes in hand. It is a quickly sketched half length, rather brilliant in its expression of an earnestness that is almost savage.

MAN AND WIFE FOUND DEAD.

French Restaurateur Had Lost $5,000 in a Venture in This City.

Marcelle, the son of Mr. and Mrs. John Perrault, who came from Havana five months ago to manage a little restaurant and café on the ground floor of the apartment house at 1,770 Madison Avenue, near 116th Street, found his father and mother dead in bed yesterday afternoon. Gas from an open jet was pouring into the room.

The boy's delay in giving the alarm and the fact that a partly filled bottle containing some preparation of chloroform was on a bureau near the bed raised some suspicion that the two had committed suicide. This was strengthened by the fact that near the man's mouth a handkerchief was lying.

Coroner Acritelli made an investigation, but he departed satisfied that the deaths of the Perraults might have been due to an accident, as the pin which allows the gas cock to be turned only the proper distance was missing, so that upon going to bed one or another of the couple might have turned the gas on again. The fact that the tip of the jet was lying on the bed, the Coroner, too, ascribed to accident, though he ordered that an autopsy be made upon the bodies to-day.

The son, who is 10, said that he had opened the café in the morning, and that his parents usually did not arise until afternoon. For this reason he had not discovered their deaths sooner. When he could not get into the apartment he called "Ajax" Whitman, the "strong man," of the East 126th Street Station, who broke the door.

An examination of the bank books found by the Coroner showed that accounts had dwindled to only a few dollars in each bank. In Perrault's clothing $60 was found. Perrault's employes said that to the last he had paid regularly each debt as it became due. He had purchased his café, they said, for $8,000 from a man who had paid only $500 for it, and had lost $5,000 in the place since he had operated it. It was too high grade for the neighborhood, they declared. The preparation of chloroform, they said, had been ordered on a doctor's prescription for Mrs. Perrault.

DWIGHT'S LOW GOLF SCORE.

Leads Dyker Meadow Field Easily in First Monthly Handicap.

Amos T. Dwight made the admirable score of 74 strokes for the Dyker Meadow golf course yesterday in the club's first monthly handicap event. Notwithstanding the soggy nature of the course and the rain that fell intermittently during the afternoon, over twenty members took part in the event, but a number found that lack of practice was conducive to high scores and withheld their cards. Dwight's putting, despite the wet greens, was almost perfect. J. R. Maxwell, Jr., and Daniel Chauncey made the second best gross score of the day—87 strokes. The leaders were:

HARRIMAN TESTIFIES AGAINST HIS CLERK

Appears at Police Court Hearing Over the Stolen Webster Letter.

NEW LEGAL POINT RAISED

It Is Contended That the Statute Doesn't Apply to Stenographic Notes.

E. H. Harriman was the star witness when the examination of his former stenographer, Frank Hill, on the charge of having sold the famous "Where do I stand?" letter, whose publication started the controversy between Mr. Harriman and President Roosevelt, was resumed before Magistrate Wahle in the private examination room of the Tombs Police Court yesterday morning. Mr. Harriman reached court early, in company of ex-Judge Lovett, General Counsel for the Union Pacific Railroad, and the two took seats together on the left of the Magistrate.

Both watched with interest as Assistant District-Attorney Paul Krotel put Samuel B. Ranck, city editor of a morning newspaper on the stand. Mr. Ranck testified that Hill had offered to sell him the Webster letter and had it read from stenographic notes in his possession. Walter L. Rathbone, a notary public, followed Mr. Ranck, and testified that he had been called to the newspaper office where Hill read to him a transcript of his stenographic notes and then swore to the authenticity of the copy.

Ex-Magistrate Ommen, appearing for Hill, offered only one objection to this testimony, taking an exception when Ranck was asked and answered in the affirmative that the notes which Hill had read were in substance the Webster letter. Mr. Ommen objected again, but was overruled, when Mr. Krotel put Mr. Harriman on the stand and showed him the Webster letter. Mr. Harriman identified it as his and admitted that he had seen the letter published.

"It is substantially correct," he testified, "with the exception of a word or phrase here and there."

Mr. Harriman denied that he had ever given permission to anyone to publish the letter, and then Mr. Krotel read from the original letter while Mr. Harriman followed him, comparing it with the copy from which the publication had been made. The discrepancies between the letter and copy were trivial, as Mr. Harriman had testified.

On cross-examination, Mr. Ommen attempted to bring out the fact that Mr. Harriman had read the letter to other persons. Mr. Harriman admitted that he had read the letter to one man whose name he refused to give, Magistrate Wahle sustaining an objection from Mr. Krotel to a request for this name. Mr. Ommen then demanded to be told whether Mr. Harriman had read the letter to Benjamin B. Odell, Jr., or James Hazen Hyde, or to Senator Chauncey M. Depew. Objections were sustained to each of these questions and then Mr. Ommen demanded:

"Who is Mr. Webster?"

"A friend of mine," replied Mr. Harriman.

"Is he a relative of Stuyvesant Fish?"

"A brother-in-law."

"Have you had any differences with Mr. Fish?" Mr. Ommen asked.

Mr. Krotel's prompt objection was sustained and Mr. Harriman went on to testify that to the best of his knowledge he had dictated the Webster letter to Alexander Millar, who in turn, he believed, had dictated it to Hill. Mr. Millar was then called and identified the letter, which was said to have been copied from Hill's notes, as being in the handwriting of Hill. Under cross-examination, Millar, like Mr. Harriman, could not recall whether he or Hill had originally taken the letter in shorthand.

The hearing was adjourned until April 10. Mr. Ommen said that within that time he would submit a brief hearing upon that section of the code which made the publication of the letter without permission a crime. Mr. Ommen maintains that the statute does not provide for stenographic notes.

GIVES CONSENT TO SUBWAY.

Harway Improvement Co. Finally Falls in Line for Coney Route.

Controller Metz announced yesterday that he had finally received the consent of the Harway Improvement Company, permitting the passage of the subway past its property in Stillwell Avenue, Brooklyn. On Thursday, at the meeting of the Rapid Transit Commission it was announced that Anthony N. Brady had refused to grant the necessary consent and it was feared that the proposed subway to Coney Island would have to be temporarily abandoned in consequence.

In sending Mr. Metz the consent, James C. Brady, Secretary of the company, asserted that the attitude of the company had been entirely misunderstood; that it was in favor of the building of the subway, and that its hesitation was based on doubts that Mr. Metz had dispelled.

LA MOTHE CADILLAC

Would you weight your boots with leaden heels to go walking?

By the same token, is it not as foolish to buy a heavy, cumbersome touring car with its thousands of pounds of dead weight adding a burden to its motor and increasing the friction on its tires, if you don't want to do stunts or go touring around the world? The New offers more actual value for every dollar invested than any other auto ever produced

Model G has been especially designed to fill a general demand for a high-grade, medium-powered automobile, which is thoroughly dependable and lives up to the requirements of ninety-nine men out of a hundred. It is a twenty-horse power, four-cylinder machine. In design, construction, strength and durability it is a CADILLAC masterpiece—and that is saying a great deal.

LIEUT. WILTSE FILES REPLY.

Officer of Marines Pays His Debts—No Court-Martial, Says Lawyer.

Through his counsel, Hiram Mann, of Brooklyn, Lieut. Franklin S. Wiltse of the Marine Corps, against whom charges of failing to pay certain debts alleged to have been contracted by him, were made to the Navy Department, has filed his answer to the complaint with Secretary Metcalf. The Lieutenant has also paid the debts complained of, but no decision in the matter has as yet been rendered by the Secretary of the Navy. A libel suit may grow out of the charges made against the officer of marines.

Hiram Mann of 90 Pierrepont Street, Brooklyn, who is attorney for Lieut. Wiltse, took occasion last night to correct certain reports about the case which have been published. Wiltse is a son of the late Rear Admiral Wiltse, and is a member of a prominent family. His mother lives in Central Park West. The complaint against him was made by J. S. Maroney, a Philadelphia merchant, to Brig. Gen. Elliott of the Marine Corps, who placed the matter before Secretary Metcalf.

Lawyer Mann said last night that the report that the Lieutenant was to be courtmartialed was untrue. The charges, he said, were still in the secretary's hands.

"The Lieutenant's debts," said he, "did not exceed $1,000 all together, and were most of them of a routine character. The one of which Maroney complains was not contracted individualy by Lieut. Wiltse. About a year ago he was a member of a marine officers' mess at the Brooklyn Navy Yard. Some of the supplies for this mess came from Maroney, in Philadelphia. While he was not the caterer of the mess, it was convenient that Lieut. Wiltse should order most of the goods from Maroney.

"In time most of the mess was split up, some of the members being sent to the Philippines, others to Panama, and some to stations elsewhere. Maroney demanded of Wiltse that he pay the mess bill of $200. Wiltse offered to pay his share of the same, but did not consider it just or reasonable that he should be held responsible for the whole.

"He suggested that Maroney communicate with the other members of the disbanded mess. Maroney, however, made written charges against the Lieutenant, who has now filed his answer to the complaint. He paid all the debts he had individually contracted, and then, although I advised him not to do so, paid the $200 owed to Maroney by the mess.

"Lieut. Wiltse has been on sick leave most of the last year, but returned to active duty at the Brooklyn yard on March 20. In his complaint Maroney accused Wiltse of falsehood and made derogatory reflections against him. The Lieutenant feels that he has been libeled in this respect and contemplates bringing a suit."

Women Poker Players Held.

Mrs. Jeanne Favre, who was arrested in a Seventh Avenue boarding house on Friday night while playing poker with three young women and a man, was held in $1,000 bail on a charge of keeping and maintaining a gambling house by Magistrate Moss in the West Side Court yesterday, the examination being set for Tuesday. The three young women arrested with her were discharged. All the women cheerfully admitted that they were playing poker when arrested.

Morris Lippman Killed by a Fall.

Morris Lippman, a retired real estate operator, was instantly killed by a fall at his home, 249 West Fifty-first Street, yesterday. Mr. Lippmen, who was wealthy, fell from a window in his apartment on the fourth floor, to the street. No one saw the fall, but neighbors, hearing the noise of the fall, ran to his assistance. They notified his sister, Miss Henrietta Lippman, and summoned Dr. Kaufman of 52 East Fifty-eighth Street, who said that death had been instantaneous. Lippman was a member of Temple Emanu-El and a contributor to various Hebrew charities.

LOZIER

REMARKABLE WEIGHT DISTRIBUTION

¶ In describing a recent Automobile Show, "Motor World" has this to say: "THE LOZIER MOTOR CAR is of the heavy, stanch type, which is so much in demand by long-distance tourists, and its worth stands out all over it."

¶ The weight of this car shown on the scales would have surprised the writer of the above. ONE OF THE WORLD'S BIGGEST CARS—WITH 117-INCH WHEEL BASE—36-INCH WHEELS—HEAVY I-BEAM SOLID FORGED FRONT AND REAR AXLES—40 H. P. MOTOR—AND SEVEN-PASSENGER BODY. IT WEIGHS WITH LAMPS, HORN AND COMPLETE EQUIPTMENT ONLY 3050 POUNDS.

¶ WE BELIEVE THE LOZIER MOTOR CAR TO BE THE LIGHTEST CAR OF ITS SIZE IN AMERICA. It looks "the heavy, stanch type," which it really is, yet it is light in actual pounds weight. How this result is accomplished, through correct construction and clever weight distribution and use of material, is worth investigating at our Salesrooms.

RIOT OVER THEIR PAYDAY.

Italian Laborers Tear Clothes Off Policeman—Reserves to Rescue.

A misunderstanding as to an altered pay day among 800 Italian longshoremen and laborers employed at the pier of the Bueh Terminal Company, foot of Forty-third Street, South Brooklyn, led to an attack upon a policeman by the Italians and the calling out of the reserves of near-by stations yesterday afternoon.

The Italians had been paid on Saturday, as a rule, but last week notice was posted to the effect that Monday would be the pay day hereafter. The Italians, however, did not seem to understand this, and gathered at a spot on the pier, expecting their money. When this did not materialize they began to abuse the company's clerks. Policeman John Campion, on a report to the Fourth Avenue Station that there was trouble at Pier 5, was sent to the pier.

Upon his arrival he was warmly greeted in a foreign tongue. When he alone attempted to disperse the men he was set upon, beaten, and his clothes were torn off. Meanwhile the clerks in near-by stores had telephoned to Police Headquarters, which had in turn dispatched the reserves from the Fourth Street Station. The reinforcements, upon their arrival at the pier, charged the Italians with nightsticks and then fired a number of revolver shots into the air. These latter had the desired effect. The Italians scattered and fled. Policeman Campion was treated by an

FINANCIAL MARKETS

Market Weak Throughout Session, Closing Near Lowest of the Day.

HUGE EXPANSION IN LOANS

Both Loans and Deposits at Year's Maximum—Large Increase in Cash and Decrease in Surplus.

Losses of from 1 to 5 points in the active stocks occurred yesterday on a volume of business which closely approximated the total trading during the five-hour session of Friday. The market was weak from the opening and continued so till the close. The rallies from the low figures of the day were for the most part insignificant, amounting, with few exceptions, to small fractions. Reading and Canadian Pacific among the active issues were the only ones that closed as much as a point above the lowest of the day, and Reading, despite its recovery, showed a net loss of 2¾ points. Pennsylvania, with a loss of 1¼ points, closed at the lowest; Atchison lost 1⅝, Great Northern 4¾, Northern Pacific 3½, Southern Pacific 3⅛, and Union Pacific 3¼. The largest losses among the industrials were 2½ in Amalgamated Copper, 5¼ in American Smelters, and 1⅝ in United States Steel.

The decline in prices continued after, but was scarcely accelerated by the publication of the bank statement. The showing made by the banks was less unfavorable than had been expected in some quarters on Friday at least regarding the changes in cash holdings and in surplus reserve, but the prediction of a heavy increase in loans was more than realized. The increase in that item amounted to no less than $36,968,300, which brought the loans of the associated banks up to $1,090,657,100. This is slightly in excess of the total loans on Feb. 9 last and exceeds the loans reported at any time within a year. The increase in deposits was even larger, amounting to $44,948,800, being approximately the sum of the increase in loans and that in cash, the latter amounting to $7,648,000. Only in this item of cash increase, which represented under the average system the effects of the payments made by the Government to the banks during the previous week, was yesterday's bank statement in any sense favorable. The reduction in surplus, despite this increase in cash, amounted to $3,588,300, bringing the amount of cash held in excess of requirements down to $15,852,925. While this figure compares favorably with the $4,772,500 surplus reported at this time last year, the surplus now must be regarded in the light of the present movement in the loan and deposit items rather than in reference to the position of the banks this time a year ago. Emphasis is likely to be laid on the fact that loans are now at the maximum for at least a year past, notwithstanding the collapse in the stock market and the liquidation incidental thereto, and the question is likely to be asked to what further extent the loan expansion is likely to go and why it is that loans are larger now by many millions than they were immediately prior to the collapse in the stock market. The conclusion seems almost inevitable that less stocks were liquidated during the decline than was generally supposed, and that the volume of securities which are still being carried with the banks is very large. This at all events is one of the explanations that has been advanced in banking circles for the failure of the loan account to reflect adequately the contraction in stock market values. The shifting of loans from out of town banks to New York banks in consequence of the decline in interest rates doubtless played an important part in the loan increase reported yesterday, but the magnitude of the expansion in the loan account is certain to cause the bank position in this city to be watched with close scrutiny.

"Sooner or later we shall realize that there is danger in the situation that permits the loaning of $200,000,000 or $300,000,000 of out-of-town money directly in this market, without proper reserve," remarked one of the big bankers yesterday when the bank statement appeared. "That increase in loans, to my mind, means nothing more than that country banks have been calling loans here, and, as it always happens in such cases, we have to shoulder the responsibility. You must understand that much of this country money is loaned without reserve of any kind. Some day the fact will be demonstrated that a call loan cannot be called at a moment's notice, and with these obvious facts in view, some step ought to be taken to change the situation. The last report of the banks to the Controller of the Currency is worth study. It presents conditions that I do not like. They can be remedied, although in doing so some of our banks here may have to take a vigorous position in the matter of loans from out of town."

This question of loans by out-of-town banks is a perennial one and one that commands serious attention in very important quarters. The man quoted has figured in many movements for a better adjustment of conditions in this respect, and he takes the case seriously. One point to which he objects particularly is a practice due almost wholly to the complaisance and goodwill of the local banks of making loans for out-of-town banks and guaranteeing them. He regards the practice as bad and suggests that there is even a question as to its strict legality.

Liquidation was in evidence in the market yesterday, and the quotations gave an inkling of its character. Supplementing the tape indications was some very positive information as to the source and necessity of the liquidation. It is always well, of course, to take any kind of information in the financial district with a liberal grain of salt, but the foundation for the belief that individual operators were still unloading is at present very good. Coupled with this adverse influence on the market was the renewed activity of the bearish element, and stocks responded readily to their efforts to depress them. The market presented an extremely weak appearance, and the bank statement emphasized the unfavorable sentiment.

While a bad bank statement had been expected, the loan item surprised even the pessimistically inclined. The deduction was made that the nature of the bank statement must be known in advance. This fact may be admitted without any reflection on the Clearing House, for preliminary estimates of bankers based on a knowledge of the conditions of the loan and cash item of half a dozen banks is all that is necessary to give an idea of the nature of the statement of the entire list of associated banks.

High-priced issues were under pressure, and Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Union Pacific, and stocks of that class showed both liquidation and bearish effort. Amalgamated Copper was not neglected by the bears, and the emphatic gossip concerning the metal market conditions showed a little preliminary preparation for the attack. The bear crowd is in an excellent position, and its makeup or personnel has not been changed of late, for there have been few converts from the pessimistic quarter to the bull crowd.

"Although I am in close touch with the business situation," said the head of a big manufacturing concern doing business primarily with electric railroads, "I must confess that I have been very much mistaken at times with regard to the standing of many concerns. I have been very conservative with regard to the business outlook and believed that retrenchment was a necessity and not the result of any temporary situation. When we received an order, three months' delivery, from a concern in the West, I was inclined to doubt their ability to take care of the financial end of the proposition on delivery. We asked our credit man to investigate closely, and he returned the statement that not only was the credit of our customer good, but they wanted to know if they couldn't pay cash on a favorable discount. This took the conceit out of me. We agreed on the discount, got the cash, and will deliver the goods promptly. But my theory of contracted credit has been exploded."

When the stock market becomes dull the commission houses with wire connections feel it very much. There is always a little doing over the wires, but the expense of maintaining an elaborate wire system is tremendous. Just at present commission business in any of the important houses is light, and the only provision made against such dull times is the fact that grain, cotton, and coffee orders are also received over the same wires. Two big houses may join in a wire system from a certain point; for instance, all the orders received in cotton south of a certain point are transmitted to a central distributing point over the joint system and then relayed to New York over the individual wires. The management of this wire system is intrusted usually to an expert operator who has graduated from the key. There are some houses in town where one of the partners is himself a former operator, and can thus give direct personal supervision to even the intimate details of their wire system.

Days of activity in the stock market, and particularly days when stocks are breaking, develop arduous duties for at least one man and probably two men in every brokerage office. Naturally every employe is extremely busy, but keen responsibility falls on the clerk or the partner who looks out for margins. One of the distasteful duties in every brokerage office is the calling for margins. When the market is quiet this is not so bad, as the demand is then not so urgent, but when prices are breaking a little delay on the telephone or some difficulty in locating a customer makes many anxious moments. Customers, as a rule, anticipate margin calls, but there are always men who feel resentful when more margin is demanded. Gradually customers are being educated up to the fact that it is the broker who does the large part of the work in trading, that it is he who takes the burden and the risk in carrying stocks, and this common-sense fact has gradually been borne in on the minds of traders until they do their best to anticipate calls for funds, and thus lighten the difficulties of every brokerage house in a time of stress.

When call money rates advance above 6 per cent., and are maintained at a figure in excess of that rate for a period, it is curious to note how anxious many brokerage houses are to find out exactly what rate their brethren in the business are going to charge their customers for the month. Formerly brokers charged only 6 per cent., no matter what the prevailing rates were during the preceding thirty days, that is, if they were in excess of 6 per cent. on the average, but that was changed by the Stock Exchange ruling. Brokers have to figure closely on their interest rates, and time money is a helpful factor in keeping the average down when call money is ruling high. Consequently, a close watch has to be kept on the money market to get the best averages, although the carrying of time money in large amounts is not liked.

So far as can be learned, no formal decision has been reached yet as to whether the entire Assay Office force and the business done here now will be moved to Philadelphia pending the erection of the new building. The indications point to the continuance of the office with the help of the Philadelphia department. The present Assay Office consists of two buildings. The front building was erected in 1823 for the United States Bank. It was purchased in 1853 for the Assay Office and a rear building with just a passage connection added. It appears that the rear building developed structural defects. It is now being torn down. When the building on that site is completed, if the front building is maintained intact until then, the force will move into the new building in the rear and the entire structure will be then completed in architectural conformity with the Sub-Treasury.

If the plans of the President of the Bethlehem Steel Corporation are carried out, open hearth rails will be a specialty of these mills hereafter. There are no Bessemer converters at the Bethlehem mills, and Mr. Schwab believes that the open hearth rail can be turned out more cheaply than by the Bessemer process. He believes also that the open hearth gives a better rail. When the new buildings at Bethlehem are completed the plant will stretch for miles and it will be the biggest individual plant in the country.

Apropos of rail making, it might be noted that one of the men on whom Collis P. Huntington depended a great deal when he was building the Central Pacific and the Southern Pacific is to-day just as active as he was in those strenuous days of railroad making. One of the first men to sell rails to Huntington and to take his bonds and dispose of them was Sidney W. Hopkins. He recalls the time when Mr. Huntington paid $84 and $85 a ton for iron rails of 56 pounds and had them shipped around the Horn to save freight charges incident to the transshipment at the Isthmus. Later, when the Government subsidy on the Central Pacific permitted it, the rails were sent by way of the Isthmus. These were strenuous days, when any one who predicted steel rails at $28 a ton would have been classed as a dreamer.

LONDON EXPECTS CHEAPER MONEY

Half Point Drop in Bank's Rate May Be Only a Beginning.

LITTLE HELP TO STOCKS

Cautious Eye Kept on New York for Fear of Further Drain on Funds.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES. Copyright, 1907.

LONDON, April 13.—The reduction in the rate of the Bank of England has contributed a certain amount of cheerfulness to the Stock Exchange, but it has not been followed by increased activity in the markets or by a notable buoyancy in stocks. The action of the Bank Directors appears to have been discounted so fully that there actually came a general decline in prices when it was announced.

Had the Directors made a cut of a full point instead of a half point it would have been different. Four and a half per cent., it is held, is not a low enough rate to encourage investment, nor one high enough to coax money into the stock markets for loaning purposes. The drop from 5 per cent. to 4½ is regarded simply as a start toward cheap money.

Moreover, it is well known that the London County Council is coming into the city next week with a big issue of 3½ per cent. stock, which it is purposed to offer on tempting terms, and it is quite certain that when this issue is taken up there will not be an enormous amount of money available for use in stock operations.

It is expected that the Bank of England next week will take off another half point from its rate, but it is not assumed that the stock markets will reap all the benefit of this reduction, nor that the still further cheapening of money will be followed by a great enlargement of the volume of Stock Exchange business.

Cheaper money might easily give trade an additional stimulus, and if it should, trade would absorb perhaps more of it than stocks. Then there is the never to be forgotten possibility of New York coming to London for funds to finance its legitimate area of speculation and operations. London is well pleased with New York's recent behavior, but is not unmindful of the changed conditions in America which might lead to a changed attitude on the part of New York bankers toward British gold. So now, as formerly, caution is the watchword. The only difference seems to be that they don't spell it with a big C.

THE FOREIGN MARKETS.

Developments of Yesterday in London, Paris, and Berlin.

LONDON, April 13.—The supplies of money in the market to-day considerably exceeded the demand. Discounts were easy.

A steady undertone prevailed on the Stock Exchange, but the business was of the usual Saturady dimensions. Consols and Home Rails attracted moderate investment purchases, while foreigners had the benefit of Paris support. Japanese imperial sixes of 1904 closed at 101¾.

Americans opened at parity, but showed irregularity. Dealers here were indisposed to operate pending a definite lead from New York. Only a small amount of business was transacted, and the market closed irregular with price rather heavy.

The Indian Secretary secured an option to-day on $750,000 in gold due here shortly.

Bullion amounting to £17,000 was taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Madrid, 11.50; Lisbon, 2.75.

Bar silver steady, 30 7-16d per ounce.

Money, 2@2½ per cent.

The rate of discount in the open market for short bills is 2½ per cent.; for three months' bills 2 9-16@2⅝ per cent.

PARIS, April 13.—On the Bourse to-day there was a firm tendency through out. Russian imperial 4s closed at 73.40, and Russian bonds of 1904 at 491.00.

The private rate of discount was 3 5-16 per cent.

Three per cent. rentes, 94 francs 57½ centimes for the account.

Exchange on London, 25 francs 23 centimes for checks.

BERLIN, April 13.—Trading on the Bourse to-day was extremely stagnant.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 48¾ pfennige for checks.

Discount rates—Short bills, 3½ per cent.; three months' bills, 4⅝ per cent.

THE COTTON MARKET.

Active, Confident Trading, Closes at 1 to 7 Points Net Gain.

The cotton market was active yesterday, and during the last half hour trading was livelier than for several weeks, both buyers and sellers showing greater confidence. The opening was steady at unchanged prices to an advance of 8 points, and the close steady at an advance of from 1 to 7 points. Sales for the half session were estimated at about 100,000 bales. At the opening there was buying promoted by big English spot sales, low temperatures, and reported snow in the South, bullish visible supply figures, and lighter receipts.

The English spot market was 8 points higher on sales of 10,000 bales. The visible supply statement indicated a decrease in visible American cotton for the week of 9,127 bales, against 57,879 last year.

The range of contract prices in the local market was as follows:

GRAIN AND PROVISIONS.

WHEAT.—The market started out with a continuation of Friday's late strength, based on dry weather and bugs in the Southwest, but soon began to show evidences of unloading, continuing under pressure until the last half hour, when there was covering by shorts, who feared unfavorable developments before Monday. Killing frosts occurred at several points in Kansas and Missouri, while Northwest advices claimed that Spring seeding would be much delayed by the wintry conditions. Liverpool was disappointing, but Berlin closed 1 to 1¼ marks higher and Budapest 5 points up. Cash wheat in New York was firm. Prices the basis of 83¾c for No. 2 red, in elevator, and 85¾c, free on board, afloat; No. 1 Northern, Duluth, 91¾c, and No. 2 hard, Winter, 83c, free on board, afloat, opening navigation.

CORN.—The market was not especially active, but displayed a firm tone early in the session on steady cables. Professionals sold toward noon, causing a setback, but a second rally toward 1 o'clock, helped by seaboard clearances of 412,000 bushels, again gave the market a better tone. Exporters took 5 loads. No. 2 corn in New York was quoted 57½c, elevator, and 54c, free on board, afloat; No. 2 white, 57c, and No. 2 yellow, 54c, free on board, afloat.

THE TRIAL OF THAW AS SEEN BY A JUROR

An Analysis of the Case in All Its Aspects Together with Estimates of Those Who Played the Leading Parts in the Drama.

DEMING B. SMITH.

Comments Regarding the Contributions Made by the Medical Gentlemen.

OSCAR A. PINK.

GEORGE PFAFF.

The pictures on this page and on the page immediately following are likenesses of the jurors who served through the trial of Thaw. They are from drawings made by Mr. Brearley, the writer of the accompanying article, in the occasional odd moments which came to the jury durh g the course of their long confinement.

Impressions Made Upon Silent Man in the Jury Box by the Defendant and His Wife.

JOSEPH B. BOLTON.

HARRY C. BREARLEY.

By HARRY C. BREARLEY, No. 6 of the Thaw Jury.
(Copyright, 1907, by The New York Times Co.)

A PROMINENT case was approaching its hearing, and already the newspapers began to blossom into premonitory headlines; but these were noted with but slight interest by one whose pathway seemed utterly apart from all connection with the coming event, until —presto—there he was in the midst of it! The writer had just returned from a business luncheon in which plans requiring his active participation were discussed at length when he was addressed by a polite young man with a yellow slip of paper, which proved to be a subpoena for jury panel commanding his presence upon the following morning.

The Criminal Building was humming with suppressed excitement when he obeyed the mandate. Many policemen lined the corridors, files of messengers were in waiting, and numerous would-be spectators were seeking admittance with generally poor success. The yellow slip proved an open sesame and its holder soon found himself in the large courtroom, fronted by Simmons's famous mural paintings, and thronged with other slipbearers like himself. One who had been there earlier pointed out to him the prisoner far up toward the front, and only occasionally to be seen between the heads of others. He appeared usually to be leaning forward, but the back of his head and outline of his cheek were as much as could be seen.

Somewhat nearer were the ladies of his family—a dignified elderly woman in black, with snowy hair, and several younger women, who were heavily veiled. The same informant identified these and said that the young woman in blue was Evelyn Thaw, the real centre of the dramatic story. There was naturally some curiosity on the part of all to see whether she justified the reports of her great beauty, but her thick blue veil gave only a suggestion of regular features and a drooping head. A large and impressively dignified Judge presided, the jury box was partially filled with impressive looking men, and a clarion-voiced clerk rose from time to time to read some name drawn from the box-like wheel before him.

As each name was called a man would rise from some part of the room and pick his way to the front, where, after being sworn, he climbed into a high chair beside the Judge's bench and became the cynosure of all eyes and the target for a fusillade of questions. Men—little and big, old and young, men of many sorts and conditions—went to the chair during the course of the long day, but all seemed to be animated by the common purpose of escaping jury service, and answers seemed often to be more dictated by this desire than by a strict regard for truthfulness. Equally apparent was it that the opposing counsel were exercising the greatest care in making selection.

Some of the panel were so obviously undesirable that few questions were asked before excusing them. Others were upon the rack for a long time, and before the final decision upon a possible candidate it was interesting to note the way in which Mr. Jerome would leave his accustomed post and walk to the far end of the Judge's bench, from which point he could command a profile view. At somewhat rare intervals Mr. Jerome or his assistant, Mr. Garvan, would sit down after examining, with the remark, "The people are content;" but Messrs. Hartridge or Gleason, who examined for the defense, would usually reply, "We will excuse the juror," and the latter would pass from his brief pause in the legal limelight back into the outer world. At last, toward noon, one tall young man met with the double approval, and stood, at the clerk's suggestion, while another tall young man arose and faced him from down in front. The clerk intoned, "Juror, look upon the defendant. Defendant, look upon the juror," administered the oath, and the tall young man took one of the vacant chairs in the jury box.

During the afternoon another chair was similarly occupied, and the writer's hopes that the box would be filled before his own name was reached seemed reasonable. As the defendant, in charge of a special officer, left the room he was looked at with much interest by those who had come that day for the first time. He was tall and slender, with a broad face and somewhat peculiarly staring eyes, eyes so often described as "showing much of the whites." His hair was rather long, very heavy, and obviously needed trimming. His bearing was erect and rather more than merely confident, for it seemed to express in his half smile and his springy step considerable self-satisfaction, as though well pleased with the attention he attracted. During this time the defendant had appeared to be much interested, and could be seen peering from one side or the other of the questioner, who stood in front, or talking earnestly with his counsel. It was evident that he took an active part in the selections.

Next morning came the writer's turn, and, with some misgivings, he found himself facing the roomful. At once began the fusillade of questions, questions so ingeniously searching that they could neither be parried nor evaded without disregard of the oath to "well and truly answer," and, after nearly half an hour of vain effort, he found himself practically checkmated. A final appeal for release upon the ground of urgent business necessity was answered by the District Attorney with a quiet smile and the observation, "That falls upon cold ears." And then another seat in the box was filled.

What with the excuse of several already selected, it was Friday night before the tedious process of choosing jurors was ended and the jury at last complete after the examination of more than three hundred men. Saturday and Sunday intervened, and upon Monday twelve men settled themselves to give attention to a trial which was destined to break all records in the length of its conduct.

Before proceeding with the trial it may be well to say a few words in regard to the much discussed imprisonment of the jurors, lasting from the beginning of the selection to the sad death of Mrs. Bolton, a period of more than three weeks to the first jurors. There can be no question that great efforts were made to provide for the comfort and pleasure of the twelve, as was evidenced by the Sunday drives and the installation first of a pianola and later of a phonograph for their entertainment. On the other hand, the rules regarding surveillance were carried out in letter as well as spirit. The jurors were permitted to receive visitors, but no words might be spoken, not even to their wives, unless an officer and another juror were present as auditors. No juror might use a telephone nor receive a letter which had not been opened and read before he saw it. Similarly, the letters he wrote must be handed unsealed to the Captain, who passed upon their propriety before mailing. Newspapers were censored rigidly. Those which reached the prisoners must have all reference to the case cut from the pages, and the mutilated condition of the resulting bunches of ribbons bore indirect witness to the amount of publicity which was being given. It was a common saying that the "white sales" of the department stores were the only subjects left for the jurors to read about.

This rigid surveillance was, indeed, at the hands of courteous officers, for whom the men came to feel a genuine regard, especially in the case of Capt. Lynch, and yet it was highly galling to American citizens who were not even under charge of misdemeanor. It lasted until February 14, when the sad event already referred to caused a sudden abandonment of the extraordinary precautions, and the jurors were simply put upon their honor not to read of the case nor discuss it. It is safe to say that this agreement was most religiously observed, and that all interests were quite as fully protected as during the period of confinement.

Indeed, it is altogether likely that the State was saved a mistrial by this very relaxation, since the unaccustomed habits of life imposed had already somewhat affected the health of several and might easily have led to serious illness during the long weeks which followed.

The writer also wishes to state unequivocally that never has he been approached, directly or indirectly, in an attempt at "jury fixing," except in the case of one letter, which was manifestly of crank origin. He believes the same condition to be true of the other jurors.

For another point, the reports of poker playing and heavy gambling among the jurors may be emphatically denied. Not a game of poker was played during the entire period, and no gambling whatever was indulged in. The party learned with much indignation of the charges made against them by one of the city papers.

But enough of the jury, who might in their sudden acquisition of notoriety imagine themselves the central figures of the case, instead of a mere incident in its conduct. Monday, April 4, brought the formal opening, and a sudden sobering sense of the serious business in hand.

The writer has no purpose of going into any narrative of the events of the following weeks, for the flying pencils of sixty or seventy reporters and correspondents bore witness to the completeness with which all news features were being covered. From the jury's standpoint the case was of more than merely casual interest. It was a tremendous human drama, far exceeding in impressiveness any which might appear upon the theatrical stage. Here was every element of the dramatic in a magnified form, and the prominence of the chief figures was, after all, the least of its claims to attention. Viewed in any light it dealt with human nature, elemental passions, phases of civilization, the power of sentiment, the clashing of interests, contrasts of character, and such revelations of mind and soul as to make it almost a psychological laboratory.

The well-known victim, the headstrong scion of a prominent and wealthy family, the noted beauty—these three whose destinies became so dramatically interwoven might fairly have been chosen as typical of classes and illustrative of conditions in a broadly general way. That this was true is attested by the almost universal interest the case attracted, and it is unthinkable that its only, or even its chief, result should be the decision regarding the defendant. Far more was at stake for society and for humanity than the destiny of any single individual.

Notable was the case as well in the brilliancy of its conduct. The jury witnessed repeated intellectual swordplay of extraordinary skill, which was all the more appreciated when lapse of time had brought a measure of familiarity with the legal points involved. The aggressive District Attorney and "the learned counsel from the Pacific Slope" were sufficiently well matched to call forth each other's resources in full degree over many points which one or the other wished to get in evidence before the listening jury, and that greater jury which reads the papers.

It was interesting to watch these two in action from such a point of vantage as the jury box. Mr. Jerome, restless and incisive, walked to and fro while framing his questions, some of which were even delivered with his back to the witness. His voice, vibrant, rasping or explosive, as the occasion might require, had a distinctly dominant quality and enforced attention to whatever he might say. There was, perhaps, something of a feline impression produced by his peculiar round glasses, his frequent pacing, and the occasional lightninglike revelations of reserve force.

This last was particularly evident in the celebrated cross-examination of Dr. Wiley, when the swift precision of his strokes and his amazing grasp of an intricately technical subject were notable. The whole was suggestive of a cat playing with a mouse, to a degree which was obviously painful to the unhappy witness. The jurors, though forbidden to discuss the case among themselves, could not refrain from looking at each other with a significant "Whew!" when in the security of the jury room. Comment was unnecessary. Most of the twelve had been admirers of the District Attorney before the case began, and all felt a strengthening of their admiration through this opportunity for close-range study.

In Delphin Delmas, the famous California lawyer, it was early evident that he had a foeman worthy of his steel.

The two men were so evenly matched in intellectual acuteness, in alert watchfulness, and in dogged persistence, that it might be difficult to choose between them. In manner, however, they differed widely. The Californian exhibited no restlessness, but stood or sat at ease while he framed his questions or listened intently to those of the opposition. His voice was pleasing and usually modulated to a conversational tone, but occasionally would be thrown out with the peal of a trumpet. He had, too, a nice understanding of dramatic pauses, indeed, his whole sense of dramatic values was so conspicuous in the way he marshaled his witnesses and his skillful manner of laying just the right degree of emphasis upon emotional points that it was easy to believe that a great actor had been lost to the stage in the production of an eminent lawyer. There was, if one may be permitted the term, a certain virtuosity about his conduct of the case that was not lost upon the juror.

CHARLES D. NEWTON.

Mr. Delmas's habits of speech were those of rather elaborate courtesy, being frequently interlarded with, "if it please your Honor," or references to the "learned District Attorney," who sometimes retorted in banter. His invincible good humor seemed to be always on hand, while that of his opponent occasionally wore a trifle thin. On the whole, however, both counsel displayed remarkable equanimity considering the exhausting character of their labors.

The jury also came to feel a deep respect for the presiding Justice, Thomas Fitzgerald, a man of few, but weighty, words. After the lengthy and ingenious argument of some knotty point of evidence, when the lay mind was lost in a maze of technical complication, it was illuminating to see how unerringly he went to the heart of the issue with one or two brief sentences, and then renderd a decision which commended itself at once as being eminently just. In his hands law became the formulation of common sense. The jury felt grateful for his apparent desire to expedite the case, an attitude often in marked contrast to that shown by the opposing counsel.

Asst. Dist. Atty. Garvan, for the people, and Messrs. Hartridge, Gleason, McPike, O'Reilly, and Peabody, for the defense, were in constant consultation with the chief counsel, but appeared only incidentally in the conduct of the case. There can be no doubt, however, that from the legal standpoint a remarkably high standard of ability was represented.

Of all the witnesses summoned by either side none attracted such attention as did the wife of the defendant, and interest was on tiptoe in the densely packed courtroom when the clerk called aloud for "Evelyn Nesbit Thaw." It was with genuine astonishment that most of the spectators got their first sight of the witness as she took her seat in the box. Instead of the dashing beauty generally expected, their first impression was of a rather pathetic little figure dressed in blue and with a wide blue hat. She was pale, girlishly pretty, but not in a striking way, and looked so youthful that it was something of a surprise to hear counsel address her as "madam."

It may be a trifle unkind to intimate that this girlish effect was emphasized by her clothing and the way in which she dressed her hair, but with her husband's life at stake could she really be blamed if toilet resources were called to aid her effort? Jurors were but human, after all, and the normal man's instinctive chivalry was too valuable an asset to be overlooked in so great a struggle.

The quick glance which shot between husband and wife seemed one of mutual affection, and then, while unmistakably dreading her ordeal, she took up the narration of her story with a composure which could only be wondered at.

The terrible details of that story have become already only too familiar, but the writer can answer for at least one juror who was fairly sickened by their revelations. As the counsel led her by gentle, but inexorable, questioning from step to step through the several years preceding the tragedy, it became sharply evident that the "unwritten law" was, after all, the defense's main reliance, although introduced under cloak of the legal defense of insanity. This clever manoeuvre was thoroughly appreciated in the jury box. However, her story made a profound impression which no subsequent events served to efface.

Her surprisingly full, clear, and accurate memory during long days upon the stand and the success with which she bore a terrific cross-examination from a master of that art impressed most of the jury with the substantial truthfulness of her narration. Mr. Jerome was able to bring to light further revolting details, but did not materially shake her evidence. To his credit, it must be said that he manifested a desire to spare the witness, and treated her with as great consideration as his duties permitted.

Later attempts at discrediting this evidence through the famous "Hummel affidavit" failed at convincing the jury, largely because of the circumstances surrounding its origin. Taken all in all, she was undoubtedly an important and effective witness.

Possibly next in importance for the defense, but bearing more directly upon the legal defense of insanity, were those strange, disorderly letters, known as "exhibits A to I." These were scrutinized with nearly as great care by the jury as by the cautious Dr. Evans. The much discussed "will" and "codicil" seemed relatively of less importance, and while indicating the presence of a dominating idea, were hardly felt under all of the circumstances to be necessarily irrational. Here again there seemed to be as the real underlying motive in their presentation the reassertion of facts bearing upon the unavowed defense of "unwritten law."

As to the batteries of expert alienists, if one excepts the uncomfortable Dr. Weile, the deliberate Dr. Evans and his peppery colleague, Dr. Wagner, their examinations were monotonously similar—the recital of a formidable list of degrees and honors by way of indorsement, the reading of an involved hypothetical question by the counsel, the witness's opinion in reply, and a more or less protracted cross-examination. And yet there was one important difference, even in this similarity.

After various imposing and impressively qualified alienists had promptly answered "rational" to an hour and a quarter long question, various other equally imposing alienists with equally impressive qualifications answered the same question quite as promptly with the word "irrational." It seemed from the jury box almost a waste of time to place them upon the stand to give an answer so foreordained, and one felt flippantly inclined to suggest that they be stood up in line for purposes of cancellation that it might be seen by the remainder which side to credit. If the "reductio ad absurdam" in this kind of evidence has ever been reached, it surely was in this case.

With the testimony of Drs. Evans and Wagner the situation was somewhat different, since each was able to give direct evidence of personal examination and the jury had some chance to exercise its own powers of deduction. Dr. Evans, with the discomfiture of Dr. Weile freshly in mind, was not to be led into any trap of hasty speech. From the jury box he appeared one of those rare souls who are unconscious of time, since they inhabit eternity, and as his incumbency of the stand dragged through session after session the humor of the situation began to appeal even to the impatient twelve. And yet he proved a strong witness and the account of his earliest visits to the defendant was considered carefully by the jurors. Incidentally, it may be said that it was no small achievement to have given currency to two such instantaneously popular expressions as "brainstorm" and "genteel scratches."

Dr. Wagner's testimony was strongly corroborative, but brought little new light. Both displayed such wariness of any attempt to pin them down to definite expressions of opinion that they had little weight apart from the direct material facts to which they bore witness.

There was but one other notable witness for the defense, and here again the hand of the master-dramatist was seen when Mr. Delmas closed his case-in-chief with the testimony of the elder Mrs. Thaw. Profound sympathy was felt by every juror for the brave old lady whose mother's heart bore her, not without tears, through an ordeal from which her nature obviously shrank. The counsel, keenly watchful of the effect of her words, stopped her at what he sensed as exactly the right point and closed his case, although she apparently had something more to tell.

The jurors were undoubtedly affected, some of them to tears, and one of them remarked, as they passed into the jury room, "Mother love is the most beautiful thing in the world." In the perspective of subsequent weeks it can be seen that the effect of her testimony was emotional rather than intellectual, and that it was so purposed by the counsel. Still, she brought some new evidence in the shape of material facts which were by no means to be disregarded.

Upon the side of the prosecution the sensational testimony of Mr. James Clinch Smith was easily the feature of the case. The early establishment of the facts of the killing seemed almost a work of supererogation, since they were not disputed by the defense, but this quietly impassive man who came dramatically upon the stage at the eleventh hour and filled a brief, but important, gap in the case so unexpectedly, created almost a climax.

From his relationship with the victim the jury might have largely discredited his statements but for two facts. First, the nature and phrasing of the conversation reported verbatim by the witness accorded so closely with the observed characteristics of the defendant as to bear strong internal evidence of probability, and, secondly, the brevity of the cross-examination and the subsequent failure of the defense to put on any evidence otherwise accounting for this particular period, were too marked to escape notice.

The introduction of Abraham Hummel, together with his famous affidavit, need not have been so fiercely fought by Mr. Delmas, for it was virtually a fiasco. Hummel had been so picturesquely described in Mrs. Thaw's testimony that there was considerable curiosity to see him in the witness chair. While it might be unkind to indicate the exact degree to which his appearance met expectations, he bore the inspection with much composure, but beyond this carried little weight. Even making material allowances for the story of Evelyn Thaw, there still seemed two reasons for crediting her story to one for that of the ex-attorney.

The real climax was reached when Dr. Hamilton was called to the stand by Mr. Delmas and suddenly appropriated by Mr. Jerome for the purpose of his famous coup in the application for a lunacy commission. All that the jurors were aware of at the time was that a heated debate between counsel occurred almost immediately upon the calling of the witness to the stand, and then that the jury were excused from the room. After an hour they were recalled to the box, and formally dismissed for several days with a solemn injunction against reading any newspaper accounts of what was transpiring, and thus closed the evidential period of the case.

Having left until the last the central figure in the case, a few words are in order about the defendant himself. Seated as he was, immediately adjoining the box, he was an easy subject of study for the jurors from the time when he entered court in response to the clerk's daily "Harry K. Thaw to the bar!" until the closing of the session. His appearance has already been noted in brief—tall, slender, self-satisfied, and rather untidy. Later inspection extending over weeks of short-range study enforced several conclusions.

First. That he expected both acquittal and justification. There was no indication of regret. His bearing was almost uniformly confident and rarely betrayed agitation. Occasionally he would engage in earnest conversation with some of his counsel, but most of the time was spent in opening and reading numerous letters or in listening with a quiet smile to the evidence. The trial seemed, upon the whole, an agreeable experience, and there was no apparent shrinking from the resultant notoriety.

Second. That he was both egotistical and headstrong. His manner with his counsel was unconsciously imperious. His whole bearing was of one who had been used from infancy to having his own way and was impatient of either restraint or suggestion.

Third. That he was of a highly strung, nervous, and emotional temperament. His movements were quick and he spoke with the rapid flow of words, which Dr. Evans styled "logorhea."

Fourth. That he was of an affectionate and in some respects high minded disposition. His glances at his wife and mother were unmistakably fond, but he did not appear to fully appreciate their tremendous sacrifices for him. In other words, his egotism would not permit him to put himself fully into the place of either. His mouth had a rather sweet expression, and though his face gave some evidence of dissipation, it was without trace of grossness.

Fifth. That he sufficiently departed from the normal in mental make-up to be what would ordinarily be called "queer." Whether or not this "queerness" amounted to actual insanity, and whether that insanity, if such existed or had existed, was of a nature to render him at the time of the homicide "unable to know the nature and quality of the act he was committing, or unable to know that it was wrong"—this was the heart of the whole case from the jury's standpoint. There was much that was contradictory in effect.

On the one hand his letters, many of the circumstances of his courtship, the "Comstock letter," and the "codicil" indicated a marked high-mindedness with regard to women, together with a pure and respectful love for Evelyn Nesbit. On the opposite side must be reckoned the fact that for several months succeeding his first proposal he lived with her without the formality of marriage; also that upon her return to New York immediately following this period of extraordinary intimacy, she was apparently rather easily persuaded to credit stories of gross immorality and cruelty on his part.

Allowing fully for Stanford White's great influence over her, it still seems hard to believe that she could have accepted these stories so readily had they been entirely inconsistent with her knowledge of Thaw's nature, since, on the stand, she evinced much force of character.

The case is ended for the time being so far as it concerns the named defendant, but there were other defendants than Harry K. Thaw in this greatest trial of the generation, save only the Dreyfus case in France. Legal Methods were on trial at more than one point; even the Law itself was on trial. The Theatrical Profession was conspicuously on trial, and so were the Inheritance System, the Privileges of Wealth, the Relations of the Sexes, and other fundamental elements of our modern social structure. It is unthinkable that some of the strongly illustrative facts so strikingly thrust before the world's attention should fail of careful consideration by many earnest thinkers, and if such thought results in even a measure of corrective action, then the great expense, the inconvenience, the strain will have been justified to humanity.

Several points only may be even indicated within the limits of this article.

It was a common saying soon after the shooting occurred that the defendant's wealth would secure his release—"get him off," as it was generally phrased, and "jury-fixing" was probably the secret implication. If this had been true and the expenditure of a sufficient number of dollars had been competent to defeat the ends of justice in so conspicuous a case, then it might be as well to conclude that this is a nation of classes drawn on the financial scale, and that law is not operative above a certain degree of wealth.

As a matter of actual fact, the jury was scrupulously determined that the millionaire should have exactly the same consideration which would have been given to another in his place. And yet it is undoubtedly true that wealth was an important factor, in that it insured legal talent of the highest order, who took full advantage of every opportunity which the complications of the law permitted. That a single criminal case should continue through two entire months and parts of two others is in itself a significant fact. This could hardly have happened with a poor man less ably defended.

The possibility of such extraordinary duration is a point which cries aloud for reform. The lawyer might consider this too technical a matter for the lay mind to discuss, and yet it is the layman whose interests are at stake, and in at least one lay mind, even after many weeks of education in the jury box, there rests the conviction that the ends of justice are hampered rather than promoted by the methods in question. In the first place, it makes jury service so formidable that any man capable of earning more than two dollars a day will strenuously seek to avoid it; in the second place, it clogs the courts and makes a much larger equipment necessary to handle the community's legal business, and in the third place it is hard to see wherein much of the time consumed was other than absolutely wasted. If the purpose was, as professed, to impress the minds of the jurors, then a juror may be permitted to state that, in his opinion, every essential point might have been presented with perfect fairness with a saving of weeks of time. How? That is a question for lawmakers to determine, but other communities manage it, and it should be done. It cries aloud for reform!

The old difficulties of the jury system were again emphasized. The writer will not rush in where angels fear to tread. He has no substitute to propose, but there is one matter which proper legislation should speedily safeguard. It would have been an intolerable hardship to the community for the incapacity of a single juror near the end of the case to have caused a mistrial. And yet, considering its length, it is almost a coincidence that twelve men remained fit for duty during the entire period. Two partial remedies suggest themselves—one that a unanimous verdict reached by the remaining eleven should be a legal decision (there is nothing magical in the number twelve); or, if twelve there must be, then that ther should be also a thirteenth substitute juror who could listen to all of the evidence, but have no vote unless called to fill a vacancy. No baseball or football team neglects to have substitutes and no theatrical company overlooks understudies. It is a matter of common sense. Why may not the law also indulge in common sense?

Again, the question of the inheritance of wealth is raised by the circumstances of the case. That large fortunes passing into the hands of those who did not amass them may in some cases be of danger to society has long been academically discussed. One need not be a socialist to realize that society has certain self-protective rights, as witness fire and police regulations, etc. President Roosevelt touched upon some phases of the subject in his recent remarks about "swollen fortunes." This case emphasizes some other phases which are also worthy of careful thought.

There is, however, one other point—omitting many which might be raised—a point which the writer conceives to be quite the most immediately important one growing out of the trial, and one in which he urges energetic action. The details of Evelyn Thaw's story revealed a widespread condition, somewhat suspected, indeed, but surely never before grasped by the respectable part of the community in all of its horror and menace.

The general facts are these: New York City contains fifty or more theatres in which an aggregate of several thousand young women appear upon the stage in the course of a single season. Each season witnesses the accession of a large number of new recruits, selected by managers from among a much larger number of applicants. These recruits are usually little more than girls in age—young girls, in some instances. In many, if not most, cases they are drawn from homes of comparative poverty. Since the selective process pays particular attention to beauty and grace, they represent a high average of physical attractiveness and are continually made aware of the value of this asset.

This is further emphasized by the fact that in their usual first employment as chorus girls or in similar subordinate parts, their appeal is principally to the eye. Such girls, whose very appearance upon the stage is often an expression of revolt against the enforced routine of home life, find themselves suddenly in an environment where late hours are the necessary rule and where many of their accustomed restrictions are laid aside. The vivacity and spirit of camaraderie which so pleasantly characterize the people of the stage unconsciously influence the laying aside of reserve, and about this in itself there would be little to question were it not for the existence of a dissolute class of "men about town," who speedily obtrude themselves upon the "showgirls'" attention.

These men constitute a fairly numerous class who keep closely in touch with theatrical matters and have quick eyes for the appearance of any new girl of special attractiveness. With some it is a casual amusement and may not necessarily pass the bounds of comparative innocence, but with others the purpose is sinister from the first, and a few may be said to make a science of seduction. These men spend money lavishly, and, with the skill of experience, often find little difficulty in dazzling the minds of the immature victims so recently come forth from narrow spheres. By artful approach, the glamor of a brilliant cynicism, actual lovemaking, if need be, or, perhaps, the diabolical suggestion that immorality is universal, and "the only sin is in being found out," they aim, sooner or later, to accomplish their purpose, and the unequal contest ends in tragedy.

To what proportions this debauchery obtains must have been long suspected, but recent revelations cannot have failed to startle and shock the moral sense of the community and nation. Consider it in its seriousness. The "Social Problem," where it concerns willful immorality will hardly be solved by our generation or by many to follow, but this is a different phase of the subject. That a young girl of beauty and perhaps talent, full of the light-hearted trustfulness of inexperience, should elect to support herself by means of the perfectly legitimate employment which the theatre offers, and should thereby become exposed to a peril of the most appalling nature—that this is the history not of an occasional isolated case, but applies to multitudes—this constitutes a matter which appeals for corrective action, and that speedily.

It appeals, first of all, to the theatrical profession itself. All that is said above must not be undersood more sweepingly than actually expressed, and it must always be kept in mind that the stage contains many of the purest and most high minded men and women to be found in any walk of life. Such an appeal would be useless were this not the case. Actors and actresses of this class can hardly be indifferent to the unhappy fate of so many frailer sisters, and it would be an impertinence to disregard them in any suggestions made. The first efforts must be made from within. The profession has abundant ability to inaugurate its own protective measures and can there be any doubt of its willingness? Can there be any doubt of the ripeness of the time?

The writer does not wish to appear quixotic. He recognizes the impossibility of any thought of coercion. Whatever influence is called into play must be of a protective and persuasive rather than a restrictive nature, but is there anything impracticable in the creation of some form of organization within the ranks of the profession and under the inspiration of the stage's natural moral leaders—of whom there are not a few—an organization which should take a beneficent interest in the life of the young recruit from the very beginning and seek to surround her with wholesome influences? Older members of such a body, from their standpoint of greater experience, would be quick to recognize the danger of some associations whose import could hardly be sensed by the thoughtless newcomer, and the helpfulness then manifested might make a worldwide difference in after life. Of course, any such new organization would have to be wisely planned from a knowledge of its own particular conditions. At all events the writer would most urgently bespeak attention and consideration on the part of those who can bring to the subject the wisdom of special training in addition to genuine zeal for the welfare of their fellows. These should be found first of all in the ranks of the theatrical profession, and the question of method may be taken up in due time.

At 2 o'clock on Monday last there was already that indefinable change in the atmosphere which betokened a new stage in the proceedings. The dense crowd of spectators indicated the general desire to hear the far-famed eloquence of the Californian in his summing up, and the attitude of eager expectancy was by no means absent from the jury box. The famous counsel rose with much dignity and faced its occupants, while a hush fell upon the whole courtroom. Slowly and impressively he began to speak. The full, resonant notes of his pleasing voice, the clear enunciation, the deliberate ease of his utterance made listening a pleasure, but it was the pleasure of the audience before the footlights. Everything was dignified, studied, full of the highest art, but it was the art of the tragic stage, and even in its highest flights of impassioned oratory could be seen the careful preparation which showed through diction, intonation, and gesture. One almost seemed to be listening to a tragedy in blank verse, and felt disposed to concede the privileges of poetic license when delightfully quaint metaphors or flowers of speech contrasted strangely with the direct vocabulary of 1907.

The jury listened with unfeigned interest, and some at least were deeply impressed. One false note was soon struck, however. Mr. Delmas emphatically repudiated all resort of "unwritten law," and then spent hours in invoking it by every possible means. For some time argument upon insanity was quite lost sight of, while the oratory built up an allegorical epic in which Thaw, Miss Nesbit, and White moved to and fro in the guise of various metaphors. The self-possessed young man at his side was "Sir Galahad" or "St. George" interchangeably, his youthful wife became usually the "Angel Child," and Stanford White was the "Dragon," the "Tempter," &c. All had a bearing so remote upon legal insanity and so direct upon "Dementia Americana" that it quite fell to the ground when the jury later ignored the latter defense. Much time was also wasted upon Hummel and his affidavit. The scathing denunciation of the little lawyer was undoubtedly calculated to tear a reputation to pieces, but it was first necessary to assume that the reputation previously existed. Mr. Delmas was from California, however, and had not been long in New York.

During Tuesday's session a really effective presentation was made of the insanity defense—the second line of breastworks, although the one upon which the banner was planted—and had the speaker been content to omit his unfortunate invention of "Dementia Americana" a much stronger impression would have been left. Even as it was, all of the jury realized that they had listened to an oration which contained many really great moments, for oration it certainly was from its stately opening to the pervid flights of its peroration.

Mr. Jerome, when it came his turn to speak, presented a contrast at almost every point. Direct, forceful, argumentative, sarcastic, or indignant, as the conditions warranted, ripping through the canvas of the beautiful allegorical pictures, and ignoring both flowing periods and graces of delivery he occupied little more than half the time of his predecessor.

His comparisons were not drawn from mythology, but from Mulberry Street, and his art was that of the branding iron instead of the palette and brush. One would have been glad to hear a trifle less resort to the use of sneer. When a man was on trial for his life it seemed a trifle out of place, but the whole thing was unquestionably effective, and his treatment of the imported "Dementia Americana" struck a responsive note with a New York jury. When he had clearly covered the points of evidence he closed briskly, and the Judge's charge came with businesslike promptness, albeit to the jury's surprise.

The case is ended? Rather the case is just begun. Playing upon one flame does not extinguish the fire, and so long as there is a continuance of conditions which will lead in the ordinary course of events to the recurrence of such outbreaks the case can never be ended. After all, the true progress of civilization must be spiritual, it must concern society's building of character rather than its mastery of material resources. The writer does not agree that the publication of revolting detail is necessarily of evil effect, for in an enlightened community the corrective impulse must follow such an educational episode.

A Skeptic's Views on the Central Kitchen Idea

DOWN in Washington, D. C., there lives a man, by name H. C. Dugdale, who has had more or less experience in co-operative housekeeping somewhat on the line that has been suggested as a solution of the domestic servant problem in Montclair, N. J. Mr. Dugdale is skeptical of the success of the Montclair plan, but is willing to be convinced. To a TIMES reporter he said:

"I read with much interest the article in THE NEW YORK TIMES commenting upon 'The Central Kitchen Plant' of Montclair, N. J.; the more interest because I have been serving prepared meals, delivered to the homes, for the past eight years, starting in as green as a katydid, and learning hourly the peculiarities of human nature that are brought boldly to the front when food is a topic.

"To give a few illustrations of the funny side of the business: Our first sign read simply 'Catering.' This had soon to be changed, as several ladies sent their pet animals to the house for treatment. One sent a colored girl with a cat in a basket, with a note asking if we would please remove a fishbone from the cat's throat, adding that the cat was very dear to her, and that any price would be paid if the sufferings of the feline were immediately and painlessly alleviated. The maid was told that we did not handle cats in any form. She said the sign read 'Catering,' and she had told her mistress it was 'Sure a cat hospital.' The sign was soon changed to 'Family Catering,' in gold letters on black sand. This many read at a glance as 'Family Gathering.' Thinking it was some new sect or society, several came to ask what the gatherings were and when they took place. As a last hope we had a larger sign made reading 'Family Catering Company.' Then we broke the spell.

"The central kitchen plan is not a new one. It is a good one, but our friends in Montclair are mapping out a plan that would swamp a whole county. They propose to farm for eggs, chickens, turkeys, ducks, fruit, vegetables, milk, cream, and butter, when any one of these lines singly is a business of itself. They do not consider practically for a minute that it would take acres and acres of farm land to raise a sufficient quantity of poultry to run such a sized plant as they propose. The chickens would cost them twice as much as they could buy them for from a poultry dealer in market. Vegetable and fruit crops fail sometimes. Then your year's expense has gone, and still goes on. You buy your garden truck just like any other hotel man.

"There are features in human nature that are only brought to the front in the ready meal business, and that otherwise lie dormant for half a century. For instance, one would hardly believe it, but there is a great forgetfulness that comes on a great many people when it comes to putting the soiled dishes and plates back in a basket after the meals. A pretty, odd dish catches the eye and is laid on the dresser. A bright new coffee pot seems handy about the house and is laid aside. Unless the collector for the kitchen company is very careful to see that all vessels that were sent are in the basket when he calls for the soiled things, you can never trace them, and nobody has kept anything. The loss through this channel is very great.

"We once had reason to suspect that one of our patrons was not returning all the dishes we sent. A polite note was sent her, asking that she look around and see if one or two dishes of a certain pattern had not got mixed with her china. She quite indignantly replied that she had nothing that belonged to us, as she always returned the dishes after each meal. We kept tab on her basket for two days, and knew she did not return everything. She lived in a flat, so I went to see her about the matter, and found her calling on the lady in the next flat, the doors of the two flats being wide open.

"On ringing her bell, she came to her friend's door, and, seeing me, asked me to wait until she donned a shirtwaist or something, it being just after breakfast, &c. While she was being made presentable I looked into the dining room and saw the whole breakfast outfit made up of the dishes we had been missing and she denied having. When we got them all in a pile there were twenty-seven pieces, and her sideboard was as bare as a bone.

"The Montclair company proposes to send a menu for their patrons to select from for the meal following. This is simply out of the question. Meals to be sent from a central plant cannot be cooked to order. By the time you had cooked breakfast to order for twenty families it would be long past the breakfast hour of many of them. You must arrange your own menu, have the food cooking continually, say, three kinds of meat, chops or steak for the broiler, ham and eggs for the frying cook, sausage, and some kind of sea food. Pack your meal and send it out. You soon learn what some patrons like or dislike. They never hesitate to tell you."

HOW THE PLAY PAYS IN NEW YORK CITY

An Estimate that Nearly $7,500,000 is Spent on the Drama in Year—a Landlord Comes in for Largest Share—Manager and Author, in Case of Success, Reap Large Profits—Actor Gets His Salary.

THE statement recently put forth that "The Lion and the Mouse" during the six hundred and over performances given of the play in New York had taken in $750,000, has started a good many inquiries as to the profits in the theatrical business. If so much money comes to a single playhouse in the course of a year and a half, what must come to all the theatres of New York, and who gets it?

Theatrical figures are hard to get in exact terms. There is a peculiar mirage that plays all sorts of freaks with theatrical money between its entrance into the treasury and its impingement on the optic nerve of the public. Inflations existed in the mental financing of the playhouses long before the term got into politics. Yet there are some ways of getting at approximate results, as we shall see. There were sixty places of amusement open in New York during the past week. These included one grand opera house, one great concert hall, a hippodrome, and the circus; but it also included thirty-one theatres giving spoken drama, eight devoted to musical comedy, and seventeen given over to vaudeville and so forth.

If we make it our present business to look into the dramatic side only, which accounts for more than half the whole number open, we may count an average of eight performances a week. That would total 248 performances in the week. Although a dozen of these might run up to and over $1,000 a performance, the remainder would not average that. If the grand average was struck at $6,000 a week, it would give a total of $186,000, which, calculated for a season of forty weeks, would give the comfortable total of money spent on the drama in New York for one year at $7,440,000.

Half to the Landlords.

Nearly half of the theatrical receipts, taken as a whole for the city, goes to the landlords of the theatres. They are the only sure winners in the business. So great is the pressure from without to get an entrance into New York that the most insignificant, stuffy, and mouldy theatre is practically sure of a continuity of what are styled "attractions," often, to be sure, in a spirit of pure courtesy, for they are not attractive, and do not attract. The rent must be paid just the same. Between the landlord, that is, the real owner of the property, and the performers stands the house manager. His endeavor is to extract an income between what he can get and what he must give up. Exceptionally, he makes a fine profit, as when a piece has a long run to great receipts. He may make in that case anywhere from $40,000 to $80,000 in a year, but he often is obliged to look cheerful on anything from $10,000 to $20,000, and occasionally he goes broke. Especially is he liable to the latter contingency if he is what is known as a "producing" manager; but also he is in the way of very great profit, for when a piece "hits 'em hard" he gathers in everything between the rent and the running expenses, and the surplus mounts fast. It may run up to $150,000 in a year. Then, again, with a succession of failures it may the next year drop to zero or several degrees below. The story of even those known as the "great managers," such as Lester Wallack, Augustin Daly, and A. M. Palmer are very much in point in all this.

The manager has had his luck, but the house owner has had his high rent—and it is really high. Hence apital looks with kindly eyes on the building of new theatres, and there seems always a brick-and-mortar "angel" ready to prepare a show-place for any manager with a little history of success behind him. In one way this is a benefit to the public, for the newer houses are modern in type, more in accord with the building laws, better placed and better fitted for the best theatrical production. Much as the managers of existing theatres grumble at these new upstarts coming in with a swagger to divide the theatrical patronage, it would not seem that the sixty-two or three houses on Manhattan Island form an over-supply, since the oldest rattletraps die out with great reluctance, and only disappear, it would seem, before the march of improvements that include all the buildings around them. Between the landlords and house managers fully $4,000,000 of New York's theatrical income is accounted for. The manager must pay the house expenses as well as the rent, light, heat, staff, and orchestra—which cost him $1,900 a week.

Many Claims on the Rest.

For the remaining sum there are a host of claimants. First comes the producing manager. His claim to his share is only as insistent as Whitcomb Riley's man, who charged two dollars for a sandwich—he needs the money. He is the residuary legatee, after the scenery, the costumes, the properties, the actors, the advertising, and the other running sources of expense—the author, for instance—have been paid or not paid, as, alas, is sometimes the case. He has many troubles and anxieties, but while he has health and strength to do and dare, he is not long for the dolorous end of things, and only repeated blows from the gavel of misfortune can relegate him to the scrap-heap. As he handles all the money, it is but natural that his oversight of liabilities immediate, contingent, and of the future should lead him to a prudent care of number one, and seldom in this does he wholly fail—he is a business man. It is exceedingly difficult to figure out his profits, or his share of the takings, except in the most general of averages, for, like the stars, every manager differeth from another in glory—and gain. He is not always a constant quantity individually in New York. Still, he is a very poor manager, or a very unlucky, if he does not take for his own about $750 as his weekly allowance. In other terms, the producing managers absorb close to $1,000,000 out of the general fund.

The actors and actresses require at least $1,500,000, including with them not only the stage management, but every "super" who gets half a dollar for walking on and off, up to the "star," who may run to $500, even in some cases $1,000 a week—and get it.

Scenery and costumes are extremely variable quantities. They may not cost the manager more than $3,000 for a whole production that may last several seasons, or they may run to $50,000. Set against a year of service in the metropolis in thirty-one weeks their rightful chargeability to the year's theatrical fund should amount to $300,000. If their use ended in New York the charge would be immensely greater, but there are a couple of thousand good theatres outside New York.

Advertising, posters, cards, publicity in general costs at least $250,000, the big and little houses and "attractions" figuring variously in this amount.

Finally the Author.

All of which leaves something for the author. This entity who is, after all, of some importance in the scheme, be he imported or native, is getting toward his rightful share with gratifying progress. Naturally there must be an author for every play, but not always an author who must be carried on the pay-roll, Shakespeare, Sheridan, Goldsmith, to wit, and many others of less notability. But these praiseworthy ancients do not fill the bill for a public as eager after novelty as ours. The demand is for novelty in form if not always in substance, for new turns to old dramatic tricks, and if originality can strike hands with what is uppermost in men's and women's minds and within the conventions, the reward is golden indeed. America is far from a 10 per cent. country for playwrights, as France is, for instance. It is at present—taking along the line—closer to a 5 per cent. of the gross proposition for the author. On our computation carried thus far, he should, therefore, receive about $375,000 of the fund; but he does not quite. In a year's dramatic business there are a great many of him to share this possible fund. Sometimes it is shared with the manager. It is bitten into by agents. It disappears in fool contracts; it withers under small receipts. Now and again it blossoms for him into grand totals. But as has been before remarked, his position has vastly improved. New theatrical conditions assure him of his reward, whatever it may be. In a broad sense, he can rely on the truthfulness of the statements of gross receipts on which his royalties are generally founded. These he receives weekly with great particularity, and with them his check or his money. And this is true not merely for New York, but for the whole country. It is a betterment brought about by the great theatrical combinations, which can, after all, like all great concerns in the commercial world, only exist and survive on good faith and the prompt, regular meeting of obligations. There is a division of receipts between the house and the manager, an accountability on the part of each of them to some central authority. This necessitates honest bookkeeping, and in this the author finds his safety and his account.

Comic Operas Run High.

We have, then, roughly, an idea of a season's dramatic business in New York. The figures of the eight comic opera houses would run astonishingly high in comparison. Some of these in the present season will doubtless far distance the week for week run of "The Lion and the Mouse," for instance. "The Parisian Model," "The Red Mill" blaze out their challenge from either side of Broadway to count 'em—a challenge so dear to the momentarily affluent manager and not unknown to the successful author. Nor is it always the musical that draws the crowd. "Brewster's Millions," a jolly big farce, spends its hours rejoicing. "The Girl of the Golden West" went away with a gallus wave of the hand to the incoming "Rose of the Rancho," and "The Chorus Lady" in Forty-second Street nods to "The Three of Us" down in Twenty-fourth Street. Marked successes are registered here and there, and tho all-buts and the rank failures move off across the stream or go into the storehouse with affecting regularity. Upon all of them, good and bad, the wise-eyed managerial rulers speculate. Their chance of life is weighed in cold balances, and after they have worn out their welcome here, they pass on. The great successes of the past and present are marshaled once more.

One hears that the greatest of all moneymakers in the history of the American stage is and has been "Ben Hur." In its eight years, with many changes of cast and outfit, and with more and more horses for its great chariot race, it has taken in close to $4,000,000, and is good for years yet. Klaw & Erlanger have profited on at least half that great sum. The play has probably rendered to Gen. Lew Wallace, and his estate since his death, some $400,000, which is great encouragement to men who write novels striking enough to have everybody read them, and after many years of circulation in book form, leap at the chance of seeing them put upon the stage. That is, indeed, a rare combination, as many a book-play before and since bears witness. In these times of crowded fiction, the fashion of rushing a momentarily popular book into scenes and stage dialogue before it can pass from among the "best sellers," (lest haply it be quite forgotten in a month,) has not like results. In the case of "Ben Hur," the dramatizer, Charles Young, was content with a stipulated sum for his work, so these colossal figures of receipts can have no more than a sentimental interest for him; but there is gratification to a poet even in that.

To Charles Klein another story is vouchsafed. Working up through all the ranks of dramatization, he hit upon the royalty trail commendably early. A great success or two is enough to let out the majority of playwrights. To have "The Lion and the Mouse" all to himself, following his arrangement for a goodly share in "The Music Master," has brought him handsome results. He has probably netted $100,000 on them so far, and more in prospect, with other chances in the field of fortune later on.

Long runs and great receipts are the commonplace of theatrical gossip, and the opportunities therefor have widened immeasurably in the last twenty years. Yet few plays of later times have done better than Bronson Howard's "Shenandoah" of 1889, for which in its first year he received over $100,000 for his share, and has sat in receipt of custom from it nearly ever since. Many and striking were his other successes, but they were for the most part contracted in other than royalty forms, if report is correct. If so, he may surely congratulate himself that coincident with the great success was the assumption of a percentage basis for his payment. What a fortune the play must have made for Charles Frohman, then first pushing vigorously into the greater managership!

"'Way Down East" has been one of the great moneymakers. It has probably netted for Messrs Brady and Grismer a round half million. By one of those flukes of fortune which Mr. Howard was spared, the lady who wrote it, Miss Lottie Blair Parker, gained very little from it. Fortunately, a pleasant epilogue may be made to the story. Mr. Brady later brought out her play "Under Southern Skies." It was a mild success in New York, and after a not over-prosperous circuit it was abandoned by Miss Grace George. The authoress, however, had faith in it. It came back into her hands, and once more it went upon the road, making for her such a comfortable fortune that she has ease and resource and no fear of the dun-colored future. Good luck to her!

"Old Homestead" a Winner.

A great winner, very dear to New York, was "The Old Homestead." What it won for Denman Thompson (who played the old countryman so endearingly that his real personality would be denied by any one south of Harlem) can never be told. He had enough, however, left over to enjoy the luxury of a great country place, kept in great bucolic style, from which he sallied annually to return laden with produce long and green, as his delighted admirers would most lovingly describe it. There was a play that may have had no author. It grew out of a rather queer vaudeville sketch, played at first in dubious vaudeville houses. Next it developed into a three-act play called after the principal character, and so endured for years, at last taking on snow scenes and chimes and the old homestead choruses without anybody in the author line apparently lending a hand. There were no royalties to pay, it is presumable.

Among modern American playwrights Clyde Fitch has been probably the most prolific and profit-taking. After his absence from the footlights for nine long years he began a long line of successes, about ten years ago, with an adaptation of "La Bohème." From that on he has reaped fine incomes from his plays, royalties pouring in from all sides, running, it is estimated, to $100,000 a year for many years—"Nathan Hale," "Barbara Frietchie," "The Climbers," and a score of others.

Augustus Thomas is another author of constant production and profitable performance. Perhaps his greatest monetary success was "Arizona," but it has only been one of a round dozen of plays and comedies that have delighted the public and given him a relative reward.

What glance at great American successes would be complete (this jotting is not by any means pretending to be) without mention of "The Two Orphans," which ran for a quarter of a century? It did not, however, permanently enrich either the manager or the adapter as it would be likely to do if it was starting out to-day. Demery, the original French author, did not, as report goes, ever receive a cent, or much more than that, for his share of the matter in America. It was before the days of international copyright, and hence he had no legal claim. But A. M. Palmer had one great success in which the author shared handsomely, namely "Trilby." The American and English percentages from the play probably brought more money to Du Maurier than all the other products of his brain combined. To Paul M. Potter, whose percentage was not so very high, it brought over $60,000 before its first year was over, and much after that.

Among the Woman Authors.

Among the women dramatists of today, Martha Morton (Mrs. Herrmann Conheim) has no doubt the greatest record of success. Her plays for Mr. Crano and Sol Smith Russell brought her in a princely income, and the lady is still writing successfully.

Another worthy who may not be as highly trumpeted as his monetary success would warrant in a sordid world, is Theodore Kremer. This author began his work here under the difficulties of writing in an acquired language, and after failing to "land" his pieces among the lords of the Broadway stages, betook himself to the humble fields of domestic melodrama, from which he reaps great sheaves. With a score or so of such touching, exciting, comic, and vice-condemning plays as "No Wedding Bells for Her," "The Evil Men Do,"—drat em!—and "No Mother to Guide Her," Mr. Kremer is said to look askance at figures under $50,000 a year.

And you cannot down young talent. Just as Mr. Fitch emerged from his nine years' seclusion with a trunkful of negotiable manuscripts, so has George Broadhurst taken fresh hold with "The Man of the Hour," and eke made score with "The Mills of the Gods," which are serious dramatic things in violent contrast to his early uproarious successes aforetime such as "Why Smith Left Home," or "What Happened to Jones."

The foreign authors who have made piles of money from American theatres are many. Hall Caine, A. W. Pinero, H. A. Jones, Haddon Chambers, and J. M. Barrie make an odd group, but between them they have taken $250,000 from Uncle Sam. Since Mr. Barrie gave us "Peter Pan" all is forgiven.

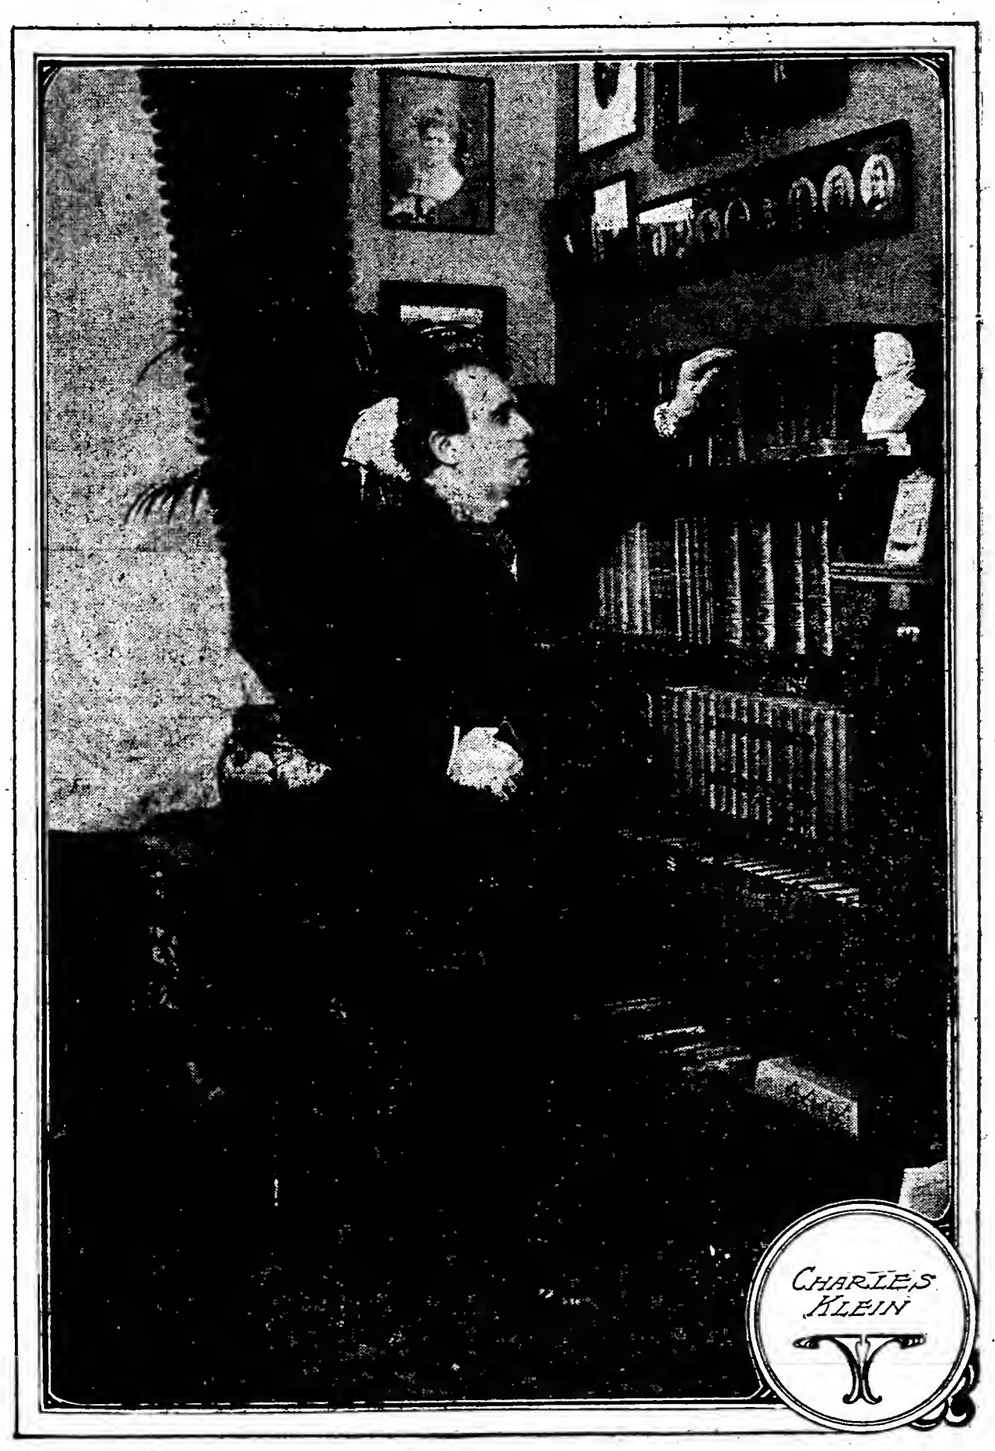
Successes Numerous.

Authors who are making handsome incomes from their plays are more than one can count offhand. Outside those named William Gillette is perhaps the leader. With him, however, it is so hard to tell where the author's share leaves off and the actor's whack begins, but between them he runs close to $75,000 a year, according to report, which may do him injustice. George Ade is one not to be forgotten. He made a nice fortune out of his stage work before he quite knew that he was writing plays. "The College Widow," "The County Chairman," and "The Sultan of Sulu" were such a brilliant beginning that he took subsequent events with much aversion and surprise. Referring to the failure of a comedy of his, he said at a dinner of the American Dramatists that it had taught him the beauties of Sixth Avenue as a promenade. Therein is something remarkable. Down Broadway, smiling, smug, waving glad-gloved fingertips to his friends, goes the dramatist who has a successful play. Let him fall once after a score of hits, and he at once crawls out of the sunlight or electric light of the Great White Way, and Sixth Avenue is the next dark street in which he prowls in the depths of an astonished woe. All, of course, except Sydney Rosenfeld. To him fortune's buffets and rewards come with equal charm; the one gives him a chance to explain, and the other a chance to congratulate New York, and, in either case, he calmly lands another play. He is the author, by the way, of that bit of philosophy which says "a fool may write a play; it takes a genius to land it."

What with Langdon Mitchell, Percy Mackaye, Rachel Crothers, James Forbes, the son of destiny; Paul Armstrong, the strong-arm boy; William C. de Mille, the "Strongheart" youth; Luther Long, who has seconded David Belasco so effectually; William Vaughan Moody, whose "Great Divide" is not only a human document of value, but a bud of promise; a half-score of ladies, including the two authors from Boston of "The Road to Yesterday," the American playwrights are doing fairly well and promising better things.

Looking down from these veracious records of prosperity to certain dull depths in which willy-nilly we are occasionally invited to dwell, it may be useful to recall the saying of one who had much succeeded and then did not succeed so much. He was anxious about his next piece—a proper spirit for every dramatist. He troubled himself, jingling his well-lined pockets, as to where he would best go to give the play its finishing touches. Nowhere of all the seaside or rustic resting places within reach seemed to suit the finicking of his jaded spirit. At last he said: "My opinion is that a high-up hall bedroom with a frantic desire to make enough to hire the back parlor is where the best plays can be written."

JOSEPH I. C. CLARKE.



A Consideration of Woodrow Wilson of Princeton

IN THESE days of radical reform, with political parties badly mixed and political policies almost lost sight of in the scuffle, it is a question whether or not a movement launched some months ago, and which has quietly been growing in some quarters ever since, is not to be regarded as most significant. The movement was that started in this city to make Woodrow Wilson, now President of Princeton University, the Democratic standard bearer next year, and, if possible, President of the United States.

Considering the personality of the present incumbent, the stress under which the Administration is laboring, the economic questions that are rapidly coming to a head, the temper of the people of the country, and the undoubted tendency toward radicalism in everything, it is, to say the least, strange that as conservative a man as President Wilson should even be mentioned for the Presidency, and students of national conditions are wondering whether the movement, and particularly the fact that it was not immediately abandoned, does not presage a return to extreme conservatism and the election to the White House of a man calculated to steady things down a bit, and thus insure the prolongation of the present era of prosperity.

The Antithesis of Roosevelt.

To one who has met Woodrow Wilson, yet who knows him but slightly, the idea of his being President does not immediately appeal. It is hard to reconcile the office just now occupied by the strenuous Mr. Roosevelt with the tall, solemn, quiet-demeanored college President. It cannot be gainsaid that Mr. Wilson is the antithesis of Mr. Roosevelt, and thus, were the at present unexpected to happen, and Mr. Wilson, by any chance, to be elected President, the American people would achieve conservatism by about as radical an action as can well be imagined.

To say that Mr. Wilson is solemn is not necessarily to suggest that he is in any way lacking in humor. It needs but one glance at the man's face, however, with its long, somewhat severe chin, to convey the impression that he looks on life as a serious proposition, and, while he enjoys telling or hearing a joke, he is nevertheless strongly of the opinion that it is well to think long and hard before doing or saying anything in a spirit of levity which may have an effect on another purpose. And as the smallest actions and most unimportant words frequently have a remarkable effect, it would only be fair to assume that Mr. Wilson is a man who does nothing hastily.

The tall, somewhat gaunt form of Mr. Wilson, seen on the Princeton campus or in the garden of "Prospect," as the students term the President's residence, strikes the observer at once as that of the idealized, latter-day college President. It is well to say latter day President, for Mr. Wilson is up to date and looks it. And it may be added that while Mr. Wilson impresses one as conservative, and is conservative, as all his actions show, he is not by any means an "old fogy." Unfortunately, in the general mind, the two terms are often confused, to the great injustice of the real conservative.

Mr. Wilson has searching eyes, the forehead of a student and thinker, and the mouth of a kindly, but nevertheless firm, man. His whole face gives the impression of intellectuality, combined with deep thinking on a broad plane. It may seem more or less obvious that this is so in view of what is known of the man, but were Mr. Wilson encountered in a hothouse, dressed in overalls and a gardener's hat, he would nevertheless give one that identical impression, and he would strengthen the impression the moment he commenced to speak. Almost the first word he utters convinces the listener that he is sure of his ground, and so strong is this conviction, and so deeply does it sink in, that one is inclined to mind his "p's" and "q's" lest Mr. Wilson ask a question of history or mathematics that his interviewer would find it impossible to answer.

There are many people who meet such emergencies readily enough by "looking wise", as the saying is, and saying nothing. Such tactics, however, would not for one moment prevail with Mr. Wilson. On every sense of the word he is of an analytical mind. He analyses conditions, men, even thoughts. In this respect he sometimes resembles the present Governor of New York State, Charles E. Hughes, who, by strange coincidence, was at one time a college professor also. Occasionally an expression crosses Mr. Wilson's face which reminds one strongly of Mr. Hughes at moments in the insurance investigation when he was concentrating his mind on one single point in the testimony and analyzing it at lightning speed and with absolute accuracy.

Mr. Wilson appears to have retained the ideals that he set up in his earlier years. He has not become hardened and cynical by what has taken place around him in the last few years. He is of the type of man who insists in believing that the vast majority of his fellow-beings are as honest as the day is long. He impresses one as a man who not only believes in what is good and pure and best, but also believes that what is right and honest will triumph in the end, and that what goes before is simply a process of evolution necessary to growth.

This trait is denoted clearly in Mr. Wilson's expressions on the position college life holds in this country. He is of the opinion that it is a very vital part of the nation's life, offering the young man the one place above all others where he can put himself in the way of the main currents of thought which are the very life of the world. He believes that university life, besides teaching a man all the great truths gained from the past, gives him a thorough appreciation of what has been accomplished in the years gone by and encourages him to emulate those of whom he has read, and carry on the work of endeavor, accomplishment and progress.

There is in that thought something different from what is to be found in the every-day platitudes of the present time. Mr. Wilson's character is clearly denoted in it. He looks for the best, seeing the good side and the great side of things.

It would be interesting to observe Mr. Wilson's attitude toward "practical" politics were he ever elected President. He has never held public office and has had nothing to do with the "practical" side of politics, other, perhaps, than those which may sometimes be found in university life. His point of view would be very nearly that of Mr. Hughes, but whether he would meet situations in the same way is a question. That he would achieve results as ably as Mr. Hughes is certain, but his methods would probably be very different, though none the less admirable.

The extent to which the personal attitude of a man in high office toward a certain question can make itself felt all over the country was never more thoroughly demonstrated than within the last few months. While no man's attitude on one question can be taken as an indication of his probable attitude on another question, it nevertheless must give an idea of the character of the man and lead to speculation. Mr. Wilson's attitude toward the movemen to make him the Democratic candidate for the Presidency is interesting in this connection:

"In my opinion it would be presumptuous for a man to decide whether he would accept a nomination for the Presidency that had not been offered to him," said Mr. Wilson in substance, when the possibility of such a thing was first suggested to him. "However, I cannot see how any patriotic American could refuse such an offer unless the burden upon his physical system would be too great for him to bear. If the Democratic party should call upon me in the hope of reuniting the discordant elements, I could not be so insensible to the honor as to decline, without careful consideration of the subject."

It will be noted that in this statement Mr. Wilson is very guarded and that he is immediately inclined to regard the proffered honor from the standpoint of a "patriotic American." The though of being presumptuous is something that seldom occurs to the politician of the present day, but every one who knows Mr. Wilson knows perfectly well that it was the first thing that entered his mind when the suggestion of a possibility of his being nominated was made to him.

"If the time should come when the leaders of the Democratic party believe they want me for their candidate and should assure me that it was necessary for them to know my willingness to permit the use of my name, I should first consult my physician and then try to weigh the matter carefully."

Could anything be more guarded and more conservative than that? If Mr. Wilson, as President of the United States, were to approach every question that came before him in the same spirit, things might not be done with the rapidity that the Americans are becoming used to, but they would surely be done rightly or Mr. Wilson would not do them at all.

While Mr. Wilson has had no experience with what are called practical politics, as has been said, he has studied political conditions long and deeply, and his after-dinner speeches denote the fact that he keeps closely in touch with the political affairs of the day, both here and abroad. As a student, lecturer, and writer on political subjects he has won renown, and while his knowledge of the "machine" and of politics may be very much less than that of some district bosses, his knowledge of real politics, the politics that make for accomplishment and the upbuilding of a great nation, is probably as great as that of any man in the United States. It might worry the machine politicians to have to deal with such a man.

DISTINGUISHED FOREIGNERS IN PRAISE OF AMERICA

Diplomats, Scientists, and Scholars Express Through The Times Their Appreciation of This Country and Discuss Most Interestingly the Ties That Bind It with the Nations of the Old World.

THE transatlantic steamers arriving within the last ten days have brought to American shores a number of men of prominence and diversified genius such as perhaps never before assembled in this country. These gentlemen come as the guests of Mr. Andrew Carnegie to attend both the dedication of the new buildings of the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburg, which took place on Thursday, Friday, and Saturday, being attended by stately ceremonies, and the Peace Conference, which begins its sessions in this city to-day.

It has seemed to THE NEW YORK TIMES that these visitors should not be allowed to depart without having imparted to the American public something of their views on the great subjects in which they are each specially interested. It must be confessed that the eminent gentlemen are inclined to stand on the prerogatives of a holiday: they are ready with almost vociferous praises for everything they see in America, but insist that they are here to obtain knowledge, not to presume to impart it. The most distinguished of the visitors, however, have joined in giving to THE NEW YORK TIMES the valuable assembly of statement and opinion printed below:

Gen. Von Lowenfeld — Baron D'Estournelle De Constant.

BARON DE CONSTANT'S APPEAL FOR PEACE

The Noted French Diplomat, Father of the Modern Peace Movement, Urges the Invention of Moral Bonds Among the Nations of the Earth.

IT is universally conceded that the man who has done most to advance the idea of universal peace is Baron d'Estournelles de Constant. He may be described as the father of the modern peace movement. A patrician of France of ancient lineage, a diplomat with a distinguished career, a Senator of the republic, and head of the Group of Conciliation in the Parliament, delegate to both the First and Second (coming) Hague Conferences, and member of the Permanent International Tribunal of The Hague, Baron d'Estournelles de Constant has thrown the whole weight of his strong personality and wide acquaintance into the work of advancing international good feeling.

Reaching New York last Sunday, the Baron proceeded directly to Washington, where he was the guest of President Roosevelt until the moment of his departure for the Pittsburg exercises of Thursday. The Frenchman is not unlike the President in his impressive vigor, the pertinacity of his hold on ideas, and particularly in his strong appreciation of the beauty of the household and the family. He has a nice perception of words and the French pleasure in distinctions almost dialectic, though the sweep of his thought is broad and its expression bold. At Pittsburg Baron d'Estournelles was, next to Mr. Carnegie, as he is likely to be at the Peace Conference here this week, the hero of the hour. In his statement to THE TIMES, he said:

"Some fifteen years ago the French Embassy at the Court of St. James's was in charge of a young man not yet 40, believed by some to be of exceptional energy and at least average ability, possessed of considerable diplomatic training, at Tunis and elsewhere, but hardly of the experience commonly required in Ambassadors at their Governments' most important posts. But there, for better or for worse, he was when England and France approached one of the most serious crises in their history. The Ambassador of France, M. Waddington, had been recalled, on account of his fancied overfriendliness to the British Government. Poor fellow, he died broken-hearted over his undeserved humiliation. A misunderstanding between the two nations had arisen over affairs in Siam. The boundary was in dispute, and there were charges of unfriendly influence upon the natives. One day the young Minister waited on Mr. Gladstone's Secretary for Foreign Affairs, Lord Rosebery, and informed him that France required precisely this and that, and would consent to nothing else. The Secretary replied that the British Government could not for a moment consider the French demand. He then, as he afterward told the young man, sent a dispatch to the British Admiral in Pacific waters to proceed with an ultimatum to Bangkok and "join" the French fleet. The Admiral was at sea, and the dispatch was delayed in reaching him. It would have sent him on an errand which would have been the beginning of war. But within a day or two a way was found out of the difficulty. Hasty orders on both sides were rescinded, and instead of plunging into what would have been the most terrible conflict of history, France and England have lived on in peace which has grown into a friendship of earnestness and warmth.

The Folly of War Perceived.

"The young Minister who thus witnessed the spectacle of two great Governments hanging on the edge of an irreparable disaster and a monstrous crime was—myself. In that hour I perceived the folly of war, the absurd inadequacy of the occasions from which wars spring, and the necessity of altering the habitual temper of Governments which makes it so easy to take the plunge.

"I have lived to head a delegation from the French Parliament to the British and to welcome a corps of members of the British Parliament in the halls of our French Assembly, to see the entente cordiale cemented and a spirit begotten which will forever make impossible a quarrel between the two Governments over causes which a generation ago would inevitably have meant war.

"If by any I have the honor to be considered a leader in what is popularly known as the peace movement, I hope it will be understood that that movement is eminently practical. We are not dreamers nor enthusiasts, but practical men. I myself am by profession a diplomat. I have served my country in the practical and responsible duties of diplomatic agent of my Government. The Siamese crisis taught me the best and most practical lesson of all.

"So I went home and said to my people: 'See, this must be our work. France is not the most populous, the most popular, of nations, nor do the laws of nature suggest to her that her ambitions should take the road toward material strength. Our part is to dominate in the world of ideas. Let us think for the world; think not only aesthetically, but practically. Let us produce ideas and be strong through suggesting the thoughts of others. And since noble ideas, lofty thoughts, are those which others will recognize and accept, let us search for them.'

"Why should we not, for instance, do in the world of ideas, in the moral world, what the progress of science and invention has done in the material? Consider how the telegraph, the railroad, and the steamship have quite suddenly brought all the world together. Isn't it absurd to go on pretending that it is the old world in which nations could misunderstand each other and go to war?

"The new means of swift transportation and communication constitute the most revolutionizing fact in the whole history of the human race. But it has not yet done its revolutionizing work. Why? Because the bonds of steel rails and copper wire have drawn together the nations in a material sense alone. It remains to put into operation bonds that will draw them together morally—that will awaken a mutual sympathy, enlightening their mutual understanding. That bond is knowledge. Steam and electricity have made the materially impossible not only possible, but actual. The diffusion of mutual knowledge will make possible the realization of the morally ideal.

"Alas, it was not for France to lead in this great moral revolution. It found its first encouragement here in America.

"I was by now a sort of crusader, adventuring wherever I might hope for a hearing. I came to America in 1902 and was asked to speak in Chicago, on Washington's birthday. I was told I must speak in English. They said: 'If you do not speak English nobody will listen.' But I wanted everybody to listen. I knew no English. So I went to work and learned English. Oh, it was not easy, the drudgery of weeks. I got a speech written and committed it to memory. It made a great impression.

"I coupled the names of Washington and Lafayette: I said, 'Our fathers helped yours to gain liberty; you must help us win peace.' I felt at once a mystic harmony between the best spirit of France and the energy of America, and I know that what had when first proposed seemed ridiculous to the old divided States of Europe would be easily grasped by the acute intelligence of the young United States of America.

"Then I had an opportunity to see President Roosevelt. I improved it. That was just after the Spanish-American war. Mr. Roosevelt was unknown in the fully developed character in which he now appears.

"Would it be improper for me to repeat what I had the boldness to say to him? Perhaps you may imagine. It was true that Europe was watching him eagerly. To Europe your President was a great hope—or a great menace. To the friends of peace in particular the question of questions was whether the imperial ambition, the military ideal, was to become the ruling one of this young nation, and of the striking and impressive figure who had appeared as its head. The international world was without a leader. The atmosphere was indecisive as to whether a new enthusiasm for peace or the old idea of war was to possess the future. What a chance for a great President to make himself the foremost figure of the day!

The Hague Tribunal.

"The Hague Tribunal had just been organized. It had nothing to do. It had no home. It had no repute, no standing, no future.

"I said to the President: 'There are against your Government a few small claims disputed and awaiting adjustment. Send them to The Hague. You will save its life. Then there is the matter of the Pious Fund in dispute between Mexico and the State of California. Send that to The Hague.'

"The President thought it over. Then he said, 'Go and see Mr. Hay.' So I went, and had the pleasure of making a friend of that noble man. Everything was arranged. The Hague Tribunal was given a chance to justify its existence, and the possibility of maintaining peace even in the face of disputes was demonstrated.

"But the tribunal had no seat, no home. I said to Gen. Horace Porter, 'What a shame that the noblest court in Christendom has no abiding place. The Governments for whose treasuries it is destined to save millions upon millions have not the grace to appropriate the paltry sum necessary to put a roof over its head.'

"Gen. Porter said, 'Wait a moment. I will give you an introduction to a man who may do something. Tell him as you have told me.' He gave me a note to Mr. Carnegie, and I wrote to him. The answer came back. The Hague is to have its palace. The great instincts and far-seeing wisdom of Mr. Carnegie are thoroughly enlisted in the cause, and you know what magnificent things he is constantly doing for it.

"But, while the establishment of a permanent international court is all that the most enthusiastic could claim it to be, it does not and can not fulfill all that those who hope for the cessation of war see to be possible.

"The old way was quarrel and fight. The new way is quarrel and arbitrate. The way of the future will be: Do not quarrel.

"That is what I mean by talking of the invention of moral bonds between the nations. Why not spread knowledge, diffuse information, exchange ideas until each people is enabled to understand the point of view of the other peoples? Why not do this so effectively that quarreling will be impossible, until there will be no longer anything to fight over nor anything to arbitrate? Misunderstandings all arise in ignorance.

"That is the idea of 'The Association for International Conciliation.' It is a system of groups of men, one group in each land, who maintain communication, visit each other, exchange ideas and sentiments, all to the end of better international understanding. A while ago I invited members of the French Assembly who were interested in the idea to form a group. People said, 'What is the good? You will get together a dozen or a score. To-day the group numbers 450—about half the membership of Parliament.

"But Parliaments change, and, besides, the business of Governments is to meet the immediate present rather than provide for the future. So I prefer groups of persons not in official life. We have such a group now in France and in America. Here Mr. Carnegie and Andrew D. White are its honorary Presidents; Nicholas Murray Butler its active President. On its Executive Committee are men like Dr. Lyman Abbott, Seth Low, Richard Watson Gilder, James Speyer. Our French association includes some of the most illustrious names in France.

"Can you fail to see the immense influence which an acquaintance and the exchange of views between such citizens of two countries would be at the approach of a crisis between their Governments? You only need to reflect on the power of public opinion and on the moderation and wisdom which are begotten by the wise counsels of men who understand and trust each other.

"First international disputes and no better way to settle them than to go to war; then international disputes and a peaceful court to arbitrate them; then, international understanding and goodwill, with no disputes."

SIR ROBERT BALL ON AMERICAN ASTRONOMY

The Eminent British Authority Speaks with Admiration of the Work of American Observatories, and Places Barnard at the Head of the Students of the Heavens.

THE remarkable eulogy pronounced in the article which follows upon the work of American astronomers would be noteworthy from any competent source, but coming from Sir Robert Stawell Ball, it comes from the highest possible authority. Praise from Sir Robert is praise indeed. This eminent astronomer is now Director of the Cambridge Observatory. He has been Astronomer Royal of Ireland, and President of the Royal Astronomical Society.

Sir Robert is the typical Briton. Discoursing on his favorite subject, he develops immense enthusiasm. Rarely has a newspaper been privileged to print so fascinating a story of the latest achievements of astronomy as he gives to-day the readers of this paper:

"It is to America that the eyes of all astronomers are constantly turned. You are doing the great things here. There is no doubt whatever that you lead the world in astronomy, in every department of it, I dare say. You have many splendidly situated, splendidly equipped, and splendidly manned observatories, and the work that is being done in them is well worthy of them.

"Lick Observatory is, I suppose, the very greatest in the world. Nowhere is there such an equipment; nowhere is better work being done. Why, it's amazing the scope, the evident accuracy, and the noteworthy value of it.

Calls Barnard "Greatest Living Astronomer."

"The Yerkes Observatory, too, is a veritable wonder. Perhaps Lick has somewhat the better situation, but Yerkes is good—excellent. Prof. Barnard, who is at the head of it, is unquestionably the very first of living observers. I qualify with the word 'living' only to be absolutely on the safe side and only because I remember Sir William Herschel. I really shouldn't mind if you reported me as saying that Barnard is the greatest astronomical observer who ever lived. Let me say, 'with the possible exception of Sir William Herschel,' and I will quite agree that he is the greatest who ever lived.

"Prof. Barnard is really a wonderful man. And it is not his physical organization alone, his keenness of sight, his nicety of perception, you know.' There are certain moral qualities necessary to the attainment of the height which Barnard occupies among astronomers. When Barnard says he has seen anything the world accepts it as a fact that that thing exists. It is settled, settled for all time. 'Barnard saw it; it is there.' A while ago Barnard said he had seen a fifth satellite of Jupiter. Then there was a fifth satellite of Jupiter. No one else need have seen it; Barnard had seen it. In point of fact, others soon saw it, too, but that circumstance added nothing to the certainty of a fact that was already as certain as anything could possibly be.

"They have another wonderful man at Yerkes; oh! they are truly fortunate. I mean Burnham—S. W. Burnham. He is a barrister or a counselor or something in that line, you know. At least he is partly that and partly, could you imagine it? an astronomer. I am not sure but he still practices law in some capacity. And yet he has done and continues to do some of the most valuable work ever done in an observatory. When I called on him in Chicago, when I was here before, I was taken to a legal-looking office, where presently he took out of pigeonholes, some of which were stuffed with legal documents, what do you imagine?—a catalogue of double stars! Oh, very much the most complete catalogue in existence, very much indeed the most complete.

"I well remember when (could it have been in 1874?) the announcement came that a Mr. Burnham of Chicago had catalogued 100 double stars. Everybody said at once, 'Well, if Mr. Burnham of Chicago has found 100 double stars, why then the greatest double star gazer in the world has arisen in our midst.' A year or two ago Mr. Burnham announced, 'I have now catalogued a thousand double stars, and I believe I shall return to the practice of law.'

"Mr. Burnham's catalogue is by way of being published soon, I believe, and it will be the authoritative work for this generation at least. He is a truly remarkable observer; began observing here and there wherever a friend would allow him the use of an instrument by night, while he practiced law by day. Doesn't Kant grow for once poetical when he conjoins as the most impressive facts in the world the starry heavens above and the moral law written in the heart of man? I believe Mr. Burnham has felt the impressiveness of both, and he knows in addition the significance of the statutes of the State of Illinois.

"As to this matter of double stars, our eyes have been opened, or at least our understandings, to perceive that probably there are many more double than single stars. Do you know how double stars are found?

How Double Stars Are Formed.

"When we look out of a clear night into the sky the multitude of lights is so vast, the dome of the heavens is so thickly jeweled, that it seems as if there were no room for another world there. Yet the probability is that for every star we see there are millions of enormous masses which we do not see. I do not speak alone of the stars so far away from us that their light never reaches us. Nor do I speak alone of the planets, systems of which surround and accompany the suns which appear to us as stars.

"Besides these, there is every probability that in the oceans of space are moving prodigious bodies which we never see, but which far outnumber what we do see. Call them burned-out suns, if you like. Wouldn't it be surprising if it were a fact, as popular belief has all along taken for granted, that there are in existence only worlds in a certain particular stage of evolution—that, namely, in which they appear to us as bright stars? Of course, the fact cannot be anything of the sort. If we could see all that is in space out there we should gaze upon bodies in every stage of development—just forming into globes, giving forth light and heat and probably electrical energy, begetting their satellites and the satellites again their moons, the cooling of the moons and planets, then the cooling of the suns themselves. If we think of it we shall know that space must be full of extinguished suns. Last night I saw from the windows of my chamber in my hotel the magical sight of the lights of New York. It was fairyland; it was like a piece of the starry sky fallen down upon the roofs of a city. But I was not so foolish as to suppose that there was nothing on Manhattan Island except where a light gleamed. And in the morning when I looked out again I saw what our gazing into the night alone for years might not have guessed—the substantial buildings, the solid streets and bridges that make the city. Likewise, if some inconceivable celestial radiance could illuminate for our eyes the depths of space, we should probably see myriads of dark worlds thundering along their unlit paths.

The Cooling Off of a Solar System.

"Now, if we could watch the process of the cooling off of a solar system we should probably see something like this: A point would be reached at which the planets would fall back into their sun. Suppose this were to happen (probably it will happen eventually) in the case of our own system. The mass of our group of planets is slight compared with that of the sun; together they would add to his mass only about one five-hundredth part of it. But the addition of this mass, comparatively slight as it might seem to he, would make one immense difference to the sun. It would compel him, in accordance with a mathematical law which we needn't bother about just now, to rotate fifty times as fast as he had been rotating. This it would be impossible for him to do without breaking up. The sun would probably break into two masses, which would whirl around each other. The sun would have become a double star.

"There would be or might be a difference in the size of these masses, and there would, or might, be a difference in their brightness. One mass might be still brilliantly white, while the other would be dying away to a coal. But it would not follow that the larger mass would be the brighter. The star Gamma Andromedae is double, one body being a blazing topaz, the other a lovely sapphire; there is reason to believe that the darker mass is the larger.

"Don't imagine that the telescope shows us a double star in visible evidence of its duplicity. Not at all. The most powerful telescope has never been able to see one part of a double star by itself. It is the spectroscope that gives the evidence. That instrument betrays in the case of a double star the fact of a double spectrum; shows the passing of the lines of one spectrum over and then, so to speak, under those of another. The two spectra answer to the two bodies, and the period required before a particular spectroscopic picture reproduces itself answers to the period in which the two sections of the star revolve around each other.

"Difficult? Refined? You may well say so. Yet nothing could be more certain. The British Association was in session when a cablegram reached it announcing that Capella, your beautiful Capella of the septentrional sky, had been found to be a double star, with a period of 104.5 days. At that moment a letter was on the way from another astronomer, announcing that Capella was a double star, with a period of 104.4 days. Neither of these astronomers knew that the other was observing Capella.

Great Things Expected at Mount Wilson Observatory.

"But we were talking of the great American observatories. The Mount Wilson Observatory is fast taking rank with the most important in the world. They have a splendid man there—several splendid men, in fact—but in Prof. George Hale they have the ideal observer. Hale is the type of American for whom nothing is too good. He must have everything just a little better than the best possible—just a little. Nothing will do at all that could possibly be bettered. Now, that counts in observing, and you may expect great things from Hale and Mount Wilson, behind which now stand the resources of the Carnegie Institute at Washington.

"Prof. Pickering of Harvard is one of the world's leading astronomers. For him, too, nothing will do but the very best. The work of the Harvard Observatory, especially in the photograph of stellar spectra, is, of course, universally recognized as among the best anywhere done.

"There are scores of other American observatories where eminently valuable data are being gathered and work of the highest excellence is being carried on. Prof. Percival Lowell, at Flagstaff, Arizona, has one of the finest possible situations. He is equipped only for the observation of Mars, his study of which has attracted such wide interest. It would be quite idle for any one to doubt that Prof. Lowell sees what he says he sees. He has a perfect right, as a competent observer, to trust his own eyes, as he has to deduce his own conclusions. Mars is of enthralling interest, of course, though it is not encouraging to the hope that we shall soon solve all her mysteries, to reflect that though our nearest neighbor among all the denizens of the heavens, she is at the best of times 35,000,000 miles away. I suppose we shall all be keen after Mars this Summer,' though she is best observed when in opposition in August.

"It must have been just thirty years ago that the British Association heard the first report of the discovery of the two moons of Mars. I shall never forget that meeting; it was at Plymouth. It was made notable by the fact that we first heard there of the electric telephone. Sir William Preece told us about it, and we didn't pay much attention, and Lord Kelvin rigged up a line, and we listened to the sound of voices in another part of the town. I recollect we thought it an interesting toy.

"Then you have in America a number of great astronomers who are not so much observers as mathematicians. Dr. Simon Newcombe is at the head of them all. Then there is Dr. George Hill, to whom Cambridge was proud to give a degree. And my young friend Prof. Ernest Brown, an Englishman, who is now leaving Haverford for Yale, has done work that should distinguish him. He has been at work on the theory of the moon, and at Yale, I understand, they are to work out his tables for nautical almanacs which will surpass in accuracy anything ever before attempted."

THEO. VON MOELLER ON TRADE RELATIONS

The Former German Imperial Minister of Commerce Gives His Views on American Isolation and Suggestions as to the Defects of the American Tariff System.

THE man who since 1891 has handled the German end of the often-vexed question of the trade relations of the United States and Germany is his Excellency Theodore von Moeller, until a few months ago German Imperial Minister of Commerce. Von Moeller is accounted one of the world's most accomplished authorities on international trade. As a leading merchant of his own land for fifty years, as member of the Reichstag since its beginning, and as Chairman of its Committees on Foreign Trade before he was called to the portfolio of Imperial Commerce, he has made a profound study of the principles of trade as exhibited in the actual prosperity and adversity of nations, while in the position from which he has recently retired with the respect of his Emperor he framed and negotiated all the treaties which have done so much to advance Germany as a commercial nation.

"It is a pleasure to see America in the flush of its magnificent and well-deserved prosperity. Have you considered that as this fertility of production goes on it will cease to find its full consumption at home and must seek a foreign market? And have you reflected that if you seek a market in the territory of other nations you must yield those nations a market in your territory for their products? As I look about on this abounding prosperity of this great country I long to believe that you will appreciate that fundamental truth before it is too late; yes, before it is too late.

The American Policy of Isolation.

"International commerce, the exchange of products, with its enriching results, rests, after all fine theories are spun, on the broad and simple ground of mutual concession for the sake of mutual advantage. You go along very well, very well indeed, you rise to certain heights of prosperity, by manufacturing well and economically, and selling to your own countrymen. But the time comes when your product is so great that you seek the possibilities of a broader market. Does anybody expect that the intelligence of this land will fail to awaken to that fact? Only let it be soon. Your tariff wall not only prevents the entrance of foreign goods; it prevents the exit of your own. And so it raises up competitors abroad who would never exist did you not make their existence necessary. And it forces foreign nations to negotiate with others treaties of which you might have the advantage.

"I have seen, indeed I have myself arranged, the framing of trade treaties of Germany with Italy and Austria, and with Switzerland and Spain and others, giving to each favors which might as well have come to you, while you persisted in your—I must say I deem it your ill-advised—policy of isolation. If you have done well under it we may only wonder how much better you might have done under a more liberal policy.

"Surely the time is coming when you will perceive that the world has moved past the day of national isolation. For one thing, you need the inspiration of competition—foreign competition, the competition of German science, French skill, British methods—contact and freshening from other national minds and ideas. It is a great big world, and the business of the big world is a great, splendid game. Why not get into it, instead of playing off in a corner by yourself?

"Have you heard nothing of the industrial and commercial advance of my country? We have a tariff of about 10 per cent. Yours is about 60 per cent., if I am not mistaken. Wages are rising with us; I believe they have lately been rising more rapidly than with you. Everybody lives well. We have plenty to consume and plenty to export. We send 10 per cent. of our exports to you, 20 per cent. to England. We get your cotton and copper and petroleum—not a great deal else, though on a fair basis we should be customers of value to you.

His Respects to Ad Valorem Duties.

"May I remark one thing that is not appreciated over here? Your system of ad valorem duties is the most abominable nuisance and handicap. It was the effort of years of my life to do away with it in Germany, and I succeeded. We have abolished it as to everything—except horses. I suppose the horse is decreed to be in every country a confessed breeder of immorality, what with racing and gambling and doctoring and trading. So, by way of illustration as it were, we have abandoned the horse to the error of the ad valorem immorality.

"For the ad valorem customs principle is the father of more immorality probably than any other single national institution. Every commercial man will know what I mean—the evils of undervaluation, false swearing, and all the rest of it.

"But your system is not only conducive to immorality. To those who would trade with you it is disturbing, vexatious, and perplexing to such a degree that it drives business from you in immense quantities. No one knows what your Government is going to charge as duty on a bill of goods.

"Here is a German manufacturer who has a surplus of stock after his ordinary market is supplied. He is prepared to send it to the United States for a price much below what he would sell it at at home. But he doesn't know, and his American customer doesn't know, what it will have cost him before it is put on the counter at New York. It is valued at the actual price at which it is sold. But the customs officers will have none of that. They insist that it is worth more—that it regularly sells for more abroad, and is ridiculously undervalued. There you are. A constant uncertainty, a constant dispute, a constant temptaion to subterfuge, mendacity, bribery, extortion, a constant source of ill-will, private and intentional.

The Specific Basis Urged.

"So strongly do I feel on this importation that I am quite prepared to say that you would perfectly satisfy Germany if you were to retain the amount of your customs at just what they are to-day, but put them on the specific basis—so much a pound, so much a foot. I fought for that for years, and we have come to it, as I say, with the most beneficent results. At first I made 1,500 classifications of goods. It was cut down to 1,200, and again cut to 1,000. I should have preferred a closer classification, but the idea was not popular. That is no matter. The principle is the thing—a fixed rate, one determined not by the conscience of exporter, importer, or the caprice of a customs officers, but by the foot rule and the scales. You can do business to advantage only when you—what is your word?—when you know 'where you are at.'

"The German delegation to these delightful occasions has been much gratified by the great kindness, I may say the astonisbing good-will, shown us in every particular. Here are two great nations who should be the best of friends. We on our part are determined that we shall be friends. We can't possibly be rivals, except in the most friendly sense and to mutual advantage. We rejoice in the good fortune that has been yours, and, best of all, in those admirable qualities which have won you the rich blessings you enjoy."

VON LOEWENFELD ON GERMANY-AMERICA

The Kaiser's Adjutant Believes Nature Meant the Two Nations to Be Friends, and Declares His Country Has No Ambitions for Territory in This Hemisphere.

HIS EXCELLENCY LIEUT. GEN. ALFRED F. J. L. VON LOEWENFELD, General Adjutant to the German Emperor, is one of the most distinguished soldiers of Europe. He has the reputation of being a close personal intimate of the Kaiser, whom he represented at the dedication of the statue of Frederick the Great in Washington two years ago. Of eminently soldierly appearance and bearing, Gen. von Loewenfeld allows himself to betray an almost youthful enthusiasm over things American. He apparently conceived that he can serve his Emperor no better than by doing all he can to promote the good understanding between his country and the United States, and the great popularity which Gen. Loewenfeld, as a splendid type of the German soldier, has himself already attained here, shows to what lengths of friendship that good understanding may develop.

"Nothing could exceed the delight with which a German who has once experienced the rare hospitality of the American people returns to your land. Surely it must be that we are coming closer and closer into mutual understanding and sympathy.

"Why should it not be so? There is between Germany and America no possible rivalry. There is none as to natural productions or markets. We buy from you, you from us. Nature meant us to be warm friends. It is simply idle to speak of territorial rivalry between us. Germany has no ambition for territory in the western hemisphere. There are, to be sure, some quarter of a million Würtemburgers in Brazil. I believe they still sing German songs and speak the German language. But they are and will continue to be loyal citizens of their adopted country. In the West Indies my countrymen are on the lookout for business, but not for territory.

"The slight feeling at one time, now

past, that the institutions of republican America could not allow its people to be friendly with those of monarchical Germany was due to the fact that there were here then a great many revolutionists who left Europe about the time of the troubles of '48. All that feeling belongs now to the dead past. Since the creation of the new German Empire the last German in exile has abandoned any enmity toward his native land.

"The Emperor is a great friend of Americans and things American. He has not a few personal friends among members of New York's leading families, as you know.

"The reception given Prof. Burgess is an index of the friendly feeling which the Emperor entertains toward America. Just before I sailed I was present at a happy little occasion on which the Emperor listened to Prof. Burgess's lecture on 'Uncle Sam.' There were present besides the imperial auditor just the Empress, little Prince Oscar, (he is really not at all little, but is so slender and boyish,) and Prof. Harnack. The lecturer told us hom 'Uncle Sam' originated, and how he took on gradually the qualities almost of actual personality. I think the name was said by Dr. Burgess to have sprung from the initials on the buckle of the army belt, "U. S.". It was very interesting to hear all this recited in the hearing of one of 'Uncle Sam's' most sincere friends, the august Emperor, and to mark his great enjoyment in being able to grow more intimately acquainted with one whom he so deeply admires."

"The German delegation was much interested in Mr. Carnegie's dramatic appeal on Thursday to the Emperor to ask America, Great Britain, and France to join him in making war impossible. It must be remembered, however, that his Imperial Majesty's power is not quite so extensive as the appeal to him assumed. With the best wishes in the world for peace he might be totally unable to prevent a sanguinary conflict between two of his closest neighbors and friends. Peace has no better friend than the German Emperor; Mr. Carnegie well said that, notwithstanding the acknowledged efficiency of the German Army, long as he has reigned, he has kept his hands free from the stain of the blood of war. If he were indeed able to abolish war, war would have ceased already. But what he can do and is earnestly desirous of doing is to promote good will and understanding everywhere, and, I may say, especially between your great land and his own."

DR. JOHN RHYS TALKS OF CELTIC MOVEMENT

The Principal of Jesus College, Oxford, Outlines the Work Being Done by Scholars Who Are Delving in the Antiquities of Ireland.

DR. JOHN RHYS, Principal of Jesus College, Oxford University, is one of the foremost authorities in archaeology and particularly learned in Celtic antiquities. A native of Wales, he has extended a natural interest in ancient British languages and history till it embraces all forms of Gaelic.

Dr. Rhys is a rugged, yet beaming, personality, in whom the learning of the scholar is vivified by the warm enthusiasm of the man. He is not unlike Mark Twain in appearance.

"I wonder if there is here an appreciation of the importance of the Celtic movement and a real understanding of what it is driving at. Of course the politicians always get hold of a thing like this and generally spoil it. It isn't, however, a political movement, and it isn't really a literary movement, though literary folk started it. Its importance for Ireland is its industrial character. It means the revivification of Irish industries, crafts, and arts. You may think the Irish deficient in artistic ability. Perhaps they have not recently produced great artists. But in ancient times the island was the home not alone of the 'humanities,' of learning, but of the arts. The manuscript illuminations are magnificent. To-day among the movements on foot is one for the manufacture of stained glass in Ireland. Lately all pictured glass has come from Germany. We shall change all that. Mr. Horace Plunkett is deeply interested.

"You know the literary side of the Celtic movement. Mr. William B. Yeates, at least, has been with you. It has some rather amusing sides—the extreme to which the disciples carry the thing. There is, for instance, no apparent crying necessity for putting up the street names in Dublin in Irish. Most of the citizens of Dublin speak and read English. Then it is a little diverting to watch the enthusiasm with which smart circles are taking up the study of the ancient native tongue. I doubt whether they will make much headway with it. But it does help support a work of much literary and historical importance.

"The history of Ireland is unwritten. There are immense stores of material, and the Celtic movement is preparing men to translate and digest it. The Germans have been doing more or less of this already. Kuno Mayer of Liverpool is gathering much material. He is particularly appreciative of the literary beauties of Irish writings. There is much that is very fine in the literature, apart from its historical value. The abounding legends of the saints await to be edited. They throw the clearest light on early Irish civilization.

"Some people are good enough to be interested in work I have been doing on Irish inscriptions. It is a surprise to most that there are any Irish inscriptions. The Romans, you know, never conquered Ireland. Yes, there are some 300, chiefly mortuary, in Ireland, and in Southern England and Wales about 100 more. They are found as far east as Hampshire. Their value is perhaps chiefly the light they throw on the development of the Irish language. The inscriptions run back to, say, 400 A. D., when the language had case ending which in time have sloughed off. I fancy the interest may seem pedantic, though it is actually of historic valuc.

"American archaeology is a rich field. It has never been worked as it deserves, though the Smithsonian Institution has, I believe, done much. It will be taken up some day with enthusiasm and with marvelous results. The monuments are crumbling, I suppose, and the traditions dying out, though a few years ago a friend in Mexico sent me the stone figure of a god which had been unearthed in the digging of a railroad line, and before which the natives uncovered with recollection and understanding of his dread powers.

"I should like to say how splendidly your Rhodes scholars are doing at Oxford—better this past term than ever. At first they were a little handicapped by the strangeness of the English ideas of education to men trained in America. But they are proving themselves most capable in every way and are extremely popular.

"I fancy the fact that Pennsylvania is sending a negro won't matter much to anybody but the Americans themselves. You know we have all varieties of colors in our old gray town. At my college we have a Zulu. Jesus has had no Americans as yet, but I hope for one at least next year.

"I should like to see some of our students come over here, to make matters even. The trouble would be, I fear, they wouldn't come back."

SIR EDWARD ELGAR ON MUSICAL AMERICA

He Says We Are More Interested in the Personality of the Composer or Performer Than in the Music I self—Severe on His Critics.

SIR EDWARD ELGAR, the popular English musical composer and conductor, author of "The Apostles," "The Kingdom," "Gerontius," &c., really has a liking for America, though, being of an original and independent turn of mind, he is disposed to be critical in his estimation of things here as at home. Sir Edward lives in Hartford, near the border of Wales, when he is at home. He occupies a conspicuous position in English life.

"In America an extravagant curiosity as to musical personages usurps the interest of music itself. A generation ago, among those who gave any attention whatever to music, one might hear the inquiries, 'Have you heard this symphony or that sonata? Let us discuss it.' To-day we hear, 'Have you heard Campanini conduct "Aida," or Farrar sings Juliette? Let us talk about them.'

"It is by no means certain that the widely prevalent curiosity about conductors and singers may not ripen into legitimate interest in music itself, but it is absurd to pretend that New York, for instance, is musical, because excited by the rivalries of two opera houses supporting rival artists. You spend your time furiously discussing their merits. Music is above any personality, and it is a mere impertinence to discuss the merits of the interpreters in the presence of the art itself.

"Is there anything in the world less worth while than these eternal personalities? What a pity that music cannot be separated from them? Music is the purest of the arts, and it ought to be the most impersonal. A painter paints a picture and hangs it on the wall. There it is. An author writes a book and it circulates throughout a continent. In neither case need the artist appear, though I admit that latterly the public has dragged them to some extent out of the privacy which ought to be allowed them. But, in the case of music, everybody concerned is obliged to live night and day in the eye of the public. Not only is this true as to those who sing and play; it applies to composers as well. The apparent interest of the public in music is, I fear, largely nothing more than a manifestation of exaggerated and morbid curiosity as to other people. The talk which is supposed to be about music—I mean among the best classes and in the most exclusive drawing rooms—is the idlest, silliest chatter. One doesn't hear an intelligent word on the subject.

"The extraordinary compositions foisted upon the public by so-called music critics are a great handicap in the progress of musical knowledge. What could be more dreadful than those remarkable articles printed as literary interpretations of musical art! One goes to a symphony or an opera to hear, to listen to the achievements of an art whose fleeting appeal is to the ear. With what emotions does one read—if he is so unwise as to read—the fanciful translations of musical emotions which the critics pretend to embody in literary art—for I presume they are artists in their way. The most of this stuff is rubbish. It is not a criticism of the music at all, but a lot of words, which may read very fine, yet have no more connection with the subject they pretend to discuss than has the sporting article or the murder story in adjoining columns. You have in this country three, or perhaps four, musical critics who know something about music; one of them is the musical editor of THE NEW YORK TIMES. The office boy might write most published musical criticisms, for all the knowledge and intelligence they evince.

"No, I am afraid you are not destined here to immediate musical preeminence. I have not heard enough of your work to judge whether you are in process of establishing a National school. I see no indication of it.

"I don't mean to say that America is alone in this matter of gossip supplanting real musical interest. The same is true in Europe, but to a much less degree. I am afraid Europe is still far ahead of you in understanding and appreciation of this art. Mr. Carnegie was allowed to say that no English city had a permanent orchestra. We have at least four great permanent ones, and the Continent is full of splendid permanent orchestral organizations.

"So incompetent is criticism even there, however, at least so devoid of helpfulness is it, that I have given up reading it. I have not read a criticism of my own work for, I suppose, fifteen years. Neither do I care anything for public opinion. I enjoy writing, and I enjoy conducting. When I do the latter I look about on the orchestra and say to myself, 'Oh, what a lot of good fellows,' and we have a splendid time together. When we are through somebody is likely to pull my coat and tell me that there is an audience there, and I remember and turn around and bow. I fear I was not cut out for a popular musician.

"My idea of musical art does not separate it from common life. I have little sympathy with the class of men who live and move and have their being in music. I prefer to live a fuller life. I am busy with my affairs. I have some knowledge of the law. I am something of a chemist. I sometimes think on the great considerations of religion. The ideas that come to me in the course of an active life I am moved to express in musical terms. I decline to think music, dream music, eat, drink, and sleep with music. I look with something akin to pity on men who read, read, read nothing but music, know nothing but music. What have they to say in music? What do they know of life and the real emotions of men, living thus in the artificial atmosphere of their art? How may they hope to rise to the free and pure expression of human feeling which rose in the breast and escaped in the fingers of a Mozart or a Schubert, the world's great natural musicians. One never becomes a musician by reading about harmony, or even listening to compositions. After all, the principles of music are easily learned; the rest is nature and the soul. If nature tends to express itself otherwise than in the terms of music, it cannot be forced against itself. If the soul has nothing to utter, no gift of expression or musical knowledge will suffice to make a musician. How, then, is one to fill his soul expect by living—by plunging into life and experiencing all that life has?

"I am known as a composer of religious music. I have been described as a monk, even. I do not pretend to be a 'religious' man in that sense. I live the free life of a man in the world. I knock about Europe. I do my appointed work in my own corner of the world. And then I am sometimes moved to express myself in music. I don't know rightly how others have done this. I am described as self-taught. I do it as best I know how.

"Religion is a much-misunderstood thing. There is so little of it. What we have to-day, what we see about us, is religionism. Religion has become a profession, a political cult, a system. Religion itself is a very noble and beautiful thing. This is what I have tried to express in the works which the public is good enough to like—and to misunderstand."

SIR ROBERT CRANSTON ON CITY GOVERNMENT

The One-Time Lord Provost of Edinburgh Discusses the Problem from the Scottish Point of View, and Criticises Municipal Ownership Severely.

SIR ROBERT CRANSTON, ex-Lord Provost of Edinburgh, is a Scotch gentleman noted for his intelligent interest in municipal problems. His excellent work as the executive head of the Government of the City of Edinburgh attracted the attention of King Edward, who knighted him in 1903. He is Chairman of Cranston & Elliott and of Cranston's Waverley Hotels, and a Fellow of the Educational Institute of Scotland and of the Royal Scottish Society of Arts. Previous to being Lord Provost of Edinburgh he was Treasurer of that city.

"It might not become a visitor so hospitably received to pass any opinion as to the efficiency of the government of American cities, nor have I seen them to an extent that would justify me in doing so. I should judge from what I read in the newspapers that there is felt to be cause for serious dissatisfaction.

"You will be unwise to set down what you seem to perceive is a difference between the government of British municipalities and your own to a difference—a moral difference some of your pessimists would affirm—in the respective spirits of the two lands. You are unjustified in such a conclusion until you have looked into the difference between the two systems of administration.

"With us, of course, it is true the governing of a city is looked upon as a piece of practical business. There is no politics about it. When I became Lord Provost I announced that during my term of office I would not consent to preside at any political meeting. Before, I had been in political life; my civic duties now made politics an impossibility.

"Again, with us, the administration of a city is not regarded as affording opportunities for making money. As a matter of fact, it affords no such opportunity, (as I shall show you,) and the men who interest themselves in municipal affairs are not men who would do so for money. There you come to the question of the possible advantage of having a leisure class, but that I do not discuss, beyond remarking that you have one here as well as we. You have plenty of men who could well afford to give their labors to their city.

"This brings us to another question on which I dare say my ideas would be heretical. Why should an American gentleman give his energies to such a task? You may talk of civic patriotism and all that; there are indeed many motives. But one dominant one you have not in America. There are no honors to be won. I speak of material honors, recognition, titles, if you like. You haven't even a Legion of Honor. Perhaps it isn't worth thinking of or mentioning; only human nature is human nature, and it might be better to have men governing a city for the sake of "a ribbon to stick in his coat" than to have them misgoverning it for the sake of graft in fat contracts.

"As for those same contracts, you see we manage things like this: I won't go into the whole machinery of it, but at the wind-up the bids on every contract to be awarded, with the full specifications attached to each, are taken out of sealed envelopes in the presence of the entire Municipal Council, publicly announced, and the award made on the spot. There are details like that which you might watch.

"I think there is a reaction against municipal ownership. We have found that it is most uneconomical. There is such a tremendous waste. We have in Edinburgh our own city gas and water, and we own the tramways, but lease them out to be operated. That is the better way.

"If our police are efficient, I don't know what to attribute it to, especially, except that we think policing is a thing that simply must be done reliably and practically, and that we organize our constabulary on the strictest military plan. When we need a new Chief of Police we advertise the fact. Then from the candidates we select the four or five most likely and choose between them by ballot, if necessary, in open Municipal Council. There couldn't possibly be any other recommendation than a record of efficiency.

"The Chief is in military charge of his constables. He is himself removable only by the Government, the Home Office, but he may dismiss, without cause, any man on the force. The plan may not recommend itself to you, but we find that it works and works well. There are simply no cases of police graft; there is no winking at violations of law.

"You can have conditions precisely the same once you make up your minds you mean to have them. After all, that's the point of it. It isn't machinery. It is the determined purpose."

"MAARTEN MAARTENS" EULOGIZES POE

The Distinguished Dutch Author Pays the European Tribute to the American Genius, and Comments Interestingly on the Trend of American Literature.

JOOST MARIUS WILHELM VON DER POORTEN-SCHWARTZ is loved by thousands of Americans, as he is admired all over Europe, as "Maarten Maartens," the author of "God's Fool" and "Joost Aveling." He has written half a dozen other books besides. The writer of those heart-stirring tales of simple Dutchmen in the most provincial of lands is himself a complete cosmopolite. A graduate of an English university, Maarten Maartens has a castle, Zonheuvel, near Dorn, and is a familiar figure where life is keenest in Europe. This is his first visit to America. That he speaks the tongue of the country will surprise nobody who knows that Maarten Maartens writes his books in English.

"Can you tell me where Poe is buried?

"I scarcely expected the answer I have been inquiring for ever since I landed. He is buried somewhere, isn't he, and he is your greatest writer, isn't he? The greatest interest attaches, if one might judge from the controversy which rages to this day, to the cause and manner of his death, but apparently no one knows or cares where his body lies or can direct the foreign pilgrim whither to repair to render his meed of reverence.

"For Europe, while it is not unconscious of the merits of many of your authors, is quite agreed, as it has been from the first, in recognizing the overshadowing genius of Edgar Allan Poe. Is it a human failing that we must always be weighing and measuring men and things which are really altogether incommensurate, and passing our judgments as to whom or what is 'greatest'? There are many forms of literature and many visages of literary genius. Why, then, do we feel that Poe is your greatest? I suppose we recognize in him a universal appeal, a particular power of original creation, an individuality of imagination, a vigor and a grace of expression—in short, a combination of the qualities essential in literature of whatever form such as rarely emerges from among the mass of men and marks its possessor as an indisputable genius.

"You have lately been celebrating the centenary of the birth of a writer of very different gifts—Longfellow. He is highly estimated abroad, too. I wonder if you appreciate the degree to which he is known and loved in England, for instance. Longfellow is, you would say, the singer of songs of a young Nation. Singularly enough, this song quite entranced and still holds the love of a very old nation—of her great middle class at least, and of the simple-hearted among all her classes. Longfellow's imagination perhaps did not soar in adventurous flight above the aeolian mount, but it did invest with sweet loveliness the familiar scenes and the quieter emotions of life. He was the poet of the simple folk who like to meditate upon what perhaps may be obvious, but is none the less eternally true.

"The English are quite filled with the sentiments of Longfellow's poetry. You need not wonder that it is his bust which is in the Abbey. There is a lilt to his verse that endears it to the childish ear and that makes it easy of remembrance. And the content of it is surely worthy of remembrance. You do wrong to underestimate your Longfellow. He was a great writer.

"Still, it shows the sharpening of the critical faculty among you that Poe is being placed by an increasing number of his countrymen in his true position at the head of American literature.

Is Modern Tendency Toward Realism?

"You tell me that this is due to the fact that the New England school no longer dominates American literature, creative or critical, and I fancy this may be an accurate account of the matter. Leisurely, respectable gentlemen like Longfellow, Bryant, Lowell, and Holmes, growing into comfortable old age, preserving the conservative traditions of Boston, could have little understanding for the nervous spirit, the adventurous imagination, the eager seeking for a medium of expression that possessed Poe and drove him into his grave at so early an age.

"That could no more be expected than that the Lake school of English poets, with placid souls—how old was Wordsworth when he died?—should have sympathized with the impatience that allowed Byron to exhibit "through Europe to the Aetolian shore, the pageant of his bleeding heart,' or the poetic passion with which the soul of a Keats or a Shelley beat at the bars of its cage till death released it before youth had been outlived.

"Probably it is well that the modern literary instinct is toward realism. Of course, everything literary must be in a way realistic—must answer to realities in the soul or in life. I hope this doesn't mean that fiction must undertake the work of photography. Isn't that asking art to cease to be itself and to become mechanics? However, it is probably well that realism of the right sort, truth to the facts, should be demanded by readers of novels.

"Do you think it is true that the American reading public want that kind of realism? Why is it, then, that 'historic' romances which have no possible conformity with any state of society that the sun ever shone upon rank among, or even take the place at the head of, your 'best-sellers'?" Mr. Poorten-Schwartz named a romance, by an Indiana writer, phenomenally popular a few years ago. "Does that indicate a demand for realism? Perhaps, however, the public is easily deceived as to facts in a realm about which it is not specially informed—as I take it, many Americans may not be as to the life, language, and social customs of a mediaeval Court. Very likely if the same author were to write a novel of life in the Middle West to-day he would be held relentlessly to book by a conscientious reading world.

"It is very easy to fall into error as to this matter of literary realism. It ought not to be necessary to point out that the habit of studying the details of life on its darker side alone is a perversion of the realistic idea. This is the fault, as everybody understands, of the modern French school. Another one of its faults—though this is not participated in by all—is the belief that realism means a photographic reproduction of conditions.

Artist or Mere Recorder?

"Zola is the foremost offender in both these respects—and that in spite of the fact that he meant to be, and is, a moral teacher of immense importance. Perhaps an artist has no business to be deliberately a moral teacher. Certainly he has no business to abandon the exercise of his faculty of artistic selection, suppression, and arrangement, and make himself merely an instrument of mechanical record. And certainly he has no business to devote himself to the scrutiny of life's horrors, miseries, and degradations and represent them as the whole of the human scene.

"Zola kept for years a record of horrors. I find reproduced in La Terre, with all the dreadful faithfulness with which the newspapers at the time reported it, an incident which impressed me years ago as a very young man—the slow burning in front of their kitchen fire of their aged mother by her sons, who meantime sang hymns and prayed. But it is not fair to represent French peasants as habitually given to burning their aged parents before the fire. Photographic reproductions of dreadful scenes do not really describe life.

"Maupassant, on the other hand, insisted on being an artist. He, too, saw nothing, or at least thought nothing worth writing about, in life but what was depressing and disagreeable. It is curious that the French nowadays turn with such unanimity to 'the forbidden'—a phrase which in their country appears to mean that one is forbidden to write about anything else. But Maupassant selected and arranged, possessed his material and shaped it, instead of being possessed by it. So his work is delightful, notwithstanding the ugliness of his material. The work of an artist, conceived and executed in the masterful spirit which allows man to be in his sphere a creator, is always delightful and always a contribution to human joy and human progress.

"Realism is nothing that is not informed by this spirit.

"The English-speaking nations have a peculiar interest in the preservation of the art of fiction in its highest traditions. The novel in its present form is really an English product. It appeared about 200 years ago in England. Are you going to celebrate extensively the bicentenary of the birth of Fielding? There is no doubt, I suppose, that he is the greatest among novelists using the English tongue. There, again, we go making comparisons. But it is inevitable. One may speak of Thackeray. But Thackeray was in a way a disciple of Fielding. Shall the disciple be greater than his master? How splendid that generous-hearted, full-souled, sunny-natured realist he was! And what a splendid array of novelists since him have maintained the glory of the art of English fiction!"

HERR VON IHNE ON OUR ARCHITECTURE

The Court Architect to the German Emperor Praises the Progress in Building This Country Is Making, and Compliments New York Upon Her Impressive Daring.

A MAN who has impressed all who have come in contact with him as decidedly one of the most able of all in attendance upon the Carnegie events of the month is Ernst E. von Ihne, Court Architect to the German Emperor. Herr von Ihne counts among his creations many of the finest public buildings in Germany, including the Museum, Berlin; the library now building at Berlin; the throne room of the Palace, and the palace of the Empress Frederick at Potsdam.

Herr von Ihne occupied with Gen. von Loewenfeld one of the two most prominent seats on the platform filled with the brilliant assembly of guests at the Carnegie Institute dedication on Thursday. He is accompanied by his wife, whose marked beauty has attracted universal attention.

"I see the greatest hope for a magnificent architectural future for America. You are at work meeting conditions. That is the thing that architects have always to do. No nation can achieve a national architecture whose artists say: 'Let us build in the Gothic style,' or, 'No, let us build in Romanesque; that is better.' A country has simply to begin and build; it will start with what style it believes best suited to its particular problems, but it will just develop as it appreciates its needs. I have my idea as to what historic style is best suited to be the foundation of your architecture, but you may find another to be the best one. That doesn't matter. The point I make now is that you in America are earnestly striving to meet the particular problems of buildings fitted for dwellings, business houses, and public halls in America—problems different in many respects from any hitherto attacked by architects—and you are meeting these problems with a surprising degree of success, considering how brief has been the time during which you have been at it.

The Daring Spirit of New York.

"New York is most impressive in the daring and untrammeled spirit in which it is thrusting up its gigantic fabrics into the air. Consider, whoever before undertook to erect what is almost a city under a single roof on such a plot of ground as that on which stands that Flatiron Building. And how brilliantly you have dealt with a similar problem in The Times Building.

"You do right, precisely right, to treat these tall buildings frankly as towers. That is exactly what they are. Already you have the campanile of Giotto standing in the most conspicuous point along your thoroughfare, and, I believe, other great towers reproduced in other parts of the city.

"Your problem has been to make the most of every inch of land. The concentration of the people in the city has brought conditions from which architects of former years have been free.

"I must say that I believe that the limits of high buildings will soon be reached and that their multiplication will soon cease. You are closer possibly than you think to the point at which it will be impossible to transport more people to and from their work. It is all very well to have these immense towers here and there, and perhaps gathered in considerable number in some parts of town. But if the streets are to become great canyons lined with solid blocks of towers it will be eventually impossible to get their inhabitants in and out. Then the question of daylight will be one incapable of solution. You will, I think, find it advisable and necessary to limit the height of buildings, as we do generally in Europe.

"But to return to the question of style. People often ask why we have no style to-day, why we are all adrift as to the most elementary principles of the art, and reveal so often the most execrable taste.

"The reason, I believe, is this: Until within the last few years architecture has had no chance. The nineteenth century was one of war and of disturbed social and political conditions and of general poverty. All the arts suffered, and especially did those which require large outlay suffer. Not only were no great buildings erected, but men forgot how to build, and when we began again it was in ignorance and forgetfulness. The result was the horrible warnings which exist on every side. If only the tradition of good building had been remembered we should have been spared all that.

Back to The Eighteenth Century.

"Now that we are prosperous again and minded to build, we shall do well if we go back to the eighteenth century and begin again where architects left off. Why begin at the beginning? Why puzzle again over the problems which earlier centuries have definitely settled? I consider that there are certain things pretty well determined in architecture. The sixteenth century definitely discarded Gothic as a style for domestic or commercial architecture. Conditions of life have altered since the days when Gothic was properly employed, and it is mere slavish imitation to build in it now. I do not speak of ecclesiastical architecture. Religion is essentially unchanging, and its aspirations express themselves in forms permanent and stretching from age to age. But domestic life is not to-day what it was in the Middle Ages, and commercial life in its modern sense is a new thing in the world.

"My belief is that the world was right in agreeing, as it did, that the classic form was the one which might best be progressively adapted to the needs of modern life. In the eighteenth century it had reached the highest development, for its purpose, of the classical style. My feeling is that we are wise in going back to that point, not to rest in its achievement, but to progress from it, having in mind always the necessity of studying our particular problem and in dealing with it freely and creatively, yet with intelligence informed of the history of past architectural endeavor.

"The information is acquired. The creative spirit is more a native gift. It is the evidences of it that fill me with confidence that great architectural triumphs will be wrought in this land of the West.

"In my opinion there has been in the history of architecture a progressive though sometimes interrupted development of style as an expression of the architectural requirements of society, and in order to progress still further we must start from an advanced point that had been reached before the continuity of progress was interrupted. Yet, if we would not stand still, we must constantly work at the adaptation of old means to new wants which have arisen and are arising in our time. In domestic architecture much has been done in this respect, especially in England, and of late years in Germany.

"But in no other country is progress more likely to be brought about in this way than in the United States, where architects have already shown themselves well able to grapple with new architectural problems arising from new requirements, as in your admirable libraries, or from new methods of construction, as in your giant commercial buildings, and when the opportunities offered to architects are more frequent and the means at their disposal greater than in any country or in any age. The advancement of art has always been promoted by the peaceful rivalry of nations, and I therefore feel sure that the art of European countries can only gain by our finding, as we certainly shall in the United States of America, a competitor as formidable on the domain of art as they are in commerce and in industry."

WHERE find the man who would spend millions for sentiment? Why, in Wall Street, of course—in the land of contradictions. Nor is it an unnatural quest, for in order to spend a million for sentiment one must have accumulated sufficient other millions to be able to afford the luxury. And Wall Street is perhaps the only place where such luxuries attract no extraordinary attention.

To find not one man, however, but several who would spend the million, or even spend $400,000 or $500,000, primarily for sentimental considerations that eliminato very largely, if not entirely, any possibility of income from the investment, may be worth chronicling even as a development of Wall Street affairs. So it is a double interest with which one may examine the views that THE TIMES prints herewith of three banking houses which have been erected within the last five years, to all intents and purposes exclusively for the business of the firms themselves.

These three houses are all within a stone's throw of one another, those of Speyer & Co. and Redmond & Co. being practically opposite, in Pine Street, while the rear windows of Harvey Fisk & Co. look out upon those of the Speyer firm from its Cedar Street location. Their setting is one of skyscrapers, which make their modest five or six stories seem low indeed; yst when the rent producing power of Wall Street real estate is considered, the contrast serves only to emphasize the strength of the sentiment prompting the non-productive investment of a very large amount of money.

What a different condition from that which prevails a little further down the hill toward the East River, where fortunes have been made and lost and and made again in the old shacks of buildings that house important trading establishments, in iron, in oils, wool, and a thousand other commodities. It is a matter only of a few minutes' walk from the Sub-Treasury corner, in the heart of Wall Street, to Burling Slip, where the old-fashioned sign, "Peter Cooper," hung out in front of an equally old-fashioned building, tells where one of the famous fortunes of New York City was made and maintained. The grandsons of the founder still do their business in the old offices. That is by reason of one variety of tradition.

The Pioneer Builders.

The other form, which has found its extreme development in the erection of palatial banking houses for private use exclusively, in a section of the city where one must cover land with gold in order to buy it, had its beginning, no doubt, long before there was any idea of eliminating altogether the investment feature. The firm "at the corner," J. P. Morgan & Co., was one of the very first, if not the first, to occupy a building designed in part, even, for their own use. It was when the name was Drexel, Morgan & Co. that the Drexel Building was erected at Wall and Broad Streets, a showplace in its day and a landmark so long as it shall stand by reason of the large events that have been shaped within its swinging doors.

The building that Brown Brothers still occupy at 59 Wall Street dates from the same period, or, possibly, even antedates the Drexel Building. Both, at any rate, have long since reached their majority.

The age of skyscrapers came eventually, with its buildings first of ten or twelve stories, then of fifteen or eighteen, now of twenty-five, and to-morrow, no doubt, of forty. To the more commodious quarters that these structures afforded bankers were attracted from their dingy old-time offices, which are now but a memory, or live in the prints of magazines of another generation. It was not a large step to the erection of skyscrapers of their own. So Kuhn, Loeb & Co. built at 27 Pine Street and then again on a larger scale at 52 William Street. Blair & Co. at 18 and 20 Broad Street followed suit, and varied the customary performance by taking their own offices on the floor above the street, renting the lower story to the Continental Trust Company and to its successor, the New York Trust Company. More recently Kean, Van Cortlandt & Co. have built at 30 Pine Street, and now Flower & Co. are completing a new building just above their old offices in lower Broadway, and J. & W. Seligman, one of the oldest firms in Wall Street, are shortly to move into a building of their own at Beaver and William Streets, opposite the Cotton Exchange.

How the Speyer Building Came.

But all of these buildings were erected with a view to renting a considerable amount of space for general office purposes. It remained for James Speyer, the senior partner of Speyer & Co., to figure out a scheme for a banking house that should be the firm's own, and should commemorate, in its completion in 1902, sixty-five years of business in New York's financial community. The site of the Speyer Building was chosen not only for its central location, but because the ground opposite, between the squat Sub-Treasury Building and the building at 25 Pine Street, was owned by the United States Government and hardly likely to be built upon in a hurry. It was the backyard to the Assay Office.

The model chosen for the exterior of the Speyer Building was a famous Florentine palace by Raphael, known as the Palacio Pandolfino. The architecture is that of the Italian Renaissance, and the general architectural scheme is followed throughout the building, although naturally the interior plans of an Italian palace of the fifteenth century could hardly be accommodated to the demands of a twentieth century banking house without material modification.

As one enters the house of Speyer & Co. the first thing that attracts the eye is the arrangement of the interior court, which is surrounded by the private offices of the firm, those of the senior partners on the one side and those of the junior partners and heads of departments on the other. The decorations are entirely of Italian marble, and are the more striking because of their simplicity. Above there is a mezzanine gallery, and above that the full height of two stories more before the roof is reached.

Two Stories Below Ground.

An examination of the Speyer Building, however, should begin in the subcellar, for some of the most interesting things about it are discoverable below ground. First, there is the heating and ventilation plant, by which air pumped in from outside is combed and filtered and then pumped at whatever temperature is desired to the different floors. One looks in vain in this subbasement for the foundations of a vault for the safekeeping of the millions of securities that a great banking house carries in its ordinary course of business, and the tens of millions more that may represent the private resources of the firm. The reason is that the ceiling of the sub-cellar forms the floor of the vault. It is a very substantial sort of ceiling, something over two feet thick and made up of railroad iron, steel plates, and cement.

That ceiling is supposed to be burglar proof, but whether it is or not the free space beneath the vault makes it impossible that any dime novel heroes should tunnel through from the outside and come up from the ground into the midst of the bonds and stocks of Speyer & Co. and their customers. And as a watchman makes hourly rounds during the night it would require pretty quick work to pick a hole through the ceiling of the cellar in order to effect an entrance without discovery.

In the first basement is the entrance of the vault proper. This is guarded by steel grille work with bars an inch and a half thick, and then by an eighton door with a raft of locks and bolts and complicated burglar alarms. Inside there is a space some twenty feet long by seven or eight wide, with thirty or forty compartments that contain a prince's ransom in securities. Steel walls nearly a foot thick guard these treasures, and outside the steel there is a light pine sheathing, which as a matter of fact, affords the surest protection of all. For the sheathing is backed by a fine wire screen, charged with electricity, and if one so much as sticks the point of his pocket knife through the half-inch of pine board, having previously disposed of the watchman, it sounds a burglar alarm in an office tucked away somewhere down town and inhabited by folks who make it their business to protect Wall Street's billions during the night.

But enough of the vault, interesting though it is, else we shall have no time to look around the rest of the building. Returning to the first floor, it is worth while to glance into the private offices of James Speyer. There the finish is of simple, unpolished oak. The place is high paneled and comfortable looking. The big fireplace has heard a good many notable conversations, and so has the inner sanctum in the rear of the large front office.

Where the Machinery Is Located.

Going up to the mezzanine floor, one finds the clerks and bookkeepers of the concern, their desks ranged around the gallery, which gets its light and air from huge windows front and rear and from a big skylight thirty odd feet above. Here the machinery of the banking house is operated; to that cage over on the left are brought, each morning, the securities from the vaults below needed in the business that day. At the close of business they are gathered up again and restored to their safe resting place. By this method the transfer of stocks and bonds between the banking house and some outside place of deposit is avoided.

Above the mezzanine floor, on what would ordinarily be the fourth floor of the building, are the boardroom, rooms for consultations or luncheons, as the case may be, several individual offices, and the library and archives of the firm. The boardroom, of which a picture is produced herewith, is one of the handsomest in New York. Its panels are of warm mahogany, so is the long table and the desks. On one side is a fireplace as large as the one in the private offices downstairs. This is of black marble and its fittings of wrought iron. On the walls are prints of old New York, and higher up oil paintings of the founders of the Speyer firm, bankers of an earlier generation.

If one had a ladder he could climb across from the board room of Speyer & Co. into the luncheon room of Harvey Fisk & Co. over on Cedar Street. In the Harvey Fisk firm it is the custom of the partners to eat their luncheon together with such gentlemen for their guests as may find the hour a convenient one to discuss business. The banking house has its own kitchen and two Japanese as waiters; also there is a telephone on a side table with a connecting wire so long that anybody sitting at meat can talk to the world outside if it is desired.

Rearing Corporations by Hand.

The board room at Harvey Fisk & Co. has a special interest because of the fact that it is also the board room for a half a dozen "family" corporations and their financial headquarters. Most notable among these are the Hudson Companies, which are constructing what is known as the McAdoo tunnels across the North River, and the Hudson & Manhattan Railway Company, which is to be the operating company for the great tunnel project. The Electrical Bond and Share Company is another of these "family" concerns and the Electrical Securities Company another. This method of rearing corporations by hand, as it were, of having them spend their infancy in the home of the financial interest that gave them birth, presents something of a contrast with certain other modes of corporate procedure, under which it has appeared that the great desire of the parents was to be rid of the children at the earliest opportunity, sending them over to the great corporate orphan asylum in Jersey City, where the names of 1,400 odd companies on the big signboards of the Corporation Trust Company tell the inquirer that they may be visited there at least once a year for an hour or so.

The library and statistical department at Harvey Fisk & Co. is one of the most interesting parts of the banking house to the student of corporation affairs. There, as in the statistical departments of many other large Wall Street houses, are reports of corporations and corporation manuals running as far back as such things go, and a raft of general matter, indexed and arranged so as to be immediately available to the workers below. The development of statistical departments is relatively a recent matter in the banking world, but their importance is becoming more and more recognized.

Separation of Traffic.

On the mezzanine floor at Harvey Fisk & Co., as in the case of the Speyer firm, the clerks of various varieties are quartered. It encircles as a gallery the high walls of the down stairs banking room. By means of a vestibule and special stairway, persons coming to the general office for deliveries or other matters of business routine do not go through the lower offices at all, but have a direct means of communication that is entirely convenient and saves an immense amount of unnecessary bustle down stairs.

The private offices of Harvey Fisk & Co. are ranged around the lower floor, which has the width of two ordinary buildings now that the addition has been completed to the quarters which the firm first occupied a matter of three years ago. Marble and mahogany are the materials that impress the mind in the scheme of interior decoration. Below the ground there is the great vault, with its twelveton doors, one at each end, so that there may never be any difficulty about getting it open at the proper time if anything chanced to happen to the time-lock mechanism at one portal or the other.

An outside vault for the preservation of books and records is, of course, provided, to afford against fire the protection that is quite as essential for the archives of a banking house as it is to the securities themselves. An individual of the utmost importance tends the door in the securities vault of Harvey Fisk & Co. He is James F. Thomas, a colored man, who was the personal attendant of the founder of the firm fifty years ago, and has been handling securities in one form or another for a matter of twenty-one years. They will tell you that, according to James Thomas's stories about his personal experiences, he must be at least 236 years old.

Redmond & Co.'s Remarkable Vaults.

Over in the new building of Redmond & Co., at 33 Pine Street, there is one of the most remarkable vaults anywhere in the country. It is virtually five stories high, some fifteen feet square all the way up, and built of manganese steel a foot or two thick. The reason for its construction lies in the fact that the offices of Post & Flagg, at 38 Wall Street, back up against the basement story of the Redmond Building, and the difference in grade between Wall and Pine Streets makes it possible for the brokerage firm to use the lower compartment of the vault, while the banking house uses the compartments corresponding to the three floors that it occupies at present. The fourth floor of the Redmond Building is occupied by the New York office of the Bank of Montreal, which is the only tenant of the banking firm. The upper section of the vault, of course, is as useful to the bank as the lower section is to the brokerage house.

In its general division of departments the offices of Redmond & Co. differ somewhat from the two that have already been described, in that the front section of the lower floor is given over to the department heads, while behind them are the banking accommodations. A "separation of traffic" is effected here also by having messengers and the like enter the building by a hallway that contains the elevators running to the floors above. The telegraph room, a customer's room, and the private offices of the members of the firm fill up the remaining space on the ground floor. Above are the bookkeeping and statistical departments and an extensive mailing department that is as complete in its appointments as a rapid addressing establishment. As soon as the building is entirely completed there will be a board room in the upper story of the Redmond Building, as there is in the other offices that have been described.

Enter an Eclectic Cult

WITH headquarters located in the Long Island home town of President Roosevelt's friend Jacob Riis, The Esoteric Literature Society has sprung into being. The prospectus put forth by this make-wrong-right element indicates that it will not be idle existence for theirs; on the contrary, so extensive is the outlined plan of remedial campaign now in view that the question suggests itself whether the longest life must not necessarily prove all too brief for the complete accomplishment. The recognized shortcomings of society generally are enumerated at length, and it is in this direction primarily that the esoterics purpose revolutionizing social science, meanwhile eliminating big chunks of the exaggerated ego all along the line. It is expected that by the introduction of novel processes sociological philanthropy at large will result.

Among the esoteric aims evolved is the achievement of "an education in true religion, propounding the teachings of spiritualism, Catholicism, and the mysteries of life immortal, while expounding logical and convincing proofs of the existence of the soul, the real being who unfolds under the physical shell of mankind, and remains an individual, immortal intelligence, having power of will and realization after transition through death."

The following interesting statement is next presented: "The world—religious, social, and commercial—is ruled by psychic forces influenced by spiritual telepathy from the spirits of the great ethereal world. There are millions of people who attend church presumably to save their souls, yet really do not understand the philosophy of the soul—soul development, soul power, soul regeneration, soul transition, soul reincarnation, and soul destination. Why such ignorance of matters of supreme importance in this era of enlightenment and mental profession?"

As evidence of the fact that the society's publication, "The Sacred Mascot," is "replete with transcendental knowledge," announcement is made to the effect that besides treating of the "great secrets of the world" the volume contains references to these timely subjects:

The Alchemic Elixir of Gold, The Secrets of the Philosopher's Stone, The Sacred Arcanum of the Vatican, The Secret Link Between Freemasons and Knights of Columbus, The New Thought Origin of Life, The Myth Serpent of the Garden of Paradise, Auto-Suggestion, Therapeutic Suggestion, Mental Telepathy, Mental Poise, Hypnotism, Clairvoyance, Dreams, Visions, Introspection, Spirit Manifestations, The Seven Forbidden Arts, Home Cure for Insanity, Attainment of Long Life, The Great Hindu Secrets, Scientific Definition of Eternal Life, Sacred Definition of Eternal Life, Explanation of Spiritualism, Alpha and Omega of Religion, Individual Salvation, A Sacred Description of the Soul, Sacred Definition of the Virginity of Mary, Blessed Mother of Jesus, Hereditary Divinity of Jesus, The Irish Catholic Schism, Foundation of a Papal See in America, Ecclesiastical Providence, Hypnotism in Church, Benedictions and Maledictions, Nepotism, Embezzlement of Church Funds, Good Priests Holy Men, Unchristian Prelates, Catholic Encyclopedias, The Electrical Ether, Elementals, Metempsychosis, Mythology, Sons of God, Pigmies, The Spiritual World, The Veritable Millennium, The End of This World, Animalism, Humanism, Spiritism, Positive Cure for Liquor-Drug Habits.

The reassuring intelligence is furnished that the book (price $1, postpaid,) is forwarded "securely sealed from observation." In addition to the galaxy of brainstorm helps mentioned above the society promises to send a copy of "The Key to Spiritualism" (now in course of preparation) to each subscriber free of charge. The latter tome is declared to be a "concise explanation of spirit life, good spirits, evil spirits, the death trance, purgatory, heaven and God," &c. It is claimed to be designed for "self education and development in spiritual wisdom, which includes knowledge of personal magnetism, hypnotic influence, power of concentration, introspection, clairvoyance, spiritual mediumship, sacred magic as well as magnetic healing—all explained without mysticism so that a child can comprehend, thus the studious may attain great knowledge, power, wealth, and virtue."

Seemingly as an earnest of good faith the refreshing news is promulgated that it is proposed to establish in every community a society composed of chosen representatives to ventilate the esoteric propaganda, and incidentally labor toward the advancement of righteousness by inculcating "true knowledge for the development of the divine, occult, and spiritual attributes latent in every true human being." Need more be said? Yes, the story would be incomplete without stating that "The Sacred Mascot" is quoted as revealing secret knowledge hitherto reserved religiously for prelates. Hypnotism, so old, so simple, still so little understood, is a great power for good or evil. Therefore, every one should learn to guard themselves against evil-minded hypnotists. Our literature will benefit you a hundredfold by imparting new hope, new energy, new understanding, new life. Obey the divine mandamus and learn to know yourself and your eternal future.

Dyspeptic Philosophy

His Intentions Were Good

LONDON, April 3.—The Portsmouth man who recently thought he had seen the missing Delaware boy, Horace Marvin, made a lot of trouble for those to whom his story was referred for investigation.

Waiting for a train at Portsmouth Harbor Station, he saw two men and a boy, and heard the boy ask one of the men, "When are you going to take me to my father?"

That evening the man told his wife about the boy, and she instantly advised him that the boy had been stolen, and so the man himself concluded the next day when he read in his London paper the story of the Marvin boy's disappearance. And he not only concluded the boy he had seen had been stolen, but he went so far as to announce to his family that undoubtedly that boy was the Marvin boy. The Marvin boy, his papa said, had gelden hair and blue eyes; so had the boy seen at the Portsmouth Station—undoubtedly they were ons and the same.

Without stopping to eat his breakfast the man hastened to the Headquarters of the Portsmouth police and told his story. The Police Superintendent commented on it skeptically, but agreed to investigate, and within an hour satisfied himself the boy in question was an English boy whom he would be able to find within a day or two.

While his investigation was proceeding he heard from Scotland Yard, the American Embassy, the Consul at Southampton, and the Consular Agent at Portsmouth, in consequence of letters sent out by the man who had become possessed with the idea he had seen the Marvin boy.

"I expect to produce that boy this afternoon," the Superintendent said Saturday morning to the Consular Agent at Portsmouth, and when I called upon the agent he told me the missing Marvin boy was to be delivered into his care very soon—the great event might take place any moment. The poor Consular Agent had misunderstood the Police Superintendent. The Superintendent meant him to understand he would produce the boy seen at the railway station; the agent thought the words "that boy" were meant to designate the Marvin boy.

Well, the boy was produced about 9 o'clock in the evening. I saw him at the house of his uncle, who has been a resident of Portsmouth and a property owner there for a good many years.

"That's the way of the world," the Superintendent philosophically remarked; "missing boys are quite apt to be located in a dozen or two different places, and all at one time."

Thomas Bevan, a cement manufacturer who died recently, left a will which contains a number of very remarkable provisions. I will quote one of these provisions—the one which expresses the testator's desire that none of his daughters nor granddaughters shall marry a clergyman. It says:

"Convinced as I am that it is impossible in these present times for a man possessed of the combination of the quality of straightforwardness with the ordinary intellectual qualifications to make the solemn declaration required at ordination, which required him to affirm, for example, his belief in the historical accuracy of the Book of Genesis, including the history, circumstances, and account of Noah's Ark, as contained therein, and that the writers of Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John were more than feeble and fallible, who often did great injustice to the Greatest of Men, for instance when two of them attributed to Him the expectation that figs were to be found in Judea before Easter and a curse from Him, being hungry, to a fig tree because there were none—I should regard with the greatest misgiving were my daughters or either of my granddaughters to marry a clergyman, believing, as I do, that in the future they will suffer much distress."

RAILWAY OFFICIALS IN ALARM OVER WRECKS

Pennsylvania Heads Making Strenuous Efforts to Prevent Further Mischief and Also to Trace Miscreants.

PITTSBURG, April 12.—Five thousand dollars a day is being spent by the Pennsylvania Railroad in the effort to run down train wreckers in the Pittsburg district.

This is considered a conservative estimate by those who have gone over the ground carefully and have private information as to the inside workings of the great system of investigation which has been set on foot to unearth the most coldblooded and cruel gang of train wreckers that ever cursed a road or made travel a hazard. And the railroad authorities stand ready to double that amount of daily outlay, if necessary, in order that they may get their hands on the miscreants. There are standing rewards aggregating $8,000 for information leading to the arrest of those who have wrecked the big trains.

Many Lives Endangered.

Never was railroad so harassed as has been the Pennsylvania within the last three weeks, and never were the lives of so many passengers in jeopardy as has been the case with the fast Pennsylvania trains. Four trains have been wrecked—in cold blood, and wrecked by those who knew not only the construction of railroads from beginning to end, but were also familiar with the local workings of the line at the point they chose to set about their fiendish work. There have been wrecks reported which were not wrecks at all, but the following are known to be the work of train wreckers, beyond doubt:

Stewart Station, Penn., March 22, 3:15 A. M., Chicago Limited, on main line of Pennsylvania, thrown from the rails, which had been cunningly tampered with and disjointed. Tools of wreckers found by the track. About ten people, including Mayor Tom L. Johnson of Cleveland, slightly hurt.

Wilmerding, Penn., March 27, about 3 A. M., fast Keystone Limited, from Pittsburg to New York, thrown from rails on banks of Turtle Creek by train wreckers, who had again disjointed rails and left their tools. Slow speed saved train from plunging over steep embankment into Turtle Creek. At the same time rails were disjointed on an adjoining track, over which Chicago Limited westbound was coming, and then almost due, it having been evidently the idea of the fiends to have one fast train sent into the creek, and another one sent plunging on top of this a few minutes later. The Chicago Limited was late, and was thus saved.

Tyrone, Penn., April 4, fast silk train, running on schedule of passenger train, crashed into tie which had been tied to the track on a curve. The train was not derailed, owing to the fact that the crew had been warned that six hours before a tie had been tied to the track at this point. The passenger train on whose schedule the silk train was running usually rounded this point at about forty miles an hour.

Hudson, Ohio, April 6, fast Cleveland and Pittsburg flyer derailed by rails, having been disjointed, as were the rails at Stewart Station and at Wilmerding, the fish plate being used to hold the separated rails apart, as in the other cases. The engine kept the rails, and thereby saved a frightful accident, as the track was in a deep cut. The baggage car and part of the train piled up.

These are the wrecks to uncover which the Pennsylvania Railroad is now spending more than $200 each hour, day and night. The best of detectives in the country have been called in. The following authentic list of officers at work on the case is furnished THE TIMES correspondent here by the railroad people:

Sixty regular railroad detectives between Pittsburg and Altoona, Penn.

Sixty special detectives, most of them Pinkertons from Chicago and New York.

Entire force of two private detective bureaus at Pittsburg.

Sheriff Gumbert of Allegheny County with three deputies.

Chief of Detectives Egan of Pittsburg and three detectives.

Twenty regular railroad detectives between Pittsburg and Hudson, Ohio.

Sheriff of Summit County, Ohio, and twelve deputies.

Sheriff of Portage County, Ohio, and seven deputies.

Sheriff of Cuyshoga County, Ohio, and seventeen deputies.

Chief of Detectives of Cleveland and eight detectives.

Constables of almost every town and township between Altoona, Penn., and Hudson, Ohio.

In addition to this the force of track walkers has been doubled. Instead of patroling the tracks every fifteen minutes as had been the custom the tracks are now patrolled every seven minutes. In fact in daytime track walkers rarely lose sight of each other, and at night the lantern of the track walker ahead is always seen by the man behind.

And yet the railroad people are afraid. The diabolical ingenuity of the train wreckers has been such as to make the cold chills run up and down the spines of the railroad people, and they do not know the time the wrecker will slip out of the woods in the path of a fast flying train and ditch it. It takes only five minutes for a real live train wrecker such as the vandals now at large have shown themselves to be, to tear up the track so that the train will be ditched. This has been shown by practical illustration.

After the late wreck at Hudson, Ohio, the railroad officials insisted on seeing a real wrecker at work. There had been an impression among them that it would take at least half an hour's work to tamper so cunningly with the track, and they called for one of the best track workmen obtainable. The plans of the wreckers were laid before him. He was shown just what the wreckers had done not only at Hudson, but at Stewart Station and Wilmerding. To him was given a track wrench, clawbar, and a hammer, and the track where he was to begin was pointed out to him. Stop watches were pulled at the word the workman dashed to the track.

Expert's Work Surprised Them.

Crash! A spike came tearing out of the heavy tie on the inside of the hundred-pound rail close to a joint, the clawbar having been shot under it by the expert workman. Bang! Bang! Bang! came the spikes in succession, while the railroad officials reeled at the speed. Six, seven, eight spikes came out from as many different ties, and like a flash the workman was at the bolts and nuts of the fish plate holding the ends of the rails. They came off with a few whirls of the wrist. The heavy clawbar was inserted under the outer edge of the now weakened rail and the end was shoved in just past the end of the yet firm rail. One of the released fish plates was dropped in to hold it in this position. The workman held up his hand.

"My God!" sobbed the railroad officials. "Five minutes."

And it was so. In five short minutes one workman had done just what the train wreckers have been doing. He had loosened a rail and shoved it over just far enough to have the flange of the locomotive coming in a certain direction catch it and throw the whole train off the track. This is what the train wreckers have been doing.

Yet so fine has been the hand of the wrecker that had the rail at any time been shoved a fraction of an inch further in the whole work would have been uncovered. The rail was shoved just far enough to make taut the "bond wire," but not to break it. The bond wire is a small connecting wire between the two rails, and which controls the danger signal at some point not far distant. Had the rail been moved far enough by the wreckers to break that little wire, thus breaking the connection, the danger signal would have been run up and the train would have been stopped. It was the fineness of the hand work which moved these rails just far enough not to break the connection that showed the railroad people that it was the work of one of the most observant of railroad men.

The rails were fixed in the way above described at the Stewart Station wreck. The railroad people did not worry so much about this wreck, though they saw it was the work of good railroad men, for the rails had been "fixed" on level ground, and in this the officials thought they saw the work of an angered ex-employe, who did not wish to kill any one, so chose the open field and level ground.

But five days later came the fiendish attempt at double wrecking of two fast trains. This was at Wilmerding, on the banks of Turtle Creek, which flows at this point over rocks about thirty feet down. The inside rail of the track on which the Keystone Express was flying east was "fixed," and that the whole train was not thrown onto the rocks below was because the engineer had been forced by some accident to slow up. As it was, the train left the rails and came very near toppling over into the creek.

The developments of the next few minutes were more terrifying. It was found that the westbound track, too, had been "fixed." The Chicago Limited was coming over this track and was due in seven minutes. The place where the westbound track had been fixed was just twenty-seven feet from the point where the eastbound track had been disjointed. Had the Keystone Express been a few minutes late, as it frequently is, and the Limited on time, as it usually is, the extent of this double planned disaster would have been something awful. The fiends had planned to throw the Keystone, which was on the second of the four tracks, across the outside track, if not into the river, and right in the track of the fast flying Chicago Limited.

There is rumor that the Pennsylvania will offer $25,000 reward for the wreckers.

STRANGE TEMPORARY MANIA.

A possible solution of the mystery surounding the repeated attempts that have recently been made to wreck trains on the Pennsylvania Railroad is advanced by a signal engineer who has been for many years in the employ of the New York Central. This solution is based on the following strange experience which this engineer told a TIMES reporter:

"Some years ago," he said, "out West, at a junction of three railroads, there were six consecutive attempts to derail a train. All of these attempts were made at the same hour, and at the same point on the road on each successive day. After the first two attempts the man who had charge of the signals grew suspicious. Knowing that something must be wrong, and believing that it was a case of spite on the part of one of the men along the line, he detailed a young fellow, Hines by name, an apprentice on the signal corps, to watch the place. He selected Hines because he had a reputation for brightness and reliability, and was well able physically to look out for himself in a possible hand-to-hand fight with a train wrecker.

"For three nights Hines watched at the junction, and on each occasion the attempt at derailment was repeated. This made five attempts in all, and the railroad company naturally began to view the matter with the utmost seriousness. Fortunately, the would-be train wrecker had been unsuccessful.

"Hines was put through a rigid examination in regard to the matter, but could offer no satisfactory explanation of why the attempted derailments took place at a certain hour during his watch and yet escaped his notice. There had never been any question of Hines's honesty, as he was considered one of the company's most trusted employes, and showed, besides, unusual intelligence in his work. This added to the mystery. Some one was trying to cause a horrible railroad accident—endeavoring to carry out his fiendish plot, with the strangest persistence, right under Hines's very nose, apparently, and yet Hines knew nothing about it.

"There was only one thing to do—put on more watchmen. The engineer in charge of the road employing Hines secretly notified the engineers of the two other roads forming the junction at the place, and on the sixth night, at the fatal hour, there was a watchman from each of the three railway companies on the ground. Hines was one of them.

"Between the hours of 7 and 9 had invariably been the time chosen by the unknown wrecker for his work on the five preceding nights. At 8 o'clock on the sixth night the two new watchmen suddenly saw Hines advance hurriedly down the track. He stopped for a moment, scrutinized the rails carefully, and looked up and down the road in a stealthy manner. The men could see, by an occasional glimpse of his upturned face, that he muttering to himself, at the same time that he was gesticulating excitedly. Suddenly he jumped to the side bed of the track, seized a handspike which lay there, hesitated a moment, and then deftly threw open one of the rails in the switch where he stood.

"The two watchmen expected a hard fight with the self-revealed wrecker, as he was a muscular, sturdily built fellow, with something of a name in that locality for quick work with his fists. To their surprise, however, he offered no resistance as they jumped on him from the bushes. He looked at them blankly, pointed with a vacant sort of laugh to what he had done to the open rail, and followed his captors without any protest or attempted defense. He talked incessantly of train wrecking, however, and told of many plans he had in his mind for causing a successful derailment. By 9 o'clock, when safely lodged in jail, a complete change came over him. He declared he knew nothing of what had happened, and was entirely innocent of the charge made against him. He appeared to be genuinely indignant at what had been done to him, and professed to forget even the meeting with the two men on the tracks and his subsequent capture. He was, of course, found guilty and sentenced to a term in prison.

"And here comes the strange climax of the story. In prison, between the hours of 7 and 8, Hines was always observed to act queerly. His manner would change completely, he would mutter to himself, scrutinize the floor minutely, and if any one would interrupt him he would eagerly commence talking about the wrecking of trains, and how easily it could be done without detection. After 9 o'clock Hines would become perfectly normal and sane and manifest no interest in the subject of train derailments."

The Work of the Census Bureau on the Divorce Problem

Federal Government Now Busily Engaged in Collecting Statistics—Country Districts Show an Astonishing Increase.

ALTHOUGH the census of divorces is only half done the 600,000 schedules already received are furnishing to the experts of the Census Bureau factors for estimates that are startling. So striking are these returns that Director North has made a rule that no figures must be given out until the census is completed. The unwelcome conclusion has been reached that there has been in recent years a large increase of divorces throughout the country.

The inquiry now being made was authorized by the last Congress in its first session at the request of President Roosevelt. In his message asking that the divorce census be authorized the President said:

The institution of marriage is of course at the very foundation of our social organization, and all influences that affect that institution are of vital concern to the people of the whole country. There is a widespread conviction that the divorce laws are dangerously lax and indifferently administered in some of the States, resulting in a diminishing regard for the sanctity of the marriage relation.

A divorce census was taken in 1887 by the General Government. It covered the years from 1867 to 1887, and at best was incomplete, being not the work of the regular census officials, but of the Department of Labor, of which Carroll D. Wright was the head.

The present divorce census begins with Jan. 1, 1887, and includes Dec. 31, 1906, making a twenty-year period comparable with the years embraced in the Wright census. In the work now going on there are 120 field agents employed. They are scattered all over the country engaged in copying from the records of courts having jurisdiction the data of the million of divorce suits that have been brought in all parts of the United States since 1887. The magnitude of the task may be seen at a glance. The agent is sent to every county seat of the 2,900 in the country to examine the dockets of the courts which grant divorces. Every divorce suit brought must be taken separately and described in full. The schedule must state in what country the parties were married, the date of marriage, date of separation, date of filing petition, whether husband or wife is libellant, how notice was served, whether or not the case was contested or the decree granted, the date of the latter, the number of years the parties were married, the cause for which the divorce was granted, whether the cause was intemperance, directly or indirectly; the kind of divorce, absolute or limited; the number of children, both those from the union in question and those of former marriages, that may be affected; whether or not alimony was sought and granted, the occupation of husband and wife, and the residence of the libellee.

The purpose of the inquiry is strictly statistical, and it is not intended that anything like a record of individual cases shall be made. The names of the parties to a divorce suit are never taken. Each case is hunted up in the docket and traced along through to the conclusion, all the answers to the questions indicated above being secured from the pleadings and orders made in the case. Much of this work has been secured from County Clerks and Clerks of various courts. Their special knowledge of various trials, the causes assigned, and the evidence taken is relied on for accuracy and for a saving of time. Caution has been emphasized in the matter of stating causes of divorce proceedings, as often one cause may be assigned and a totally different one may have been established in the testimony. In many cases the evidence in support of a cross-bill furnishes a new cause for divorce, which must be stated. Every case bears a number, which will enable any one having access to the schedule to verify the suit in the court where it was brought.

Rural Sections Show Increase.

The most astonishing fact that appears in the returns thus far made is that divorce has increased many times more rapidly in the rural sections than in the cities. It has been the impression, both in this country and in Europe, that urban life produced more frequently the conditions that led to the divorce court. While this statement is made on high authority in the Census Bureau, it is also to be said that the figures show that there has been slight abatement of the divorce evil except in a few places, and a general increase in most cities throughout the United States.

For instance, Chicago, which is called the "divorce centre" of the country, in the twenty years from 1866 to 1887 showed 73 divorces in every 100,000 of population, and in the last twenty years has furnished 132 divorces in every 100,000 of her population. Some idea of the enormous number of marital disturbances in the Western metropolis may be had from the statement that in the first census period there were 8,136 divorces granted, while in the second period there were 43,658 applications and 31,785 divorces granted, as far as now reported. The Census Bureau officials expect that when the court records are all copied it will appear that there were not less than 50,000 applications for divorce in Chicago in the two decades covered by the inquiry.

In other cities, so far as the returns approach anything like completeness, with the possible exception of New York, the same increase appears. Boston, in the Wright census, had 40 divorces to every 100,000 of population; in the estimated proportion deduced from figures now coming in the number has increased to 63. Philadelphia presents an even more surprising increment of marital unhappiness, the numbers changing from 22 in the first period to 63 in the second. New York, on the other hand, will, it is expected, show a reduced number of divorces in the last double decade. The number was 61 to every 100,000 of population during the period from 1866 to 1887. The returns are not yet completed, but it is estimated that if the proportion in the city and the State run alike the city will have little more than 50 divorces to each 100,000 of population in the last twenty-year period. The total for the State as shown by the present census is approximately 14,000. The total for the State in the Wright census was 15,355.

The Census Bureau is now at work compiling a digest of the changes made by the various State Legislatures in the divorce laws. Few important changes, it is said, have been made. It may almost be said that the great body of law on the subject is now what it was twenty years ago. New York in the interval has maintained the conservative law which limits the cause for absolute divorce, with the result that the percentage of increase of population has been far greater than the percentage of increase of divorce. Under the Wright census the percentage of increase of divorce in New York was in twenty years 14.1 and the percentage of increase of population was 15.9.

Various causes are assigned for the spread of the luxury of divorce in the country. One is that the hard conditions of farm life have gradually led women to seek release from them by way of a legal separation. Another is that with the increase of prosperity life has quickened and become less serious in the rural sections, and as a natural consequence the conditions for divorce have multiplied. These seem contradicting explanations, and it is well to wait until all the facts have been reported and analyzed before assuming to impute a cause for what seems to be a most perilous fact to the welfare of the Nation.

These are the special phases of the divorce evil tentatively foreshadowed in the present census of divorce. As nearly as may be computed, the broad fact appears that there has been an increase of the tendency to divorce in the whole country which amounts to nearly 110 per cent. The Wright census found that there had been in the twenty years preceding 1887 in the whole country 328,716 divorces, or 33 in every 100,000 of population. The estimate now is that the number has gone up to 70 for the twenty years following 1886. It is computed that the total number of applications will be shown to be 1,400,600 for the whole country in twenty years.

Wives Generally Complainants.

In the majority of cases divorces are sought on the complaint of the wife. The percentage is nearly 66 where decrees are granted to the wife. Cruelty, desertion, and drink are the main causes assigned in the complaints filed, and they run in the following proportions: Cruelty, 7 to 1; desertion, 1½ to 1; drunkenness, 8½ to 1. Desertion furnishes ground for divorce, ostensibly at least—for it is often charged in a complaint where the real offense is far more grievous—in 38 per cent. of cases. Drunkenness is a cause in 4 per cent. of all cases. In nearly 21 per cent. of all cases the cause shown is infidelity, and in this class 65 per cent. of the decrees granted are where the complainant is the husband. So far as indicated by the returns received these interesting features of the inquiry continue the same in the present census.

In this as in the last census of divorces the agents are instructed to report special features of interest in the cases that come under their notice. Remarks on such matters are written on the back of the schedule, and are in some instances what might be called "mighty interestin' readin'." In one case a divorce was granted because a wife had two teeth pulled and thereby enraged her husband. Sleeping with a razor under his pillow brought a divorce to one man's hearthstone. Failure to bathe frequently enough was assigned as a cause in another case. Keeping a saloon served as ground in one case. A ranchman out West offended his wife by commanding her to "down and charge" when he came in from his hunting trips, just as he would order his pointers to do; that wife got her decree.

One wife tells how her spouse did not like her way of driving nails and lassoed her and stuck straws into her ears to "see if she was Dutch." She got her divorce. The man who to scare his wife threatened to commit suicide and drank a bottle of paregoric in her presence furnished her sufficient ground for her decree. Another fellow who made his wife black his shoes now does it for himself. One wife got a divorce by showing that her husband made her drink whisky—poured it down her throat. Tobacco, in one instance, where it made the wife sick to smell it, sufficed. Want of repairs to the house and no water supply was taken by one Judge as ground for a decree. The high-water mark of cruelty in one case was the fact that the husband never took his wife out riding. In another the man of the house cut off his wife's bangs by force, and she got for that her separation.

Perhaps the most pathetic case is that where a wife swears that she endured all manner of privations and poverty for her husband's sake, but decided to get a divorce when he threw her little dog into the stove and kept it there until it burned to death. One wife says she must have a divorce because her husband "pinched her nose until it was fiery red." Another sought release from wedlock because her husband never let her or the children go to church. The man who proved by witnesses that his wife never mended his clothes, and that there had been for months only one button on his vest, got his divorce. So, too, did the fellow who swore that his good woman pulled him out of bed by his whiskers.

The returns are full of mention of carving knives, fisticuffs, bootjacks, firewood, axes, hatchets, flatirons, knitting needles, teapots, bottles, crockery, red-hot pokers, and similar domestic articles of use or torture, as the case may be. One man says his wife ran a knitting needle four inches into his arm. One woman struck her husband a violent blow with her steel bustle. Failure to cook meals and make clothes often appears. In one case the story is told of a rich girl who hated her guardian and went to a hospital for the purpose of marrying a dying man, thinking that as a widow she would have freedom and be able to control her estate. The man she married was apparently at the point of death, but he lived, and turned out to be not only cruel, but an escaped jailbird. She got a divorce. In another return note is made of the fact that tied up with the papers in the case as one of the exhibits is a bunch of hair which a husband swore his wife pulled out of his head in one of her rages. Frequently the statement is made that the application for divorce was made the next day after marriage.

J. P. MORGAN, AT SEVENTY, BELIEVES IN KEEPING AT IT

Financier's Philosophy of Life Permits No Idling, Though His Present-day Activities Are Concerned Less and Less With Business and More With Interests Outside the Banking World---A Leader In All He Concerns Himself With.

MORGAN has retired from Wall Street"—so the bears have said on the Stock Exchange times innumerable within the last five years when the speculative necessity has demanded something in the news line on which they could base their selling of the day or hour.

"It is said in well-informed circles that there is no truth in reports that Mr. J. P. Morgan has retired," the opposition bulletin has gone out, and in the absence of developments supporting either hypothesis the market community has quite forgotten the disquieting gossip and given its attention to new rumors, some with, some without, tangible foundation. Such is the way of the Street.

But the trend of affairs in recent months, particularly as they have centred in the historic offices at the corner where Broad Street meets Wall, brings out one fact very plainly concerning the man whose doings have long been of vital moment to the money centres of two continents. This is that he has let up speed a little, has relaxed the strict regimen, that he set for himself during so many years of active business, as if determined to spend the sunset hours of his life in a more restful environment than any that can be found below Fulton Street on Manhattan Island. And who is there that shall say he has not earned this rest as he completes his seventieth year?

It would, none the less, be quite as inaccurate to announce to-day or to-morrow that the "Old Man," as he is traditionally known in the market, had retired, as at any time since the retirement rumors were first put into circulation. If any one doubts, let him ask a Director of the New York Central Railroad whose influence it was in the January meeting of the board that prompted the more vigorous adoption of a policy of retrenchment in recognition of conditions that railroad men the country over are coming more and more frankly to admit. Or let the skeptic hear a story about the "Old Man" himself that occurred not so many months ago.

A banker of considerable prominence, whose father was a banker of standing before him, had been talking to Mr. Morgan on a matter of mutual concern. It was in the Summer, and Mr. Morgan, "with his coat off," was driving through an accumulation of business with a characteristic degree of speed.

His Philosophy of Work.

"Are you not going ever to relax this pressure?" the visitor asked.

Mr. Morgan looked at him sharply from under his shaggy eyebrows.

"When did your father retire from business?" he demanded.

"In 1890," was the reply.

"How old was he?"

"Sixty-five."

"When did he die?" came from the inquisitor.

"In 1898."

Quick as a flash the answer came back in the brusque tone that is so well known to Wall Street.

"If he'd kept at work he'd have been living yet."

Yet there is a material difference between the life that Morgan leads to-day and that which he followed in the boom times that heralded the opening of a century. Within six months, or a year at the outside, he has adopted a personal routine that allows him opportunity to enjoy from day to day the fruits of fifty years of work. The desk by the Broad Street window sees him no more. Sitting there in his place is another Morgan, large as his father physically, who has demonstrated an inheritance of financial ability and all of the parent's capacity for hard work. This is "Young J. P.," as contrasted with the "Old Man" of the Street, and while the son receives his business callers at the familiar desk, the father meets his in that wonderful library of the Madison Avenue home, among his books and his pictures and his rare manuscripts.

And we may find another difference, for the men of Wall Street know that business hours at the Broad Street corner are from 9:30 o'clock in the morning until 5 in the afternoon, whereas the business hours in the Madison Avenue library do not extend beyond noon at the latest, unless there is on the carpet some affair of particular moment that demands attention after midday. Under all normal conditions the financier who seeks with reason or otherwise a word with J. P. Morgan under this new régime must seek it in the morning hours. After 12 o'clock it is the banker's personal friends who have the call, and those who would talk to him about his varied interests outside of the financial world proper.

Recreation Among His Treasures.

So he may be imagined naturally enough turning from the departure of the last morning visitor to open the vault that is built in the library wall where the choicest of his manuscripts and art treasures not in museums are kept. It is to them that his time is devoted until the luncheon hour, and after luncheon, likely as not, the Metropolitan Museum Trustee or Opera House Director who calls for a chat will be regaled willingly enough with the history of this or that rare object and with the story of its acquisition. In these hours of relaxation there is none of the brusqueness that used to enshroud as with a storm cloud the desk in the office downtown.

But it would be an incorrect conception to believe that the treasures of the library, or even those of the wonderful private museum that is connected with Mr. Morgan's home, receive all of his attention from the close of his short business day until evening. Their share of his time is perhaps three or four hours; when he is done with them, his cab—the same old-fashioned one that awaited so regularly his departure downtown for many years—takes him up to the Union Club, at Fifty-second Street and Fifth Avenue, where there is a select company of friends on bridge intent. Then it is home again for an evening among his books, or in the society of a narrow circle of personal acquaintances. "Society" has never seen a great deal of J. P. Morgan. His appearances have been those of necessity rather than of inclination. His tastes are too substantial.

All this personal detail might be related of many a man in New York without substantial variance save as to incidentals, and there would attach to it no significance whatever. Its interest lies in its relation to what has gone before, in the fact that the man of whom it is told has been and is considered by most judges the largest individual figure in the recent history of American finance—a creator of values, and hence of wealth, for himself and for many others.

More Than a Mere Money Getter.

The question comes naturally enough how and why he has done it—what was the motive that led to the tremendous and continuing expenditure of effort, even presupposing an original equipment of financial genius that would not admit of a narrow field of activity. This is the question that was asked not long ago at a dinner where financial men were in the majority. The conversation had drifted to the early careers of the men who have been associated in American finance for the last generation or so, and it was recalled that John D. Rockefeller began business as a grocer's clerk, that Andrew Carnegie was a messenger boy in Pittsburg, that James J. Hill was a carpenter in a Canadian village, that Levi P. Morton was a dry goods clerk, that Henry C. Frick was a clerk in a country store. One after another the ambitions of these men were traced as they developed in the later life, and the conclusion drawn reasonably enough that a combination of inherent ability of a high order, energy unflagging, and ambition to achieve more than others, had led them into their present positions.

But what was to be said of Morgan? He was not born poor; on the contrary, he was heir to a fortune estimated at from $5,000,000 to $10,000,000. It was one of the notable fortunes of the country in the fifties, and when John Pierpont Morgan went into business here in the early sixties there was open to him a career entirely honorable and very comfortable, that would have carried him to an inconsequential old age and an unhistoric grave. He did not choose this career, but rather chose to work as few men have worked in the last half century, only to convince himself when he reached the stated threescore years and ten that a man must keep on working or he will straightway die.

There are those who say that the secret of Mr. Morgan's choice was that he was a constitutional optimist, of convictions so strong that they amounted to a passion, and this passion found expression in a belief in the possibilities of the country. To be the means of developing one's country is surely an ambition worthy of the best efforts any man can put forth; the achievement of such an ambition could bring easily enough the material results that are seen in the present instance. It remains, therefore, to look into some of the concrete developments of this career to see whether the hypothesis is a working one; whether the stock market community is correct in regarding J. P. Morgan as the greatest "bull on the country" that Wall Street has ever known; whether the bears on the Exchange are wise in employing any rumor of his "retirement" as a means of depressing stocks.

Start of the Morgan Fortunes.

For the purposes of this examination it may be interesting to go back even to 1835, when Joseph Morgan, the proprietor of the City Hotel in Hartford, Conn., pulled the Aetna Fire Insurance Company out of the financial difficulties into which it had fallen after the great fire in New York two years before, reorganized it, and made a matter of $150,000 in the process. Of this he gave $50,000 to his son, Junius Spencer Morgan, to buy a share in a mercantile business. The son cleared up $300,000 as his part of the profits inside of fifteen years, and then bought an interest in a Boston mercantile house. So it happened that John Pierpont Morgan, who was born two years after his father had made his first business start in Hartford, came to be a Boston schoolboy, and was graduated from the English High School there in 1854.

Junius Spencer Morgan was not destined to remain long in the Boston business world. In the middle fifties George Peabody, the famous London banker and philanthropist, became acquainted with him and offered him a partnership that eventually led to the establishment of the great London banking firm of J. S. Morgan & Co. Young J. P. Morgan, "Pip," as he was called by his schoolmates, was sent from the English High School to the University of Goettingen, and upon his graduation there was dispatched back to Wall Street in 1859, and obtained a position in the firm of Duncan, Sherman & Co. A few years later came the initial venture into business on his own account, in the firm of Dabney, Morgan & Co.

There was nothing spectacular about the career of Dabney, Morgan & Co. Indeed, it is related that in the later sixties the elder Morgan wrote over from London to a friend who was then a veteran in the American financial world and asked him to do what he could for the young man. A year later the friend wrote back, according to the story, that he guessed he couldn't do much. Young Morgan, went the pessimistic report, had been invited into the Directory of a prosperous corporation, had attended every meeting of the board, voted on every question, had said not so much as one word in all these meetings concerning the affairs of the company, had no opinions to express when asked for them, and finally was retired from the Directorate by the consent of everybody concerned.

His First Railroad Deal.

But it developed within a few months after this letter was written that during all the year in question Morgan had been figuring out a campaign to rescue the old Albany & Susquehanna Railroad from the hands of Jay Gould and Fisk, by whom it had been used as an appendage to their Erie operations, and the rescue was eventually accomplished. Then came the first of the Morgan railroad reorganizations, which resulted, in February, 1870, in the lease of the Albany & Susquehanna to the Delaware & Hudson, in which system it still remains.

This experience with the Albany & Susquehanna Road was not only notable as a prophecy of what was to follow, but its immediate results were all important to J. P. Morgan's fortunes. The firm of Dabney, Morgan & Co. received a handsome sum in the reorganization, and was then dissolved, while the Drexels of Philadelphia, a historic banking concern of Swiss extraction and conservatism, took young Morgan into partnership and placed him at the head of their New York house under the firm name of Drexel, Morgan & Co. Furthermore, the attention of William H. Vanderbilt was attracted to the young financier, and soon afterward were made the beginnings of one of the most notable alliances in the history of American finance.

The first big achievement came about 1876 or 1877, when Mr. Vanderbilt decided that there would be less hostility to the New York Central Railroad on the part of legislators and others if the stock was distributed a little more widely. He accordingly let Morgan have 300,000 shares at $120 a share to place in London, and in a comparatively few months the distribution was an accomplished fact, the price paid by the Britishers, instead of 120, being 130, thus netting a profit of something like $3,000,000 to the banking house. Mr. Vanderbilt opened his eyes a little wider.

Taking a Hand in Government Finance.

These years were notable also because they marked Morgan's first connection with Government finances. It was a natural enough thing for the Drexels to be concerned in the refunding of the Government debt in 1876, and natural enough also that various difficulties should attend the enterprise and that the bonds should not sell readily, for specie payments had not then been resumed. But a syndicate which Mr. Morgan organized with the Belmont and Rothschild interests took $25,000,000 of the bonds in 1877, another $25,000,000 in 1878, then $60,000,000 on April 4, 1879, and $150,000,000 more on April 16, a total of $260,000,000. The bonds were marketed at a substantial profit, and the understanding at the time was that the share of the Drexel-Morgan house in this was about $5,000 000.

It is a matter of ordinary financial knowledge that the decade from 1880 to 1890 was characterized by most extensive and most destructive competition between the various railroad systems of the country, and it was during this period that J. P. Morgan had occasion to develop publicly the policy regarding railroad affairs that he has stood for ever since. It found its concrete expression in the famous West Shore deal in 1885, which ended a period of warfare between the New York Central and West Shore Railroads almost without parallel for its severity even in those days of rate cutting and kindred devices.

The West Shore was the only route connecting the Cities of New York, Albany, and Buffalo that was not preempted by the Central, and the Vanderbilts undertook, straightway upon its opening in the early eighties, to crush it. By 1885 things had reached the point where the only question at issue was as to which road would go into a receiver's hands in the end, and it was at this point that J. P. Morgan stepped in. It was not an easy task, for the Vanderbilt family of that day were fighters, and concessions from them were out of the question. Mr. Morgan's proposition—the only one to which he could gain their assent—was that he should acquire the West Shore in the interest of the New York Central without compensation for himself, and it was on Dec. 5, 1885, that the West Shore Railroad was incorporated to succeed the New York, West Shore & Buffalo, and leased to the Central for 475 years, with a renewal option, at a rental of the interest on its $50,000,000 of bonds.

The entire capital stock of $10,000,000 was taken by the Central. Mr. Vanderbilt was so pleased that he gave his banker a famous silver service which cost $300,000, and then had the dies broken, so that it never could be replaced.

Author of "Gentlemen's Agreements."

But Mr. Morgan's activities in the suppression of destructive competition were by no means confined to the railroads in which he had a direct banking interest. The records of railroading from 1884 to 1889 are replete with "gentlemen's agreements" between the Presidents of roads all over the country, and in these negotiations Mr. Morgan played always a prominent part. The most famous of all these agreements, which was intended to include all the roads engaged in transcontinental traffic directly or indirectly, was that of 1886, and the newspaper files of the day tell of conference, upon conference being held at Mr. Morgan's house, resulting eventually in an "iron-clad" compact between the Presidents of all but one or two of the roads. This agreement, like all of its predecessors, was broken within a few months after it went into force.

The significance of Mr. Morgan's work in this connection in the eighties is apparent when one comes to consider the next period of his career, the period of reorganizations, extending in its principal accomplishments from 1886 or 1887 to 1900. What he did in the endeavor to forestall the period of receiverships is indicated by the fact that it was through his personal efforts in 1887 that the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad was kept from confessing insolvency, and a syndicate was organized to take $10,000,000 of new securities and incidentally to see to it that the management of the road should remain in safe hands.

The year before he had worked out the first of a long series of reorganizations of the Reading Railroad; in 1888 the Chesapeake & Ohio was reorganized under Mr. Morgan's supervision. The Southern Railroad, then the Richmond & West Point Terminal Company, was one of the first to go under in the depression that culminated in 1893, and it, like so many of its fellows before and since, was entered as a patient in the Morgan Hospital for Crippled Railroads, to be turned out again in a convalescent state in 1894, to make room for other applicants. In 1893 there came along the poor old Erie, or the New York, Lake Erie & Western, as it was called, of which we shall hear again in connection with another phase of Mr. Morgan's enterprises. That was reorganized in 1895.

Reconstructing Northern Pacific.

Meantime the Northern Pacific had passed into a receiver's hands, and a chapter of railroad history was started so interesting that one regrets the impossibility of giving it more than the barest reference at this time. The success of the reorganization, in which the Morgan syndicate furnished the $45,000,000 cash necessary to put the road on its feet temporarily, is a matter within the memory of every one. It is told in the appreciation of the common stock from the time when it sold at less than the assessment of $15 a share that was placed upon it in the reorganization to the time when it sold under normal conditions at upward of $200 a share, and all virtually within ten years.

Quite true, the administrative success of the railroad is the achievement of James J. Hill rather than of J. P. Morgan, but it must also be considered that Mr. Hill entered the Northern Pacific at Mr. Morgan's invitation, buying some $30,000,000 of the stock for himself and his friends at $18 a share. These purchasers, as well as those who were willing to take the stock for nothing during the reorganization and to put up the assessment, have had reason to be glad of their investment.

Some men would have found their hands reasonably full in conducting the Northern Pacific reorganization, with its $80,000,000 of new common stock, its $75,000,000 of new preferred, its $130,000,000 of prior lien 4 per cent. bonds, and its $60,000,000 of general lien 3 per cents. But not so J. P. Morgan. For the Philadelphia & Reading had been coming at recurrent stages of its illness back to the Hospital for Crippled Railroads until eventually it was decided that it must submit to a major operation if its life was to be spared at all. This was performed, and a corporation with $28,000,000 first preferred stock, $42,000,000 second preferred stock, $70,000,000 common stock, and a bonded indebtedness of $105,000,000, was turned out with some $20,000,000 ready cash to live on until its recovery should be complete. Now all the securities of the Reading are on a 4 per cent. basis.

So it would be possible to go at even greater length with this series of reorganizations, which included minor railroads apparently innumerable. But in this maze of adjustments of securities and security values there was one undertaking of J. P. Morgan & Co., as the New York end of the Morgan-Drexel combination had become known long since, that made for itself a permanent place in the financial history of the country. That was the so-called Cleveland bond issue of 1895.

To the Treasury's Relief.

For causes growing out of the depression of 1893, the situation of the National Treasury at the opening of 1895 was worse, according to competent authority, than at any time since the resumption of gold payments in 1879. Throughout the month of January there were heavy withdrawals of gold from the Treasury both for domestic purposes and for shipment, the exports of one week being $11,000,000. President Cleveland sought from Congress legislation to relieve the condition, but without effect, although on Jan. 28, when one of his messages was sent in, the free gold in the Treasury was less than $45,000,000.

Then came the contract with the Morgan-Belmont syndicate to supply to the Government $65,117,500 in gold in return for $62,317,500 thirty-year 3 per cent. bonds. The syndicate undertook to import the gold, where necessary, to pay for the bonds, and had its payments to the Government in progress by Feb. 15. Almost instantly there was a change for the better in conditions, and by March the syndicate, in complete control of the foreign exchange situation, had stopped the gold exports entirely. By June the syndicate had completed, in advance of the time set, payment for the foreign half of the loan, and before the close of that month the free gold in the Treasury had reached the $107,000,000 mark.

Again the following year, when the nomination of William J. Bryan for the Presidency had "thrown a scare" into the country, Mr. Morgan took the initiative in a somewhat similar undertaking. It was in July, when the outflow of the yellow metal became so rapid as to alarm the most conservative financiers, that Mr. Morgan called a meeting of bankers and leading dealers in exchange and formed a syndicate within an hour which undertook to furnish practically an unlimited supply of bills of exchange.

The announcement restored confidence almost instantly, and while the members of the syndicate as individuals furnished about a million dollars of such bills, no general syndicate operation was necessary. This was in effect a forerunner of the famous "Faith Cure" pool of December, 1902, when J. P. Morgan, James Stillman, and George F. Baker got together a group of banks to furnish some $40,000,000 loanable funds in the face of a tight-money scare, but didn't have to render any aid in the actual event, as the announcement served automatically to restore normal conditions.

The year 1899 marked an epoch in American finance in which J. P. Morgan had a pretty large part, for then it was that he negotiated the first foreign loan of any size ever placed in this country. This was to take up and refund the entire National debt of Mexico, and the amount of the loan was $110,000,000. It was followed the next year by an American participation of $25,000,000 in the British war loan, which was handled on this side of the water by J. P. Morgan in connection with Baring, Magoun & Co.

The Chief and His Cabinet.

So at the opening of the new century Mr. Morgan was easily the largest financial figure on this side of the water, if not in the world. And he had gathered around him a notable group of men—Francis Lynde Stetson, his personal counsel and "Attorney General"; Charles Steele, lawyer and financier; Samuel Spencer, President of the Southern Railroad; George F. Baker, President of the First National Bank, with which Morgan has had in the past more intimate relations than with any other institution, and George F. Baer, President of the Reading Railroad, and head of the great anthracite coal interests that that road represents; Robert Bacon, now Assistant Secretary of State.

So far as the affairs of the Northern Pacific Railroad were concerned, James J. Hill would have to be considered as within this group, although his personal railroad interests in the Great Northern made him a factor of importance in the railroad world quite aside from his connection with the road that Morgan reorganized. And woven in all through the Directorates of all the roads that had come under Morgan influence during the reorganization period was the fibre of varied financial interests, for this was the corporate carrying out of the community of interest idea that J. P. Morgan himself had entertained on behalf of the railroads of the country from the time in the eighties when he used to try to settle rate-cutting disputes by getting up "gentlemen's agreements" among the Presidents. As one railroad man said recently in an investigation of the Inter-State Commerce Commission:

"We thought then that we were approaching the millennium."

Big things began to happen with the opening of 1901, and the biggest figure in the doing of them was J. P. Morgan. In January it was announced that he had bought the Jersey Central Railroad and turned it over, with its valuable coal properties, to the Reading. Soon after came word that the Pennsylvania Coal Company, the Hillside Coal Company, and others had been bought and turned over to the Erie, two acquisitions which brought the control of the anthracite traffic practically within the Morgan sphere of influence. Then went forth into the Street rumors that a consolidation of Northern Pacific, Great Northern, and the St. Paul Roads, was imminent, but these were forgotten when in the latter part of the month came news that Mr. Carnegie was going to start a steel plant at Conneaut, Ohio, to manufacture "merchant pipe" in competition with Mr. Morgan's Federal Steel Company and John W. Gates's American Steel and Wire Company.

Launching of the Steel Corporation.

Here was a denial of the very principle, in the case of the most important industrial enterprise in the country which Mr. Morgan had been working for in the railroad field for twenty years, and if one must needs wonder how he found the time to give the matter attention, it is easy enough to conceive the motive that led to the formation of the United States Steel Corporation. That great institution, with its initial capitalization of $1,154,000,000, was launched in February to take over the Carnegie Steel Company, the Federal Steel, the American Steel and Wire, the American Tin Plate, the American Steel Hoop, the American Sheet Steel, and various smaller steel companies. By March 20, when the time expired for depositing the stocks of the subsidiary corporations, the smallest percentage so deposited was 92 and the largest 99. On April 1, to which time an extension was granted for the deposit, an average of 96½ per cent. of all the subsidiary securities had been deposited under the plan.

The Steel Corporation had achieved the greatest success in its flotation that had ever been known, and despite an increase in its capitalization in the Summer of 1901 and the strike of the steel workers in that Summer, by May of the following year there was a profit of $10,000,000 to be distributed to the members of the original syndicate, who stood ready in the beginning to put up $200,000,000 if called upon. The amount actually advanced had been $25,000,000.

This United States Steel enterprise is perhaps as notable an example of J. P. Morgan's persistent optimism as anything in his whole life. It was capitalized on the expectation that the conditions of the most prosperous year in the history of the country up to that time would continue indefinitely. When the depression of 1903 came along, and the Steel stocks dropped off until the preferred, with its 7 per cent. dividend, was quoted at under 50, and the common, dividendless, down to 8¾, a banker went to Mr. Morgan to ask him how about it.

"I'm not concerned with the stock market conditions of the Steel stocks," was the gruff reply, "but I can tell you that the possibilities of the steel business are just as great as they ever were."

This is a fair statement of the principle that J. P. Morgan applies to all enterprises having to do primarily with the potential energy of this country.

The Northern Pacific Episode.

In the meantime Mr. Morgan's attempt to secure the control of the St. Paul in behalf of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern had come to nothing, but Mr. Hill had managed to buy for the two roads a controlling interest in the Chicago, Burlington & Quincy. With all these tremendous affairs apparently settled, Mr. Morgan went to Europe and was still there when, in May, Edward H. Harriman, deciding that the Burlington deal was too great a matter to be left out of, tried to buy control of the Northern Pacific in the open market and precipitated the panic of May 9. But it may be supposed that the master mind of the Morgan firm was the one that dictated the settlement of contracts which the shorts on the Stock Exchange had made in the wild days preceding, to the end that deliveries were allowed at $150 a share of the stock which had sold up to $1,000 a share in the height of the panic itself.

The eventual settlement of the matter from a railroad point of view—until the United States Government broke it all up through the Northern Securities litigation—was one that was the flower of the community of interest idea. In connection with the Northern Securities Company, the $400,000,000 holding corporation formed in November of 1901 to hold the stocks of the Northern Pacific and Great Northern, it was arranged that the troublesome Harriman holdings in the Northern Pacific should be retired through exchange for the securities of the holding company, while the Harriman interests should have a representation in the Burlington Road, which was deemed the factor in the situation of the greatest importance to them.

Active Also in England.

An interesting illustration of the prestige attaching to the Morgan name in this period came in April of 1902, when John W. Gates succeeded in getting the control of the Louisville & Nashville Road away from August Belmont. The story is too familiar to need narration here, more than is contained in the statement that the corner developed by the contest for control had the shorts in somewhat the same predicament as were the shorts on that famous May day of 1901. By agreement between Mr. Gates and the Belmont interests the entire situation was placed in the hands of J. P. Morgan & Co., to the end that the Louisville & Nashville was turned over to the Atlantic Coast Line not many months later.

The reputation that we have seen attained on this side of the water was now duplicated abroad. Every time that Mr. Morgan crossed the water, whether in search of health or of rare objects of art, the European press was filled with stories that he was buying everything in sight. So the Leyland Line purchase in 1901 was supposed to herald a combination of the shipping interests of the world even more extensive than developed a year later, when the International Mercantile Marine Company was organized.

It has been said that a bright Irishman, the head of a great shipbuilding firm which had one of the constituent companies deeply in its debt, talked Mr. Morgan into the purchase of that particular company, and eventually suggested the idea of general consolidation. That is as it may be; the fact remains that, although it is generally believed that the company has had to labor under a burden of overcapitalization, J. P. Morgan is still as hopeful, according to the stories that his friends tell, as he was for the Steel Corporation before it grew up into some measure of its capitalization. That, no doubt, is because when he has figured a proposition out it is his custom to believe mightily in its success, and when it is recognized that the company has successfully weathered several years of the worst depression ever known in the shipping business, and that, according to conservative estimates, it has earned something like $5,000,000 over all its fixed charges for 1906, perhaps it will prove that his hopefulness is not without foundation.

So one has rounded up, in outline only, the principal accomplishments of this man in the world of finance where his life work has placed him. And a fair examination of them justifies the assertion that their author has been a constructive force in American life. There are men in Wall Street who do not like him for his brusqueness of manner; there are more who respect his ability as a fighter, but few will say that he has ever entered knowingly upon a campaign that was destructive of values.

Office a Financial Hospital.

"Morgan's office," said the other day a man of thirty years' Wall Street experience, "is a financial hospital. You go around there after a panic and you will find the paper of about every house in the Street that has been in trouble."

Another Wall Street man told recently an incident of the coal strike of 1902 that is characteristic. It will be recalled that in August of that year Mr. Morgan came home from Europe, and found the strike reaching such proportions that appeals were made to him from all directions to exert his powerful influence to stop it. He refused on grounds that were tersely stated by the late Abram S. Hewitt a few days later, when he said that to compromise the strike at that stage would be to deny every man the right to sell his labor in an open market.

Then, eventually, came the President's intervention, which was bitterly regarded in Wall Street, particularly by the men who dominated the anthracite production of the country. It was at this time that John Mitchell, President of the United Mine Workers, is said to have gone to Mr. Morgan to offer to treat direct with him.

"No," replied the financier, according to the story, "the President has taken a hand in the matter now, and it is proper that you should recognize him."

While J. P. Morgan's fame as a collector who has searched the markets of the world for their spoils of art and of literature is as wide in its way as his fame as a financier, to treat adequately of it at this time would be impossible within the limits of this writing. The Metropolitan Museum of Art, the American Museum of Natural History, and the Morgan library all bear tribute to his achievements in this line. His city house is in itself a museum of art treasures, while in London he has still another museum filled with objects of virtu which would be brought to this country if the tariff did not penalize American collectors who desire to allow their countrymen to share in their artistic pleasures.

Mr. Morgan's Charities.

But of Mr. Morgan's charities one hears less, comparatively speaking, than of any other phase of his activities, although it would be a safe wager that one could count on the fingers of one hand the men in this country who have given away as much as he has. His gifts, as a rule, are not heralded; his name is not placarded on memorial tablets and cornerstones. It was known, of course, away back in 1891 that he gave $500,000 to the New York Trade School, and again in 1897 the gift of $1,000,000 for the establishment of a lying-in hospital was naturally a matter of public knowledge.

So with the $1,000,000 which he gave to the new Harvard Medical School in memory of his father, Junius Spencer Morgan—this, by the way, being given by cable while one of Mr. Morgan's European trips was in progress. But beyond these, what a story Dr. Rainsford, long the rector of St. George's Church, might tell! The great work that centres in the Parish House of that institution is very largely the result of Mr. Morgan's generosity, and it is not difficult to believe the story that on more than one occasion he doubled the annual contributions of the rest of the congregation toward the church endowment fund. J. P. Morgan does not like to have these matters talked about. Should a venturesome reporter stop him on the street or even obtain audience to ask him, he would be told in that gruff voice that is so characteristic of the outer man:

"Don't know anything about it."

Nor would inquiry from Mr. Morgan's "secretary" be any more fruitful, for that discreet personage replies on all such occasions:

"Mr. Morgan never discusses his private affairs with any one."

Important Events in Mr. Morgan's Life

Born April 17, 1837.

Graduated in 1854 from the English High School at Boston.

Graduated from Göttingen University, Germany, and went into business with Duncan, Sherman & Co., New York.

Started the firm of Dabney, Morgan & Co.

Arranged the lease of the Albany & Susquehanna Railroad to the Delaware & Hudson, February, 1870; his first railroad deal.

Entered the firm of Drexel, Morgan & Co., and began business relations with William H. Vanderbilt.

First connected with Government finances, 1876.

Played a prominent part in so-called "gentlemen's agreements" between railroad Presidents, 1884-1889.

Made famous West Shore deal, 1885.

The "Morgan Hospital for Crippled Railroads," 1886-1900. Reorganized the Chesapeake & Ohio, Southern, Erie, &c.

Reorganized the Northern Pacific.

Came to the relief of the United States Treasury, 1895.

Negotiation of Mexican loan, first large foreign loan ever placed in the United States, 1899.

Handled $25,000,000 of the British war loan, 1900.

Formed the United States Steel Corporation, February, 1901, with a capitalization of $1,154,000,000.

Formed the Northern Securities Company, November, 1901.

Organized the International Mercantile Marine Company, 1902.

A STRENUOUS DAY WITHIN THE COLONY CLUB

Impenetralia Hitherto Withheld from Mere Man Now Happily Revealed by the Unconscious Candor of a Youthful Letter Writer—"Slow" Gin, Sparring and Five-Cent Bridge Among the Attractions That Hold Feminine Interest.

And oh, if there be an Elysium on earth,
It is this, it is this!
—"The Light of the Harem."

SINCE our New York women are as adaptable as they are fascinating, it is no surprise to hear on all sides that the new Colony Club is a great success. It can scarcely be said to fill a long-felt want, because no special need for a woman's club has ever been felt in society. Women could do without it today as they have in the past, fully occupied with their social duties and completely equipped for domestic pleasures, but since the club has come as a novelty, as an additional outlet for personal energies, as an exchange for topical opinions, a meeting house of various types, to say nothing of the opportunities for physical culture and the cultivation of bridge, it already occupies a distinct place of its own and exerts considerable influence upon the daily lives of many women.

Men's Clubs Set the Pace.

It is no disparagement to the originality or fine taste of women to say that this club, the Colony, is patterned as closely as may be upon the best examples of similar organizations for men. Men have occupied the club field for so many generations and have experimented so widely with every phase of club life that certain club precedents and principles have come to be regarded as inviolable as the Ten Commandments and the Thirty-nine Articles. As in form so in substance it will be found that the Colony Club is naturally falling into certain methods and mannerisms very similar to its male prototypes. For instance, it is getting to be the thing for a certain group of very smart, youngish women to gather in the reading room of a morning, lounge about the big fireplaces, since there is nothing to see from the windows, and run over the gossip of the day together, and square accounts, as it were, up to date.

There are the Center Hitchcocks, the Prescott Lawrences, the Hamilton Carys, the Richard Peterses, the Louis Lorillards of the club. They are not great readers; they glance at the headlines of the dailies, discuss the trial, the dog show, the opera, the coming horse show at the Olympia, and the latest scandal. They seem to be on hand to display the latest fashions, to show other and less sophisticated members what to do and how to enjoy a club. They leave their wraps and umbrellas with the hall porteress. No clubable man, and therefore no clubable woman, should ever carry her impedimenta into the living rooms to litter up tables and chairs. As like as not these pure idlers are all off somewhere else before luncheon time and their places filled with the regular patrons of the table d'hôte, who have been occupied during the morning and perhaps will be through the afternoon, but consider a midday club meal a great aid to shopping, study, charity, literature, or whatever may be their bent. The bridge players begin to congregate about 3 or 4, and from then on are lost to the world until time to scramble home to dress for dinner.

Dinner at the Colony, as at all fashionable clubs, is, during the season, more honored in the breach than in the observance, for the very good reason that nearly every one has dinner engagements. Of course, there are always some women, as there are some men at their clubs, closeted in the library poring over books of reference or polishing up a little "impromptu" discourse to be delivered at some future meeting. As for the athletes, the ladies who go in for sparring, running, squash, Pompeian baths, and plunges in the tank, these joys are unknown in fashionable men's clubs, so the Colonists have to originate their own hours and methods for the indulgence of such activities. It is known that the athletic uniform of the club is deep red set off with braid, and that when the gymnasium or the swimming pool is in full blast an Alma Tadema might well be nonplused to do the theme full justice.

Members Uncommunicative.

All this, of course, is mere generalization, or a drawing upon the imagination for details that can only filter into mere man's comprehension through the often inconsequential evidence of wives, daughters, or sweethearts. Your wife will tell you "nothing amusing"; your daughter will say, "Ask Mamma," and your sweetheart will bid you "mind your own business!" If you ask what goes on in the course of a day at the Colony Club. Of course, you've been there to one of the receptions, admired the charming furnishings, and regretted the lack of a revenue license, but you have seen little doing that was different from any other tea-drinking bout among well-bred people. You were lucky if you got a glimpse at the four-post bedsteads, and the pretty red bathing suits were all put away in the lockers. Are you fair? Are you young? Could you disguise yourself as one of the numerous chubby maids that wait by day and night upon this Adamless Eden? Not so! But still we can sometimes see and understand through the guileless eyes and bread-and-butter innocence of youth, and a letter from a young schoolgirl to a friend in the country, which it has been my privilege to copy and now place before THE TIMES's readers, throws as much light upon a strenuous day passed at the Colony Club as any man will ever gain knowledge of. The letter, with some editing and annotation, follows:

"New York, April 10.

"Dear Mugsey:

"I promised to write you about my impressions of the Colony Club, so here goes. Aunt Kitty took me yesterday, and we spent a good part of the day there. It's simply immense, fierce. I went in an unsophisticated schoolgirl and came out feeling like a full-fledged woman of the world. Of course, I was only a visitor for a day, but I believe I saw everything worth seeing and some too funny for utterance. You have read all the descriptions and seen the pictures in the papers, so I won't bore you with details about the roomy old house, (I mean, it looks old, though it is brand new.)

"The first thing that strikes one, of course, is to see no men about anywhere. As you enter the wide hall two or three smart maids come forward to relieve you of such wraps as you want to leave in the cloakroom, and you enter the big lounging room, the general rendezvous of members in the morning. It was half-past eleven in the morning and the room was well filled. I know pretty well every one by sight, and finding a chair in a nook I sat down to look around while Aunt Kitty went on to the office about some business—you know she's a Governess—I mean, on the committee. The most conspicuous group of women were lounging about the big fireplace and on the settee that surrounds it. There was the sporting set, the women that love horses and dogs and hunt and ride all Winter, either at Aiken or Meadow Brook.

Some Leading Spirits.

"There were Mrs. Ladenburg, Mrs. Tom Hitchcock, Mrs. Jimmie Kernochan, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, Miss Gladys Mills, Miss Helen Bryce, Miss Bird, and a lot more in their tailor-made suits, small hats, and tan boots, looking as hard and fit as nails and quite as manly or mannish as any men at the Knickerbocker. In a corner by the window were Mrs. Dick Irvin, Mrs. Willie Jay, Mrs. James Speyer, Mrs. Jimmie Markoe, Miss Rhett, Miss Anne Morgan, and other officials of the club, with more expanse to their hats and garments and a generally alert air, as became important officials of the club. Another group was laughing heartily if not uproariously at the latest joke of Miss Bessie Marbury, who is said to be the funniest member of the club, and there were a dozen or more rather elderly looking women in retired chairs evidently making a determined effort to read the morning papers. As I waited for Aunt Kitty to return, Mrs. Borden Harriman, President of the club, dashed in like a sunbeam, flew from one group to another with something with point to say to each, espied me, gave me a cordial welcome, and with a 'must go to the kitchen' dashed out again.

"By this time one of the 'sports' in front of the fire had produced a little gold cigarette case, and the aroma of Turkish tobacco mingled with the other delicate perfumes of the room. I had never seen just such a gathering of women before—every one perfectly at home, at her ease, and yet entirely unconscious of any sense of obligation to any one else. Women would come in and go out with nothing more than a nod here or there or perhaps no greeting at all, and when a greeting was given it was invariably preceded with a 'hello!'—as 'Hello! Lucy,' 'Hello! Mary," &c. When Aunt Kitty came back from her House Committee duties I was feeling quite at home myself. No one seemed to take any notice of me after the first recognition from acquaintances.

"The conversation flowed on on every topic in the world precisely as if I had not been there; I was simply a small drop in the bucket of club life, and that I am led to believe is the very quintessence of clubdom, to be able to lose one's self in the vortex or to swim on top as bravely as you choose. As a stranger and a youngster, I naturally preferred the former plan, and when Aunt Kitty bustled in with a 'Hello! Kid; have a cigarette?' I felt myself blushing all over. I would have taken it, though, just to prove my clubable sang frold, had I been sure of its after effects. Just then a pretty woman at the door exclaimed: 'Any one for a rubber before luncheon?' And although one of the governmental party said, 'For Heaven's sake! Haven't you bridge fiends time enough in the afternoons and evenings?' several women got up and sauntered out as if they thought they hadn't.

"I won't say much about luncheon, except that the Little Neck clams were no bigger than quarter dollars and fat as butter, (Papa always said that the way clams were served was a severe test of a ménage,) the fried chicken à la Maryland was the triumph of a Southern mammy imported for the purpose, and the fresh asparagus might just have been cut at Oyster Bay. It is about the things that happened after lunch that I want to tell you. On the way to the 'gym,' as they call it, we passed through a room full of lockers, where the women keep their 'fighting' costumes and such else as they wish to lock up. Three or four women were standing there, and one said, 'Who'll have a 'sourire d'Avril' ? 'Don't mind if I do,' said the others. So a bottle was produced and some little glasses, and all took an April smile. 'What is a sourire d'Avril in drinking parlance?' I asked Aunt Kitty. 'It's a waltz in music.' 'Slow gin, I believe,' she said; but there didn't seem to be anything 'slow' about this, the way it slipped down. [Reference must here be made to sloe gin, a very delectable cordial made from the sloe berry, to which the aristocracy of England and America is much addicted.—Editor's note.]

Battles of the Fair.

"Once in the 'gym' a scene of animated confusion met the eye, and oh! Mugsey, it was too funny to see the tall women and the short, the lean women and the fat, all in red knickers and blouses, trying to do some kind of athletic stunt. Some were trotting around a running track, others were swinging clubs and dumbbells, and one poor creature had got her arms and legs twisted up on the parallel bars as if she would never get them untangled. Two women, however, who attracted the most attention were having a friendly bout with the boxing gloves, and had quite a gallery of spectators. One was very tall and divinely fair, a great all-around athlete, who is as lithe and active as a cat. Her opposite was short and very stout, more of a bridge player than a boxer, but content to exercise for beauty's sake. 'Give it to her, Alva!' 'Hit her again, Pussie!' were some of the shouts that urged the combatants on, until in a quick, fierce scrimmage there went up a general cry of 'Foul!' 'Who fouled? Where? When?' 'Why, Alva, you hit Pussie below the belt!' 'What belt? She hasn't got any belt on!' 'Well, below the waist, then.' 'She hasn't got any waist!' &c. [In pugilism the boxers wear belts strapped well up on the diaphragm, and any blow delivered below the belt is considered foul.—Editor's note.]

"Matters were easily adjusted and evened up, too, for the next moment the plump little person seemed to fly up in the air and administered a very pronounced tap on the irreproachable nose of her opponent. Satisfied with this triumph and completely out of breath the stout lady retired to her dressing room, and in a few moments a tremendous splash from the direction of the tank room announced that she had taken the plunge of her life. Some of the women could dive beautifully, but most of them seemed content simply to roll off the edges into deepish water or wade in at the end where the tank was shallow. A peep into the beauty parlor showed every possible contrivance in full blast for making women beautiful, while sounds as of a baby being spanked in an adjoining room suggested massage with all the disciplinary fixings.

Good Humor at Bridge Tables!

"Aunt Kitty found me wandering about on this floor greatly pleased and interested in everything I saw and heard, but suggested that it was nearly tea time and to come below. The tea room is a perfect dear, that is also used for bridge, and here for the first time I saw some of the great champions of that game engaged in strenuous strife. The stakes, I understand, are nil or else so very small a game as to be merely nominal, for I heard several women ask, 'What is it, 2 or 5 cents?' [The betting on bridge is by the number of points scored in a rubber. Two or 5 cents a point would therefore mean rather more than a nominal bet.—Editor's note.] Such a deadly stillness as pervaded the room was like a Quaker meeting, and most of the women seemed to quite forget their tea, which was served at little elbow tables. Occasionally though, one could detect a little sigh or snort of agony or disdain as some poor woman made a fatal error and lost her 2 or 5 cents. On the whole, though, I thought the women much better natured than when we play cards at home, and I put that down to the superior discipline of club life, which teachers one self-control under every vicissitude of fate.

"When we went back to the big reading rooms preparatory to getting our wraps for a start home, they were brilliantly lighted and crowded with gayly dressed women in their best bibs and tuckers, who had been visiting and driving, and had slipped in for a moment to see what was going on and who was there. Just now, when every one is on the move coming back from the South and going to Europe, one really needs some such clearing house as this club to keep thoroughly well posted. After hurrying me with my wraps, I thought I should never get Aunt Kitty out, so often did she stop to greet new arrivals or answer old questions. When we finally got into the chou-chou she greeted me with:

"'Well, Kid, what do you think of the Colony?' I confess that for once in my life I was at a loss for words. 'I want to see more of it,' I sputtered out.

"'Well, in two years you may join. It's scarcely the place for little girls, eh?' This little girl's eyes had indeed been opened, but opened in an extremely proper and ladylike way. I adored that sporty crowd in the morning, those cigarettes and slow gin, the fighters, the plungers, the card players, and the fine ladies who came in to put the finishing touches at the end. Those women are going to have the time of their lives, and don't you forget it, Mugsey, and you can remember, too, that I am awfully sleepy and am going to bed.

"Always lovingly, TRIXIE."

Such is the letter that gives to the rankest outsider—man—a bare glimpse of the inside doings of the new Colony Club. We know our women thoroughly. We adore them in most of the relations of life. No mere man is worth the name if he has not made a conscientious study of woman's multitudinous idiosyncrasies. It was only in the segregation of woman by herself, in the seclusion of her own clubhouse, governed and swayed by her own whims and fancies, that man could have any doubts or fears as to the outcome. Thanks to the naïve correspondence of the Misses Mugsey and Trixie all doubt and fear are dispelled. Again we cry:

O woman, lovely woman! Nature made thee
To temper man: we had been brutes without you.

Discovery Threatens Poles

POLAR expeditions are going to be quite the thing this Summer. The Lure of the Ice has got in its work once more. Walter Well, who sailed for the Arctic regions via Paris last week, is the first on the list to try this popular line of travel. And Commander Peary has just been granted a three years' leave of absence by the Navy Department, during which he will endeavor for the sixth time to pay his respects to the North Pole. And, besides these two veterans, there is an Argentine millionaire, hitherto unknown to Polar fame, who will try to die poor by fitting out an expedition to the South Pole.

Last, but not least, there is Admiral B. S. Osbon, Secretary of the Arctic Club. He is organizing a "Seeing the Pole" squad of six automobiles, to be constructed in such a novel manner that they will travel over the ice floes with the ease of the polar bear, and skim lightly over the water even as the poetic seagull.

Walter Wellman sailed away the other day on La Touraine. He intends to make his polar dash this Summer from the Island of Spitzbergen, where the chills come from. C. F. Bishop, President of the Aero Club, will join Mr. Wellman later, and accompany him to Spitzbergen, but will probably go no further. However, he will present Mr. Wellman with a banner suitable for unfurling at the Pole.

June is the month chosen by Commander Peary for his next trip to the regions of eternal fur—that is, provided that sufficient funds can be raised to fit out his expedition. He will make the trip on the Roosevelt again.

Peary's Farthest North record now is 87 degrees and 6 minutes, and he will make a strenuous attempt to better it, according to Morris K. Jesup and Herbert L. Bridgman.

Captain John Bartlett, who is in charge of the Roosevelt at Shooter Island, has been notified to get the vessel ready for her trip. New boilers have been put in, a new crew will be provided, to be selected by Commander Peary himself, and a new course will be adopted in this endeavor to reach the Pole, namely, to go further to the westward than on previous trips, and then drift eastward. In this way Commander Peary hopes to facilitate the establishment of a base of supplies near enough to the Pole to allow him to make a sledge trip thither and return to the base in three months' time. Peary set forth in a recent lecture that, by doing this, advantage could be taken of the eastward drift of the polar ice.

So much for the North Pole. This year it by no means monopolizes the attention of explorers. A millionaire of the Argentine Republic, Don Felipe Bevrier, has cast a longing eye toward the Antarctic regions. He aspires to make the acquaintance of that distant and unsociable thing, the South Pole. In pursuit of this plan, Señor Bevrier has come to New York. He has retired from his business, which was cattle exporting, and is prepared to give all his time to his new hobby. He intends to devote his stay here to calling on Peary, studying up books about polar exploration, and otherwise fitting himself for his voyage into the unknown Southern seas.

Señor Bevrier is not only backed by the Argentine Government, but is said to be ready to devote $1,000,000 of his own to the realization of his project.

"By the beginning of 1909," says Don Felipe, "I shall have planted the banner of the Argentine Republic at the South Pole."

The new explorer will be accompanied by several young American engineers. In his expedition he will rely largely on Eskimo dogs, of which he has collected no less than 400. He intends to establish his centre of operations on Victorian Land, the southernmost known part of the globe. After storing food and establishing stations at various desolate places, he will make his dash to the south.

In a recent interview, the Argentine millionaire said that the South Pole ought to be easier of access than the North Pole, because the Antarctic Winters are not so severe as those of the Arctic region. Besides, the great floes of ice in the south do not break up in Summer, and there are not such great atmospheric disturbances. He believes that the South Pole is surrounded by a vast frozen ocean, over which it will be comparatively easy to travel.

In addition to his hope of reaching the South Pole, Señor Bevrier also hopes that, owing to the favorable astronomical conditions probably existent at the South Pole, he may be able to discover something more about Mars, Venus, and other lady and gentleman planets, and possibly to get into communication with the residents thereof.

As for Admiral Osbon, he is enthusiastic about his polar automobiles. He says that two of them have been fixed up by Dr. Frederick A. Cook of Brooklyn, who went to the polar regions with Peary. The third touring car is for Anthony Fiala, who led the Ziegler Expedition in 1903-1904.

The Admiral won't tell for whom the other three autos are being built.

All six, he states, are from the designs of a gifted Alaskan letter carrier, whose route, being several hundred miles long, gives him much time for burning thought. Once, it seems, this carrier grew tired of the ordinary methods of travel. So he built an extraordinary automobile. Gayly throwing his mail sacks into it, he steered into a body of water around which he formerly had to make a weary detour. The auto took to the element like the proverbial duck, enabling the gifted fellow to blow his postman's whistle and leave letters and catalogues of fur dealers at the doors of the Eskimo snow huts several days before the inmates expected him. Then he skimmed over the ice for a while, shot up a few mountains, gracefully plunged into the ocean again, and speeded for the mainland. Amid the white caps and flying fish, drinking in deep breaths of gasoline and salt air, he looked at his speedometer. It registered many, many knots. He smiled.

"I am no ordinary postman," he thought to himself.

That is what Admiral Osbon thinks. When automobiles like this pioneer postal one get started toward the North and South Poles, what chance will these two coy recluses have to keep up their splendid isolation?

Hence, it behooves Wellman and Peary and Don Millionaire to hurry, or they may come tolling over the ice floes only to find the two poles converted into mere garages.

A Little Subway Knowledge

SOME Subway passengers who come from above Ninety-sixth Street, and who get off at stations below Grand Central Station, have a joke on their fellows. These wise ones have discovered that if they change to an express at Ninety-sixth Street, and then transfer to a local train at the Grand Central, they invariably board the same local at Forty-second Street that they left at Ninety-sixth. This fact has been ascertained by them through always riding in the first or second car of the local train and making a note of the car's number.

Consequently, among those who use the trains on nearly every weekday there have come to be two classes, the wise ones who remain on the local they happen to board and those who change to an express and then later to the same local without having noted that fact. The wise ones have had considerable quiet fun among themselves in marking mentally for identification the passengers who change for expresses at Ninety-sixth Street and then return to the same local at the Grand Central. It is too sure a thing for any one save of the changing class to risk any money in betting on the chances, though occasionally one of the changers does gain a train by his changing.

The Ways of a Deserter

WASHINGTON, April 12.—Advices from the Philippines tell of governmental difficulties because of one Datto Dodds, erstwhile Private Dodds, who was for some ten minutes a member of the Nineteenth United States Infantry. Until Dodds is dead or pacified, they say, there will be no peace in the Malay part of the islands.

Once they were bending all their efforts toward catching and hanging Private Dodds. Just now they are patiently trying to negotiate with him, or so the story runs. Dodds was ordinary enough looking army material when a Sergeant enlisted him at Boston some years ago. Shock headed, dull eyed, bull necked, deep chested, shambling in his gait, Dodds attracted no attention on the transport beyond the small notoriety of eating more and drilling more awkwardly than the rest.

But when he and his fellow-rookies landed at Manila, the Massachusetts factory hand kept right on marching from the end of the gangplank through Manila and out toward the violet-green mountains, where lurked the restless insurrecto. There the searching party found him, and he returned peaceably enough. There was no evidence to prove attempted desertion, so they put it down to an impatience to stretch his legs, and put him under guard as a precaution.

Dodds and eighty-eight other rookies were assigned to a battalion of the Nineteenth Infantry, then stationed on Cebu. Thither they were escorted by a young subaltern, who found the draft a troublesome handful. He was glad enough to turn them over to Capt. McIntyre, Battalion Adjutant, who handed them over to the First Sergeant of the four companies.

The subalterns, who had gone to hunt up a long drink, hurried up to Capt. McIntyre five minutes after this ceremony, to report on Dodds's case, which he had forgotten in the relief of turning over the draft. The rookies, Capt. McIntyre said, had been assigned to Company I, commanded by Capt. Rowan, who carried a message to Garcia and has been sorry for it ever since because of what Elbert Hubbard wrote about him. Capt. McIntyre and Rowan, the subaltern, and a surprised First Sergeant, hurried to the shack of Dodds and found him gone.

"He just came, looked in, and started hikin', sir," explained the man who was to have been Dodds's bunkie. "Carried his rifle and full kit, sir. Ten minutes ago, it was, or maybe fifteen."

"The fool will be killed," they said, and sent out a searching party. And when the party returned, empty handed, "the fool has been killed," they added. But Dodds was not dead. A month later the battalion was dragged from its sleep to repel a most pestilent night attack by the "Gu-Gu" forces. And the sleepy, indignant soldiery heard and recognized the bull-throated bellow of Dodds, holding the enemy to their work. Thereafter a peevish battalion hunted patiently and persistently for Dodds.

"But, although they frequently rounded up his band, he always slipped through their fingers. Then he would return the compliment with a night attack. Why Dodds joined the insurgents never has been explained. He may have been inoculated before enlistment with the anti-imperialistic virus of Edward Atkinson, and other Boston friends of Aguinaldo, or it may have been some heritage of Norse pirate blood that blossomed in his brain under the Oriental sun. The deeper mystery is how the untutored factory hand mastered a barbaric people and a more barbaric language in so short a time.

The soldiers of the Nineteenth rejoiced when peace fell once more, but the insurgents agreed as one of their terms to surrender the white renegades and deserters among them. At last the outraged infantrymen would get their hand on Dodds—and a halter, too. But he was not among the renegades surrendered.

While the exact movements of Dodds from this point are a mystery, he is supposed to have fled by Banca or Lorcha to Mindanao or Zulu. Subsequently he turned up in the household of Datto Tantung on Tawi-Tawi Island, where he seems to have married a daughter of that potentate and to have been initiated by him and raised to the rank of Pastmaster among Dattoes. At any rate, Dodds wore the silk drawers, silver embroidered vests, and arsenal sash of the Moros, did a little cautious pirating with his adopted nation, perhaps, and was satisfied to be separated from civilization and the cocktail, which, as George Ade says, follows the flag.

Dodd had the making of a good Utah Mormon of the last generation, it seems, because in all his wanderings the native institution which he adopted first was the harem. And everywhere he was the most unreconstructed of all the rebels against his mother country. In time the deserter came to acquire something like belligerent rights and the privilege of treating with American authority like other Dattoes. But the army has never lost its desire to catch the Datto Dodds in a fight where the fierceness of the onslaught will make it convenient to overlook giving quarter.

And Datto Dodds reciprocates by stirring up the Malays whenever expeditions and treaties have calmed them down to something like peace. Just now he is kicking up trouble again. Meanwhile, this hairy calf of a New England factory town, silk clad, barbarously hung with pearls and weapons, reigns like a King or a feudal overlord in an Arabian Nights setting, with the soft Southern seas murmuring about his island and a host of fierce-eyed, brown-faced subjects bowing at his big feet.

"And Then Some."

From The Washington Post.

Secretary Taft has ruled that for transportation a mother-in-law cannot be regarded as a member of an officer's family. In civil life, however, the mother-in-law will continue to be an important member of a man's family, and then some.

WHAT THE BACHMAN CLUB IS DOING FOR BOYS

It Takes Them from the Workhouse or the Island and Tries to and Often Does Make Men of Them.

Interesting Club Journal in Which the Boys Describe Their Experiences and Read Them at Meetings.

INTERIOR VIEWS OF CHRYSTIE STREET HOUSE, HEADQUARTERS OF THE BACHMAN CLUB

DOWN in Chrystie Street, just south of Delancey, the avenue of approach to the Williamsburg Bridge, is an institution that is doing on slender funds a unique work for boys. Its field of usefulness does not consider, as have many institutions of a somewhat similar character, the mere effect upon a neigbborhood of an experiment station of right living. It bas a more practical purpose. The Chrystie Street House, 129 Chrystie Street, aims to seek out boys up to the age of some 20 years who are serving sentences in the Workhouse for vagrancy, or even criminal offenses, before they "leave the Island," to invite them to the House for a sojourn that may be brief or long, at the discretion of Wallace Gilipatrick, the head worker, to help them to employment and right determination, and then to keep a friendly eye upon them afterward.

An influence that has come to strengthen the hands of those in authority migbtily in Chrystie Street is a club that the present inmates and the graduates of the House have organized of their own volition, the Bachman Club, named after a friend of the House. With most of the boys this club is the first to which they have ever belonged. The duties of their elected officers and their debates are taken most seriously. "By putting a little ginger in our work," says one boy to his fellows, "we can make tbe name of our club honored and respected." Each boy at leaving is enjoined by his fellow-clubmates to live a square life and to remember that be must not bring discredit upon the club through a lapse into his old ways.

It bas been a prominent thought among the Chrystie Street workers that a term "on the Island" is a very distinct possibility for the boy of the lower classes who comes to New York from the interior expecting immediately to obtain profitable employment, though often he does not so much as know a trade. At the end of his money and without relatives who would supply him with more, far less a railroad ticket home, he might beg on the street in a spirit of pure want. If he were detected he would go to the Workhouse for this offense, for offense it is under tho law of the State. There is also another possibility of the "Island" in a couch on a park bench. For such as these the Chrystie Street House and the Bachman Club exist.

Once on the "Island," the boy whose only fault in the beginning lay in thinking New York the land of unlimited possibility is in immediate contact with influences that may determine for him a criminal career. The House has cared for boys who upon leaving the "Island" bad openly asserted an intention of becoming criminals. On this very matter a boy who had had a Workhouse record, but who is now well placed through Mr. Gilipatrick's efforts, wrote recently to tbe head worker thus:

After a young man has been confined with evil influences for several months, his ideas as to what is right are not always correct, and I fear that in most cases imprisonment, instead of reforming a young man who has done wrong, rather tends toward making him a bigger criminal. Wbat a young man needs who has gone wrong is surroundings where he gets good discipline, and not a prison where he comes in contact with thieves, drunkards, disorderly people, &c., and is taught more of crime instead of being taugbt to leave it.

The Club Journal.

Among the activities of tho Bachman Club, and one that is a fruitful source of information concerning the varying experiences of the boys themselves, is a journal in manuscript to which all of the members are asked to contribute. This is read to the boys at the club meetings. In it a number describe themselves under the guise of fiction. In the latest number a boy from Pennsylvania, aged 17, tells his story with a certain touch of crude appreciation of the dime novel form. As his story illustrates well the way and the manner in which many of the boys of the Bachman Club first came to Manhattan, their life here, and their ultimate disposition, it is worth reading. At the very beginning the author, a boy of the mining regions, whose spelling bears revision occasionally, takes his reader back to the little town of his birth, tbus:

Seated in the backroom of one of the most criticised and disreputable saiioons in a little town away up in the northeastern part of Pennsylvania, were a group of young men. It was evident by their language and their actions that they were all of good families. They were all just in that state of drunkenness that they did not care for nothing. Drink was bought and drank and they thought they enjoyed the little spree. As the hours drew near and near to morning they began to leave in 3 and 4 until finally there were only two young men left.

One said to the other:

"Well, let us go home, Mick."

And Mick said:

"Home? Don't talk of home. We can go there when we ain't got no other place to go."

"Well," said the young man, "let us go to some place out of this low-lived hole. For I am disgusted with the town and the people as well. You meet me tomorrow afternoon and you have everything ready and we will leave this cursed town behind us forever."

"Good," said Mick. "I never thought you'd have courage enough to leave home. I think New York would be a good place for us to go. We can get along as well as the four millions of people that is there and I'm sure there is work for us in that great city."

Well their ambitions began to rise and they forgot everything but their journey. So they had a few more drinks and with that they went out and stood under the broad moonlight and shook each other's hand and said goodby to the town and good night to themselves and went home to enjoy tbeir last sleep in the little place, as they thought.

The next we see of them is leaving their little gates at the front of their houses, tbeir mothers crying and begging them not to go and leave them in their old ages with no one to take care of them but the strangers.

"Bah," said Tom, one of the young men. "Don't make a fool of yourselfs by crying. Everybody will laugh at you."

So they walk away, ignoring their mothers altogether. They went to the little station and boarded the train for the great city.

Well, they arrived in New York on a Friday morning. The first glimpse they got of the city they thought their fortune was made. We see them again in one of the biggest hotels in the world looking for work. They were amazed by the splendor and magnificence of the grand hotel and thought how great it would be to work in such a great place. But they were disappointed on the spot. The manager did not want any help, so they had to leave and try some other place. But it seemed as though fate was against them. They could not get work, having no trade and not knowing the city. Then they began to get gay and spend their money.

The next we see of them they are utterly discouraged and classed with the bums.

One said:

"I will go bome and make amends for my folly."

Tom said:

"You may go if you like, but I will never go home unless I go as I came, with money in my pocket and good clothes on my back."

So they parted, each going their own way.

The First Job.

The youthful author here narrates his search for work by day, while at night he slept on a park bench. Finally he got a position in a factory at $6 a week. He continues:

He took the job with an empty stomach. After the day's work was over and the people were all gone, he had no home to go to. The park and one of its benches was staring him in the face until payday, which was two weeks off. To sleep on them hard benches for two whole weeks and he working all day seemed to set him out of his mind. The montb of December is no warm montb for anybody to sleep out.

"Well," he said to himself, "I have to do it, that is all."

While walking from the factory to the park he met a man who had a kind look, and he asked him for the price of a bed.

The man sized the young fellow up, then looked him straight in the face, and said:

"Yes, I will. You don't look like a panhandler."

So he took the money and bought a bed in one of the cheap lodging houses on the Bowery. When he paid for bis bed the man showed him something that looked like a roost pile. He takes off his clothes and manages to climb up to his perch.

Once in bed he was so utterly fatigued that sleep was impossible, but he rested his weary limbs for tbe time being.

Six o'clock, and:

"Come on! Get up out of there if you are going to work."

He tried to move his limbs, but they failed him. The man who called him gave him a shove, and he fell headlong to the floor and lay there. His eyes were wide open.

An old man began to peep from under his cover to see what made the noise. He saw the young fellow lying there, the lodging house keeper bending over bim.

The old man said:

"Let the boy alone, or I will call the cops."

The lodging house keeper got a little afraid.

"Well, get ahold of his legs," he said, "and I'll get abold of his arms, and we'll fire him up to his roost."

Then he turned to the young fellow after he was again in his roost, and said:

"Now, stay there one hour more, and if you're not up and dressed I'll send you up to the Island.

Then followed an interval during which the author-hero subsisted on food purchased with one-half of the 10 cents that another boy in the factory had provided as luncheon money. At the end of that period the narrator comes to his climax in this fashion:

It was the twenty-fourth of December. He slept in the park that night and the next day he went to a place that a young fellow from Denver who worked in the same place he did had told him about. It was on the East Side—Chrystie street—number 129.

He goes up to the door and rings tbe bell. A boy asked him who he wanted to see. He said the "boss."

The boy went in and when he came back he said:

"All right, come in and see him."

He entered tbe house, the first one in two months except the lodging house—and was taken down stairs where the boss was standing over a hugh monster of a turkey with two knives in his hand.

Turning around the boss said:

"Well, young man, what can I do for you? You look in a pretty bad way."

The young man spoke up and said:

"I have no place to eat, no place to sleep, and I am cold."

"Well now that is too bad," said the boss to the young man.

Then the boss said to one of the boys who was standing around:

"Go up stairs and see if there ain't room at one of the tables for this young man."

The boy came back and said that there was.

"Well," said the boss, "take this young man up and let him wash himself and comb his hair."

The young man had a wash and combed his hair and then he was taken into a room where there were two big tables covered ith nice things to eat. He was seated in and everybody shook his hand.

Another man was at the head of the table and poured turkey and potatoes and all the nice things into him hand over fist.

In the evening he got a bed and was kept in the house two months and put on his feet and given good advice by the boss.

Now he expects to go home just as he came with good clothes on his back and money in his pocket.

This boy, Mr. Gilipatrick thinks, has literary ability. His effort, he points out, is simplicity itself, and it is also truthful and realistic. Then, too, there is a certain form and order in the boy's presentation of his series of pen pictures.

Interest in New Members.

The boys of the Bachman Club, in both their social and business sessions, try to develop in the new members a certain sense of responsibility. As last year the house provided 2,952 nights' lodgings, and 137 boys, some 78 of whom had prison records, were kept in the house for considerablo periods, the task the club has undertaken is not easy. The club recently had to deal with a boy who insisted that he was too bad to be worthy of any consideration.

"It ain't no use," he told Mr. Gilipatrick. "I'm no good generally and you can't do nothing for me. I'm just naturally bad."

The club considered the case of this boy. At the end of a session of discussion they elected him an officer. Gradually the boy began to develop a sense of self-respect. The little authority seemed to provide the needed stimulus. In the club debates, after a time, be blossomed forth as an orator. When the club considered tbe question as to who was the greatest man in the United States this boy maintained that Samuel Gompers, as the champion of labor, was entitled to the designation.

Occasionally they come across in Chrystie Street a real wanderer—a boy who couldn't be anything but a tramp if he tried his best. One boy of 15 bad traveled over the country rather thoroughly, even working his passage to Europe on one occasion. The boy's parents had quarreled and separated, and the boy had lost all trace of tbem. So impressed with his good qualities had Mr. Gilipatrick become that be allowed this boy to remain in the house for the Winter. But in the Spring the boy went to him.

"It isn't anything that I am proud of," he said to the head worker, "but the fact is that I simply can't stay here in the city any longer."

The Wanderlust.

"Why not?" he was asked.

"It's Spring," the boy said, as though that were all sufficient.

Later be added that he wanted to go to the lake region.

It was decided to let bim go. On the night of bis departure—they don't look as sharply for stowaways on freight cars at night in the yards—the club held a session for bis benefit.

"You must remember," said the boy orator of tbe club, "that no matter where you are you are still a member of the Bachman Club. Whether you are at home or in a foreign country we want you to wear this button—the club button—the Bachman Club button—and remember that on your last night with us we voted it to you."

Some ten days later a grimy postal card which the boy had taken with him from the house arrived in Chrystie Street.

"I arrived safe but cold," it said. "I am O. K. Tell the boys of tbe Bachman Club that everything is O. K. Tell Harry that everything is O. K."

That there really is developed in the Bachman Club a strong esprit de corps is evidenced by the diverse ways in which the members work for it and the house after they leave it. One boy bad been gone but a few days when he wrote:

I have got a job on a steamboat running to Albany. It leaves Pier 32 North River. If there is a boy at tbe house that would like a job in the kitchen send him down at 9 o'clock Thursday. It ain't very easy work. Send the biggest boy you've got. The wages are twenty a month, board and room. The hours are from 5 in the morning until 11. You are off then until 4 in the afternoon. Then you work until 10.

Another boy, older than those referred to above, being 20, was in the house for a time. He had served a sentence of two years for stealing and another six months for vagrancy. At the end of his period in the house he was placed in a shop to learn a trade. One of his fellow-workmen referred slightingly to the house, whereupon the boy attacked him with an awl. For this he lost his position, though at the present time he is well placed and promises to do well.

Still another boy who had served six months for vagrancy left the house, having secured a fair position uptown. Soon he wrote this letter to Chrystie Street:

When I left the Chrystie Street House I went away with the desire to do what I believed to be right in the future, no matter what might be the result. I was put to the test yesterday when somebody called my employer on the 'phone with whom my employer did not wish to speak. My employer asked me to tell the man on the 'phone that he was not in. And knowing that if I did so I would be lying, I refused to do as he asked, in a respectful way of course, and to my surprise my boss did not appear to be angry with me.

Many Boys Cared For.

In the past year the Chrystie Street House has cared for 137 boys, giving them food, clothing, and shelter. The number of day's lodgings provided was 2,952. Seventy-eight of the boys had prison records. Five had been paroled by the courts. Sixty-six found employment, while sixteen were returned to their homes. None of those who have been in tbe house are believed to be in prison at the present time. These figures should be read in the light of the fact that the house has only twelve beds for boys. Yet no one bas been turned away. At times boys have been placed in rooms outside of the house.

"There is no regular period," said Mr. Gilipatrick the other day, "during which a boy can remain in the house. That rests witb me. I have no preconceived notions regarding human beings, and I am strongly individualistic in my treatment of the boys. I keep a boy as long as I think that I can do him good. As a general thing after a boy has been here for a time we are able to secure employment for him, and he moves out to give place to some other boy, though still keeping in touch with us and the Bachman Club. What we principally need now is funds. It costs about $6,000 annually to run the place, and we need a greater number of subscriptions. It seems to me that a man factory ought to be deserving of an endowment by some of our wealthy men."

At that moment a tall, overgrown boy entered the room.

"I'm not working now," he said.

The head worker called an attendant.

"Take bim to the bathroom," be ordered.

"I bad a bath yesterday," protested the boy.

Nevertheless to the bath he went.

"He, liko the other boys who are able to," said Mr. Gilipatrick, "pays bis way. We even bave a ledger here, and encourage boys who may be in the house or living outside, but keeping in touch with us through tbe Bachman Club, to save their money. They may withdraw it at any time."

MR. HENNESSY DISCUSSES THE PEACE CONFERENCE

He Comments Genially on the Latest Act of the Man Who Has Added a Convention of World Notables to His Other Achievements.

"PHWAT is Carnegie peace?" said Mr. Dooley.

"'Tis th' fine new br-rand," answered Mr. Hennessy. "Just as people bave been speakin' f'r years past iv Carnegie libraries an' Carnegie heroes an' Carnegie, Pennsylvania, they will soon apply that eloquent Scotch epithet to our old fr'rind Pax, as Hogan says. Yis, Mar-rtin. Carnegie is rapidly becomin' th' foremost adjictivo in th' English language.

"An' 'twill be th' gr-rand thing f'r Peace, th' dear gir-rl, to have Andy take her up. Ye know her, Mar-rtin. She is usually rayprisented as a most rayspictable stone lady, tellin' another statue, rayprisintin' Business, all about th' phenomenal wheat crop in Iowa. Peace has always been well liked an' rayceived iverywbere, even in th' Cinthr'l American raypublics. But she lacked capital. Nobody would dr-ream iv gittin' up a war bitweet two countries without capital, an' yit peace was expicted to git along in ivery counthry undher th' sun without it. How cud she, poor thing? Look at pbwat happened to her in 1898. There sbe was, reignin' supreme in ivery stumph spacbe in th' counthry wbin along comes a Diclaration iv War sanctioned by Wall Sthreet an' puts her in camphor f'r th' whole Summer.

"But all that is over. Nothin' iv th' kind can iver happen to Carnegie peace, Andy thinks. Now that he has taken hold, he believes War hasn't th' chance iv a can iv indipendant ile at 18 Broadway.

"Yis, Mar-rtin. F'r a long time there has been a trimindous tur-rmoil in Andy's thinkmills. Ye see, 'tis this way. Some time back Andy got so rich he had to blusb. 'I care not wbo makes my counthry's dollars,' he sez, 'provided,' he sez, 'that I git thim in th' long run,' he sez. So he retired fr'm business.

"But prisintly he found out that th' whole wor-rld thought iv him as a mere multi-millionaire, an' a Pittsburg wan at that. Pittsburg, Mar-rtin, is a rich but unhappy city. Although it has raycintly been proved that ther-re ar-re twinty-eight nice Pittsburgers, th' gineral reppytation iv th' place is hair-raisin': Th' twinty-cight nice Pittsburgers lives in an ixclusive section, siparated fr'm th' rist iv th' city by Upper Br-roadway afther Dark, which runs through Pittsburg at a trimindous pace. Th' average Pittsburger's inthrist in New York is touchin' in its simplicity. Ivery time th' New York ixpriss raves th' Pittsburg daypo th' population iv Pittsburg is twinty-eight.

"Now ye can see, Mar-rtin, that Pittsburg was no town f'r a man iv Andy Carnegie's gr-reatness. He, too, decided to come to New York. But he came on a slow tr-rain, in an orderly manner. An' he rifrained fr'm openin' champagne in th' smokin' car to such an ixtint that whin th' tr-rain got to Jersey City most iv tb' passengers had a vague idea that Andy had got abror-rd at Philadelphia. And whin he stipped of th' ferryboat he didn't sing a dr-rinkin' song an' l'ave th' choice iv his distination to th' cabman. No, Mar-rtin. Andy was always considered iccinthric in Pittsburg.

"Phwat he did was to build himsilf an iligint an' palatial risidince jist outside tb' entree to New York's most ixclusive society. Ther-re he wud sit an' try to think up a way to kape people's eyes fr'm sthrayin' unconsciously fr'm his face to his pocket.

"'I have it!'" he says one day. "'Tis lit-rachoor f'r me. I know f'm a bor-rn writer. Th' mar-rked ability I showed in me fir-rst essay at school was dishtroyed in th' bud by me teacher's forbiddin' me iver to write a sicond. Hooray. 'Tis all sittled. I'll be th' counthry's gr-reatest nom de plume!'

"An' so sayin', he wroto a book.

"But nobody wud think uv it as lit'rachoor. 'Raymarkable f'r a Pittsburg millionairc,' sez one crithic. 'He will write well whin he gr-rows up,' sez a sicond. 'In readin' the book wan seems to br-reathe th' very air iv Pittsburg,' sez a third. An' so on. In vain Andy j'ined lith'ry clubs. In vain he lectured abont 'Th' Amazin' Influence iv th' Renaissance on th' Pr-rice iv Steel.' In vain he nayglicted his hair. In vain he wrote more books. Th' public continued to pick thim up merely on account iv th' man who wrote thim an' put thim down f'r th' same reason.

"'I'm ahead iv mo tinie,' sez Andy with a sigh.

"So he tur-rned his ettintion to libraries. 'If people won't read Carnegie's books they must read Carnegie books,' he sez. An' suitin' th' action to th' wor-rd, he got out a prospictus somethin' like this:

"'To th' inhabitants iv iv'ry town in th' United States, greetin'. How are ye?

"'Do ye feel gr-rowin' pains in th' intellict? Does goin' down to th' daypo to watch th' tr-rain come in fail to satisfy ye'er intangible year-rnings? Do ye iver pine? Come, now, do ye? Iv coorse ye do. Well, th' thing f'r ye is a Carnegie Lib-ry. If ye will beg, borrow, or steal fifty thousand dollars an' promise to change th' name iv Main Sthreet to Carnegie Boolyvarr, I will conthribute th' rimainin' sivinty-eight cints to'rd a public lib'ry f'r ye, to be known as th' Carnegie Lib'ry. But fir-rst ye must change th' name iv ye'er town to Carnegie. I will also stock th' lib-ry in quistion with tin thousand silicted volumes iv classics, an' iv pils'nt readin'. But fir-rst ye must swear to name all ye'er children Skibo, irrispictive iv sex an' prayvious condition iv nomenclature. An' ye'll have to insther-ribe on th' fr-ront iv th' library th' single wor-rd CARNEGIE in letthers iv a scandalous an' imprissivo size. 'Tis th' gr-reatest offer iv th' age. Are ye on? Iv coorse yo ar-re. In witness wherecf, dr-rop round to see me. Will ye, now? Good!'

"To this prospictus is doo th' amazin' output iv books in this counthry. Childther, wimmen, an' men are toilin' in th' novel-shops, tur-rnin' out best sellers. Th' Carnegie lib-ries must be kept filled. Carnegie lib'ries has th' same ideas about multiplication as our fr-rind, th' rabbit. Wher-re ther-re was no lib'ry at all yisterday they are buildin' an annix to-day. People whose only readin' was done while waitin' f'r th' barber's 'Nixt!' is now gr-rowin' thin an' pale under gr-reen lights tryin' to find out what Darwin meant in 'Th' Origin iv Speeches.'

"But all this lith'ry glory didn't satisfy Andy. Ye see, by this time he was sufferin' fr'm what is called Dimintia Carnegiana, a mild form iv insanity which can only be kept under conthr-rol by constant mintion iv th' patient's name in his hearin'. Afther binifitin' th' cause iv eddication by puttin' forty-six thousand lib'ries afther his name, Andy year-rned f'r new wor-rds to letther.

"'Hayroes!' he sez. 'We must have a new Hayroic Age—a Carnegie Hayroic Age,' he sez.

"So he advertised medals, to be given away gr-ratis to iv'rybody caught in th' act iv being a hayro. Th' effict on th' er-rop iv hayroes was ixtraordinary. Th' rivers was full iv thim. Firemen was turr'bly hampered at fires by hayroes riscuing thim while they was at wor-rk. No suicide was safe fr'm molistation. Things came to sich a pass that hayroes began to apply to Andy f'r medals because they had loaned umbrellas on rainy days to their fr-rinds an' thus saved thim fr'm possibly fatal sneezin'. So Andy got tired iv Carnegie hayroes afther a while. An' just at this time somebody called his attintion to th' fact that Universal Peace had th' gr-reatest future iv any idea in th' wor-rld. 'Good,' sez Andy in Scotch, 'guid.' An' ho threw himself into th' fight f'r peace with tirrific inergy an' ditarmination.

"Andy is well fitted f'r boomin' peace. He knows th' horrors iv war personally. He wint into wan ind iv our civil war a light-hearted tiligrapher an' came out th' other ind a wr-rinkled solver iv wor-rld problems.

"'This year will be known in his'try,' he sez, 'not as 1907 A. D., but as 1907 A. C.,' he sez.

"An' with these wor-rds on his lips he incor-rporated Universal Peace under th' laws iv New Jer-rsey an' called a meetin' iv th' Boar-rd iv Dirichtors, composed iv famous men fr'm all over th' wor-rld. Whin they was all congrigated behind th' camera Andy rose in front iv it an' shpoke these alligorical wor-rds:

"'Wanst in th' turr'ble days iv th' civil war I was tr-ryin' to forgit th' nervous sthrain iv battle by lyin' on a live tiligraph wire. 'Twas on th' line iv th' Chickahominy jist befoor Gr-rant surprised Lee out iv his sinses by ifflictin' a junction with Stonewall Jackson. As I lay ther-re I dr-eamt that I owned all th' steel in th' wor-rld an' was sellin' it at Pittsburg prices to th' human race, which was gathered in fr-ront iv me steel notion counter in ixthravagant numbers.

"'But prisintly th' dr-ream tur-rned into a nightmare. Th' heaps iv steel became ferocious an' unprisintable monsthers. I woke in agony. No wonder. Th' two most unwilcome inches iv a steel bayonet was stickin' into me leg. Iver since I have loved Peace.'

"As Andy stopped sp'akin' ther-re was a trimindous clappin' iv hands. That gave th' keynote to th' conference. Carnegie peace was nixt to a fact.

"'Tis th' gr-rand idea,' Jawn," said Mr. Dooley. "Tin years fr'm now Peace will be so sthrong that notbin' in th 'wor-rld can shake it."

"Ixciptin' War," said Mr. Hennessy.

SOME INTERESTING STATISTICS YOU OUGHT TO KNOW

IF a man in Greater New York knew everybody else there, the energy used up by him each year in nodding and bowing to his acquaintances, even if he cut fifty people intentionally and 150 unintentionally per day, would enable him to swim up Niagara Falls and keep up a nodding acquaintance with sixty-nine people. If he cut nobody at all, he would, in addition to the above-mentioned feats, be enabled to pull a drayload of machinery, with seven little boys stealing a ride behind.

If all the sneezes sneezed in Greater New York on one rainy day were concentrated together, they would blow a ship from Sandy Hook to the Lizard and totally wreck the Lizard and surrounding country.

If a man started out at noon on Feb. 3, 1907, to say "love" the same number of times that it has appeared in prose and poetry since the world began, and agreed to say it at the rate of fifty repetitions per hour, with six hours a day for sleep and two hours for meals, he would finish at noon on Feb. 3, 1932, in the full possession of all his faculties and showing no effects of his labor more serious than a strikingly pessimistic disposition, provided, of course, that he had had complete liberty of speech allowed him during meals and while asleep for the expression of his personal opinion regarding the job.

If all the newspapers left in Greater New York elevated and Subway trains and street cars (exclusive of horse cars and Fifth Avenue 'buses) were made into a single sheet it would cover the entire Atlantic Ocean and the British Isles into the bargain, provided that some way could be found, during the arrangement of the papers, to keep the Atlantic Ocean from soaking through and the British police from interfering.

THE DIREFUL DIARY OF MR SECRETARY LOEB

How the Rich Man's Plot Thickened and Made Life Unpleasant for Its Discoverer—Also Some Notes on the Origin of the Plot.

WASHINGTON, March 30.—I haven't been called a liar for quite a while, so I am feeling comparatively calm, and think I'll etart a diary. Historiane, I know, will want the inside story of these terrible days of menace to the Republic. If anybody is qualified to write the inside story in question, I am. So here goes:

Sunday.

The Rich Man's Plot, so providentially discovered a few days ago, THICKENS. I have put everybody in Washington who gets more than $25 a week under etrict surveiliance. This is in obedience to the orders of the President, who is prancing up and down the White House grounds, brandishing his brotherless spear and asking everybody who goes by, "How much are you worth?" One millionaire who happened to pass this morning narrowly escaped getting a mortal spear thrust. The President desires me to instruct the police to break up all conversations between men in affluent circumstances. He feels sure that such conversations are merely plots against him.

To-day I had a man arrested because he handed the conductor of a Pennsylvania Avenue car a ten-dollar bill when asked for his fare. But when he proved at the station house that the bill in question represented his weekly salary I discharged him with a reprimand for carrying concealed wealth. One must be severe in these days.

Monday.

I don't know what the rich men intend to do to the President, but whatever it is I feel sure that they have subscribed a billion dollars to do it with. I have just heard that a small man with spectacles and a bald-headed man were seen sitting, together with several others, around a campfire last night in a lonely spot on the Hackensack Meadows. The President at once ordered me to place Washington under martial law. What is martial law, and how do you place anything under it? I must get down the encyclopedia and look under "M."

Tuesday.

Edward H. Harriman wrote me today indignantly denying that he is rich. So did John D. Rockefeller.

"As I stated a short time ago," declared the latter, "I only have $300,000,000—not a single cent more—not one—upon my word and cross my heart. Why, the song 'Poor John' was written about me!"

I have just been speaking to the President about the advisability of arresting Andrew Carnegie, who has been seen on Pennsylvania Avenue. "Jug him," said the President. How terse he is. "Don't jug him," he added. "But you told me to," said I. "You're a liar," said he. How impulsive he is.

Wednesday.

I have jugged Andrew Carnegie, charging him with being a rich plotter. He was very angry, saying that he is doing his best to die poor. When the policeman grabbed him, Andy put up such a ferocious struggle that he came near dying rich. But at last we landed him.

However, when he gave a rough estimate at the station of what it would cost him to provide the world's 2,874,579 libraryless towns, with Carnegie libraries, I had to let him go. In fact, I offered to lend the poor chap $5. But he nobly refused.

Thursday.

Say, on the level, this job would wear out a centipede. I have carried out nineteen orders this morning, all of which have been countermanded, six of them twice, one thirteen timee. And I've been called a liar so often that I am beginning to think very meanly of myself. The President has surrounded the White House with a guard of indigent men. "I can trust them," he declares. Then he added, as usual: "My spear knows no brother." "Has it a sister?" I asked, wishing to make conversation. He didn't seem to like it, judging by the way he called me a liar.

One of the indigent guards flashed a half-dollar to-day and was at once fired. Quite right. As for me, I am getting so nervous on account of this heinous Rich Men's Plot that I cannot bear the sight or mention of money. On pay day I am going to have my salary fed to me dollar hy dollar for fear of terrihle consequences if I sec it in a lump.

The President has just sent down two more orders from his room and is countermanding them loudly from the head of the stairs. I'm not a willful and malicious liar! Hanged if I am! A little while ago he came up to me and asked me how much money I had saved. "Nineteen dollars," I said, modestly. He looked askance at me for a moment. He felt eure that I wae in the rich's men PLOT! But presently his face cleared.

"You're a liar," he said.

How resourceful he is!

Friday.

The sentry on the lawn hae just fired another shot. I suppose he saw a well-dressed man. Our sentries don't say, "Who goes there?" but "Are you rich?" If the answer is in the negative they follow up their first question with a "What are your prospects?" in a sharp, military voice. And if the person addressed answers "Fond uncle" or "Relatives in Pittsburg" or something like that, he ie shot on the spot. Bang! Another man pinked. Why do most Americans persist in having prospects?

Saturday.

I have just taken the responsibility of declaring the President in a etate of siege, and locking him in the White House garret. I saw eighty-nine persons who looked like E. H. Harriman on Sixteenth Street to-day, whereas yesterday I saw only fifty.

The PLOT is getting more and more serious.

The President ie making a thundering big racket in the garret, so I suppose I'd better go up.

* * * * * * * *

Blown if he hasn't called up Harriman on the long-distance 'phone and invited him to lunch. And he says that I invented the whole PLOT myself. Say, on the square, this job would make a saint paint the town red.

* * * * * * * *

He's giving a little description of me from the head of the stairs. It is powerful, but inaccurato. I am writing my resignation.

* * * * * * * *

Now he says if Harriman comes to lunch, call him a liar and throw him out.

* * * * * * * *

He says I'm a liar.

* * * * * * * *

He says that if I said that he said I'm a liar, to tell myself from him that I'm another. I have written my resignation.

* * * * * * * *

He * * * but no matter. I am going to borrow whatever the minimum of wealth is and join the Rich Men'e Plot.

Saturday—P. M.

He has just come eliding down the bannisters, Rough Rider style, to compliment me on my heroic defense of the White House against the predatory rich. How whole-souled he is! He also has declared me under martial law, and has hidden me in the ice chest. How thoughtful he is!

Sunday—A. M.

Upon my word, he'e a pinwheel. Now ne says that anything over $1,000 a year is boundless wealth. Consequently he is calling me a mendacious plutocrat, and is carefully watching the ice chest, to spear me when I come out.

Sunday—P. M.

I have just written this little song about myself:

If by dozens I numbered my hands
And by dozens I numbered my feet,
If I had twenty eyes
Of scandalous size
I still ehould be quite incomplete.
All day I must hurry like mad
And chase away wild Teddy-phobes,
If ever a job
Required a mob,
It's Loeb's,
Loeb's,
Loeb'e!

Thie effusion I paesed out to the President. He rejoined by passing me some private asylum prospectusee on the point of hie spear. I am to be shipped to one of them to-day in the ice chest, labeled: "Rich; handle with care."

The Birth of the Plot

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is with extreme reluctance that after a quiet life of fifty-five years spent, as to employment, as a clerk with a great mercantile house of New York, and as to real living, as a respectable citizen of Darlington, New Jereey, on the Erie Central Railroad, I plunge headlong into the midst of a great controversy. Providence, however, sometimes chooses very humble agencies to thwart and expose wrongs, and I have become convinced that in this instance I have been selected. I might add that my wife, whose counecl I prize extremely, quite agrees with me in this.

You will have gathered that I am one of that vast army of commuters which spends a few fretful hours each day in the metropolis to gain bread. The service upon our line has fallen into evil ways and we have finally become dependent upon two trains each way daily. A few mornings ago, to be exact, on March 30, I was compelled to be at my work much earlier than usual and found that I must waik fn to Jersey City.

I arose early, therefore, partook of a hasty breakfast and set forth just as the morning sun thrust its rosy face above the Eastern horizon. It was a very cool morning—our weather this Spring has been practically unprecedented, I have found by reference to my old diaries—and I walked fast, indeed, both to reach town early and to keep warm. At the end of two hours accordingly I came into the great terminal yards, once the scene of extreme activity, but now, as a result of the abandonment of many trains on al lines, a scene of desolation and solitude.

As I turned to leave a side track upon which etood a train I recognized as our old 8:15 out of Darlington, now rusting and rotting in innocuous desuetude, I came upon a strange sight. Before a cheerful fire built of odds and ends gathered, apparently, in the desolate yard, three men were sitting. They wore wide slouch hats, pulled well down over their eyes and were crowded close to one another.

Thc oldest of the three appeared to have attained at least sixty-five years. He was thin of face and figure, and when he at times pushed back his slouch hat it was to pass his hands over a head bereft of all save three spears of hair. He was eeated upon an oil barrel.

Next in age was a short, thickset man, in general nppearance Napoleonic, save for a bushy mustache and big spectacles. He was scated upon a railroad tie and seemed to be testing expertly the quality of a short piece of steel rail, pausing at times to emit a eort of growl, not unlike the sound "wow-wow," when displeased by a suggestion of his comrades.

The third man eeemed hardly out of the thirties. His face was oval shaped and smooth shaven, and his hair, as I could see when he pushed back his hat, parted exactly in the middle. He was seated upon a box which resembled very much a diecarded ballot box. Occasionally he addressed hie companions, to their obvioue annoyance, as "fellow citizene."

I felt that this conference could have no object of value to the public welfare and I therefore deliberately concealed myself behind a car truck, the first time, I might add, that I have ever stooped to the low plane of an eavesdropper.

The long, thin, elderly man on the oil barrel stretched out his hands hungrily toward the cheerful blaze, and, addressing no one, said:

"Well, where doee the $5,000,000 come from?"

The man eitting on the railroad tie replied:

"Thie market has dropped, eo I can't put up cash, but I've got a lot of U. P. and S. P. that I'll give you as collateral if you'll make me a loan."

The old gentleman rapped his heele againet the barrel viciously:

"Every one looks to me for cash—I don't know why—Carnegie gives 'em bonds. I'll lend you $250,000 at eight per cent., but you'll have to mark those stocks down eharp if I take 'em as security. Got any bonds?"

"C. & A.," and the man on the railroad tie grinned as he said it.

"How about you?" asked the elderly man addressing the young man on the ballot box.

"Well, I have been under heavy expense lately," replied the young man.

"Same story—same story—more loane, I suppose," broke in the elderly man, teetily.

"Not just the same," the young man said, somewhat hotly. "I saved about $100,000 by refusing to be the Republican candidate, and I'll turn that in."

"All right—all right," answered the man on the barrel. "If you promiee to give me a complete head of hair in cartoons, I'll supply the rest of the money. Good! Now, that gives us, say, $250,000 of Ed's, (borrowed from me,) $250,000 of yours, ($150,000 from me,) and $500,000 of my own—soon—it's on it's way because I've just raised the price of my illuminant. That's a million. Add $4,000,000 of water, and we're financed as a $5,000,000 pool.

"Now—whom are we going to take in with us? I made overtures to John Gates, a moneyed man, but he sent me only a button with his regrets, and an offer to bet a million that Roosevelt would eat us alive in the end. Gould is saving his money to buy nine cars for the M. P. this year. Hill I don't trust—he'd make us into a securities company, dissolve ue and keep the control personally. Andrew, having arranged his own so that he gete his interest monthly, is againet all mergers. Besides, he'e teaching the Preeident spelling. Fairbanks, of course, we have—but not his money. The watered stock will be enough to get in the politicians. We need a United States Senator for a spokesman. Some one above suspicion—a friend, nominally, of Roosevelt—who'll it be?"

I was in a etate of extreme nervousness by this time, naturally, this having been the most amazing thing which has happened in all my quiet life—and I leaned forward around the trucks to hear tho name. I could make out only an indistinct murmur as the man on the oil barrel spoke. It sounded like "pin-a-rose," but the popular, and, I think, vulgar, eong of the moment about "Mother, pin a rose on me" may have suggested this.

The conspirators now rose from their various seats, and, going through some form of outlandish oath, which ended with each making the sign of the dollar mark on his heart, separated and took each his way toward the ferries.

You will understand how tardily I arrived at my desk—the firet time such a thing had happened eince I was delayed by the coming of my youngest daughter, now fourteen years of age. You will aleo understand how I have turned this matter over and over in my mind, trying to determine how I should conduct myself. This is my final decision, in which, I am glad to say, my wife agrees.

Yours in sincerity,
PRO BONO PUBLICO.

LITTLE STORIES OF FACT AND FANCY

Ambition in the Humble Music Halls.

"WE have here in Manhattan," said the man who goes about, "a species of first-night with author and all that the average first-nighter of the theatres or any other nighter for that reason knows nothing about. Lately I went to some of the little music halls of the class which doesn't advertise or have other performances than mechanical moving pictures and songs sung by a human voice that is a metallic amplification of the phonograph. These singers have a technique that is peculiar to their class of work. Down in these little music halls they speak of the 'carrying power' of the voices of the singers, and the fact that some one of them rose above the efforts of a batch of semi-humorists to drown it out.

"The writers of these songs are the ones who are chiefly concerned at the first nights I have mentioned. The singers, who give themselves all sorts of airs, are persuaded finally by one of the song writers to sing a song the work of the author in question. There is not one of these makers of silly stuff who does not live in hope of some day making a hit with a song and then retiring to do the work that he wants to do, for each man thinks himself above what he has in hand, here as everywhere else. The time comes after the motion picture of the fat woman trying on hats, and the singer appears on the platform, while the author is in a back seat watching anxiously. If the audience applauds heartily, and at the conclusion of the second repetition of the refrain begins to whistle the air, he is happy. But very frequently he meets disappointment.

"Then, too, occasionally there are present in the audience some persons of a grade of intelligence a trifle higher—not so very much—than that for which the entertainment is intended. The result is that they manifest this difference in snickers and giggles, the singer is ruffled, and the author has a brainstorm.

"'Will you sing "Two in the Moonlight" again?' asks the author of the singer at the conclusion of the number upon such an occasion.

"'Well, I scarcely know. I have so many songs to try out,' the singer replies with indifference—and the writer's slender chance of a hit through that particular channel is gone."

A Motorman's Rogues' Gallery.

TRACTION companies in Eastern cities have established a rogues' gallery for their own protection. The peculiar perverseness of certain employés, particularly motormen, is responsible for its organization. Every man who obtains a position now on the cars of the companies is required to furnish his employer with a recent photograph of himself. This photograph is carefully numbered and filed away in the gallery. Then a new page in a big ledger is opened for "4-11-44", or whatever the new employé's number may be, and a clerk stands ready to scratch his record on the page.

If the new employé is a careful, conscientious workman the clerk has little to do, and the page remains blank, but if the new employé is a reckless, irresponsible fellow the page is soon decorated with a detailed record of his work. Sometimes the entry closes with "discharged for criminal negligence," and then the employé is immediately "blacklisted" by all the companies in the rogues' gallery agreement, his record being distributed among them all. He might just as well turn plumber, for his days as a motorman are over.

Before the introduction of this system a peculiar condition of affairs existed in Eastern cities, particularly in New York. In Manhattan, for instance, a motorman would run down a person and kill him. The circumstances of the accident would show that the motorman was guilty of criminal negligence. The company would promptly discharge him. But the delinquent employe would only laugh. "I can get another job," he would say, and would immediately cross the river and seek employment at the offices of the traction companies in Brooklyn. When asked what qualifications he had he would give satisfactory evidence that he knew enough about a motor to run a car, and would be employed. Soon he would involve his new employer in a damage suit. Then history would be repeated, with only the difference that in this case the man would go to Philadelphia or Boston or some other city comparatively near at hand, where trolleys run through the streets.

But the day is now past when this can be done. The blacklist catches the discharged employé. The effect upon the employé has been remarkable. He has learned to be cautious, and the roads are beginning to get efficient men.

The Hotel Clerk's Little Joke.

AT a certain hotel much frequented by traveling men, and not far from Herald Square, a laughable incident occurred the other night. A representative of a large Chicago firm arrived at the hotel and was effusively greeted by the room clerk, an old acquaintance. After assigning him a room the clerk said: "George, I am very glad that you came just at this time, for there is a very good friend of mine here from Boston. He is a mighty fine fellow, and I want you to meet him. When you come down for dinner I will have it arranged." "George" went up to his room, and in due course of time came downstairs again and expressed his readiness to meet this friend.

The clerk met him and said, "Now, George, there is one slight infirmity which Jack has, and about which he is very sensitive. He is quite deaf. So when I introduce you, raise your voice, and you will find no difficulty." In the meantime while George had been upstairs the clerk had seen Jack and told him the same thing reversed. At about 7 o'clock, when the dining room was crowded with diners, the clerk, with some ostentation, took George into the room, and there was Jack seated at a table. Walking over to the table, and speaking in a perfectly natural tone of voice, he introduced the two men. Each man held out his hand and roared at the top of his lungs the pleasure he felt at meeting the other. Then, appreciating the joke which had been played on them, they sat down to realize that the whole dining room was enjoying their discomfirture. Deponent saith not what happened to the clerk later.

No Respect for a "Middy's" Dignity.

AN officer recently returned from two years' duty with the United States Asiatic Fleet and now serving in the Brooklyn Navy Yard, tells this story of one of the midshipmen attached to the cruiser Chattanooga. The cruiser at the time was paying a flying visit to Tokio, and the midshipman was "taking in" the Jap metropolis in a rickshaw. There was a keen breeze blowing, but it was prevented from blowing through the "middy's" whiskers by reason of the fact that he hadn't any. He held between his lips a No. 1 Manila cheroot of imposing proportions, which he puffed with ostentatious vigor. These simple facts were noted by a Japanese policeman, who prided himself upon his entire and precise knowledge of the laws of the "Land of the Rising Sun." When the Oriental guardian of the peace saw the juvenile naval officer's glowing but beardless countenance he ordered the coolie to stop.

The "middy" demanded, with some forcible adjectives, the reason why an officer of the United States Navy should be interrupted when taking the air ashore. With grave courtesy the slant-eyed bluecoat informed the budding Paul Jones in slow, official English that as he was obviously under the age prescribed by Japanese law, he had no right to smoke in Japan, and that the painful duty devolved upon him—the policeman—of confiscating any smoking paraphernalia he might have, or, as an alternative, to proceed as a prisoner to the police station and undergo the process of being forcibly searched.

There was nothing for it but to hand over his cigar case, an operation which was watched by an amused and edified crowd of Japs. The midshipman's language was forcible. Worse than all, his Captain heard of the incident and was unkind enough to suggest that in future his junior officers would do well before putting themselves inconveniently in evidence in the wilds of a Japanese city to invest in a pair of false mustaches or leave their tobacco on board ship.

According to the officer who relates this story, there is a strict law against smoking by juveniles in Tokio, and no distinction is made in enforcing it in the case of foreigners.

Just to Arouse Pleasant Memories.

A MAN entered a downtown restaurant the other day and ordered a whisky.

The waiter brought a bottle of it. The man uncorked it, raised it to his nose, and took a long sniff. Then he took another. Then he took a third—a long, contemplative sniff. Finally he wound up the performance with a fervent kingsniff, one that he seemed loth to end. But he did end it at last, with a sigh. Then he replaced the bottle on the table, and called the waiter.

"Take it away," he said.

The waiter removed the bottle.

"Well, upon my word," said some one at another table, "I certainly thought that old fellow liked that whisky from the way he sniffed at it, but there he is sending it back. I wonder what other kind the waiter will bring him instead."

But the waiter brought him no more whisky. The man ate his lunch in silence, smoked his cigar, paid his check, and went his way.

"He swore off long ago," explained the waiter to a curious somebody at another table. "But he always takes six sniffs of whisky at every meal. Gives him pleasant memories, he says."

Diogenes in 1907.

THERE is an undertaker in this town who has undying faith in his fellow man. Attached to his telephone is no cash lot into which "Central" requests you to drop "five cents, please," before she will connect you with your party. Instead there is simply a long cigar box with a slit in the cover, on which is pasted a sign that reads, "Pay here." This curious arrangement caused a reporter who had occasion to use the telephone to inquire the reason for its existence.

"I have the telephone in the store for the convenience of my customers," said the undertaker. "When I had it installed I said to myself, There are some honest men on this earth. The only difficulty is in finding them. Let me see how many I can find.' When I emptied the box at the end of the first month I found a few buttons and other junk, and immediately thought that my idea about honest men was false. When I counted the money my fears were allayed. My receipts were larger than my bill from the telephone company. How do I account for this? I suppose it was because when you tell a man he ie honest he likes to live up to the reputation you have given him. The surplus was caused by persons who didn't want to bother about the change."

His Revenge Complete.

THERE is a rolling stone in New York who is short on moss but long on anecdote, having knocked about in half a dozen countries. He has been out of a job a good part of his life, but has never let that worry him, being an Irishman, with his full share of the light-heartedness of his race.

"Once," he tells, "I arrived, dead-broke, at a city in Spain. I decided to call on the British Consul. The latter overheard me speaking fluent Spanish in the ante-room to his secretary, and refused absolutely to believe that I was anything but a Spaniard. So he wouldn't help me in any way. I left the Consulate vowing vengeance.

"There was a striko on at the time against the local street railroad company. Gathering a crowd of the strikers about me, I made an impassioned stump speech.

"'Do you know who is the chief stockholder of the street railway company?' I asked them. 'Do you know who is the chief cause of all your troubles?'

"'Who?' inquired the crowd.

"'The British Consul,' I answered, striking an attitude.

"They let out a howl, rushed pell mell down the street, and obligingly wrecked the British Consulate for me.

"I was avenged.

"But I discreetly left town that same day."

That Missing Return Check.

POSSIBLY you have noticed," said the man who goes about, "a young fellow in evening dress standing about the lobby of some theatre during the first act of a performance and then near the close of the intermission between the first and second acts have heard him explaining to the man at the door that he has lost his return check. I have seen it occur twice in different theatres. The second time I was careful to keep an eye on the fellow for a time. Naturally, after what I had seen, I was not surprised shortly before the rise of the curtain to see him joined by another young fellow, also in evening dress, who doubtless used the missing return check to secure admission to the theatre. However, I should not think that the game would be a lasting one, as it cannot be carried on twice with the same doorman with any probability of success. On both occasions the ticket taker took the young fellow's word, seeming to think that the statement of a man in evening dress should not be questioned.

As Green as He Looked.

THE conductor was a son of Erin and had every appearance of being new to the business. The car was well filled with a matinée crowd and among the passengere was a flashily dressed individual escorting two overdressed young women. The conductor entered, stood before the trio and asked for the fares. The man handed him a dime and a nickle, whereupon the conductor asked:

"Three?"

"No, four," said the sporty chap, smiling.

Four fares were promptly registered and the green conductor seemed at a loss to know what the pasesngers were laughing at.

Uncle Sam and Counterfeit Coin.

SOMETIMES it doesn't pay to be conscientious," said the man who had a scruple hut lost it. "One day I found a half dollar in my pocket—I don't know how it got there—which didn't have 'sterling' written on it. Said I to myself philosophically, 'Uncle Sam is a scrupulous fellow. He doesn't like bad money, in particular. So he has established a Sub-Treasury where he exchanges bad money for good money.' I don't know why I thought this. I suppose I must have read it somewhere.

"When I had finished speaking I found myself looking into the weather-beaten face of Washington on the steps of the Sub-Treasury. So I entered. Behind a cage I found a clerk. 'Here is a half dollar I think is bad. Please give me a good one for it,' I said meekly. The clerk took the coin, carefully placed it on a die and brought a mallet down on it with a resounding blow. Then he tossed the coin back to me, and continued to count pennies. I looked at my coin and swore then and there I would never be so conscientious again. The face of liberty was battered into a big 'C,' which plainly meant counterfeit."

Unable to Find the Word.

THE editor of a country paper in Illinois entered his office one morning recently to be met by a subordinate with the startling intelligence that during the night some despicable wretch had stolen every book of reference in the place.

"What do you think of a man who would do a thing like that?" angrily demanded the subordinate.

"As he has taken even the dictionary," said the editor, "I should say that we wholly are at a loss for words to express our indignation."

Pepper and Onions and Garlic and—

AT a restaurant downtown, redolent of pepper and garlic, where swarthy representatives of Spain and all the Spanish-American countries gather every day at the lunch hour, a lone American, accustomed to strictly unseasoned food, was glancing apprehensively at the bill of fare.

"What is chile con carne?" he asked the waiter.

"Ah, Señor, zat is pepper and a leetle meat, and pepper again, and once more pepper and—"

"No matter. What is bacalao à la Vizcaina?"

"It is delicious. Codfish and red pepper and gar—"

"Forget it! What is olla à la Española?"

"Ah! Zat is onions and pepper and garbanzos and chorizos and—"

"Bring me roast beef!"

When Beer Gives Way to Song.

THERE is a German saloon on Third Avenue which is a sort of unofficial Saengerverein, as they call singing societies in that melodious part of town. The rumbling bass voice of the man behind the bar is the mainstay of the particular Saengerverein to which he belongs. To keep in practice for the official "saengerfests" of the club he trolls forth all kinds of songs of the Fatherland while handing out glasses of beer or Rhine wine to his customers.

Many of the latter are fellow-members of his Saengerverein—solemn, corpulent Germans, who gather invariably before the bar for their evening drink. And they are never there long before some one of them starts a "lied." It may be a simple ditty, like with its rollicking chorus, or it may be an ambitious part-song, sung in the real Teutonic fashion, in deadly earnest, by three or four of the customers who have the best voices, the barkeeper suspending his work to contribute his deep bass notes.

Afterward glasses are emptied and refilled amid the applause of the pinochle players who are sure to be busy at one of the tables. For a while beer and conversation reign supreme. But soon somebody—perhaps, Franz, who in the daytime is a morose and unmelodious Broadway waiter, or Heinrich, of the neighboring delicatessen store—starts another deep-voiced ditty. The others come in at the right place, the barkeeper again stops his work, the pinochle players look up from their cards and listen. And the Irish "cop" on the beat outside remarks to the Italian fruit vendor, on the corner:

"Them fat Dutchmen knows how to sing, for sure."

Politeness at Another's Expense.

STANDING in line before the money order window at the Post Office were two men. One of them, as his turn came, permitted a woman to step in ahead of him. When she was through he let another woman pass ahead of him. This made the other man mad.

"Say," he said to the man ahead, "don't be a gentleman at my expense. I'm in a hurry."

The Police Sergeant.

LAST Saturday I slipped inside de station
When Pat McCann got pinched for being lit,
An' heard him give his name and occupation
To some swell guy who certainly was It.
He sat jus' like a King behind de railin'
An' flashed his cap an' uniform, all new,
An' cops went walkin' past him, never failin'
To give him a salute like sojers do.

When Pat got busy yellin' an' hot-airin'
About his gettin' even wid de cop,
Youse oughter hear de line of fancy swearin'
Dat guy behind de iron rail let drop—
He made de cops search Patrick's coat an' pants fer
His wad an' watch an' whisky flask, till Mack
Had nothin' but a Twenty-third Street transfer
In all his clotbes when he was "taken back."

An' all dat time I stood inside de station
An' t'ought: "Dat guy behind de desk's a beaut.
Dere ain't no eweller job in all creation
Den cussin' bums an' making cops salute."
When suddenly he hollors at me: "Hey, dere!
Did youse receive an invitation?—wot?
Yer little loafin' lobster—git away, dere!—
Skidoo, yer ——!: Did I beat it? Like a shot!"

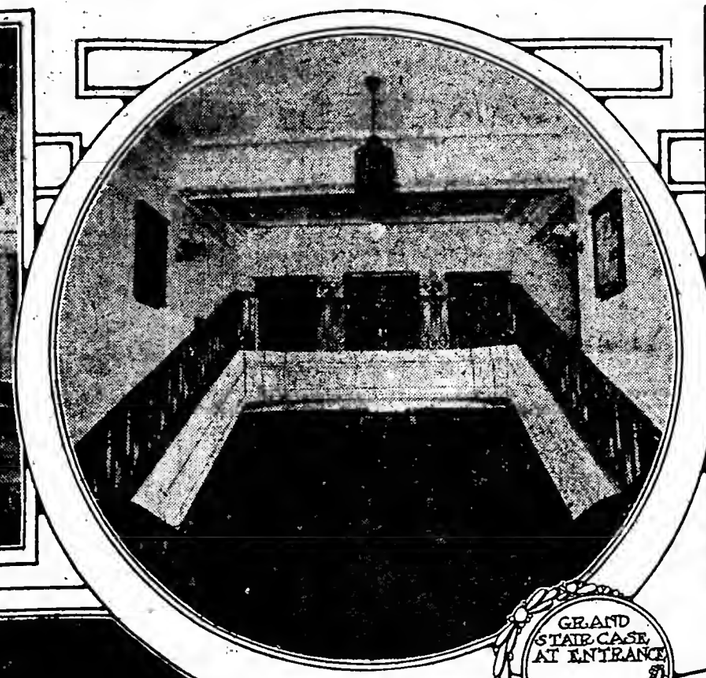
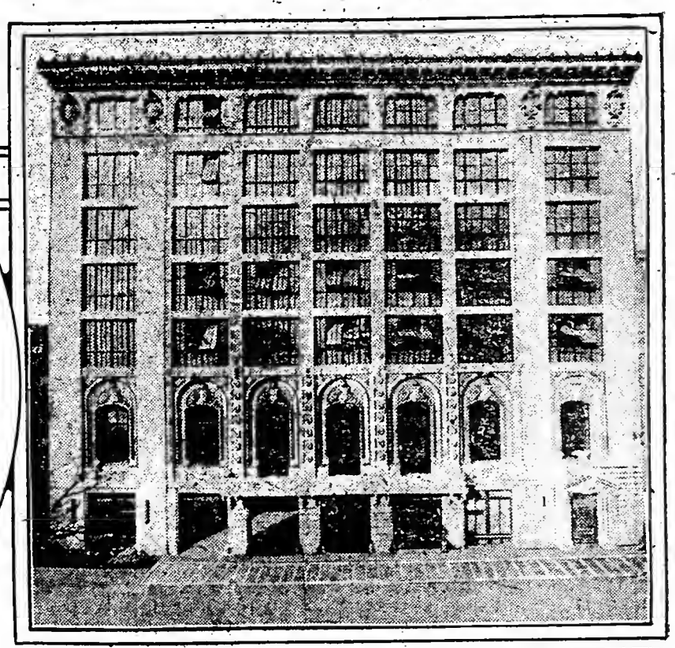
THE AUTOMOBILE CLUB'S SUMPTUOUS NEW HOME

GARAGE FLOOR . . .



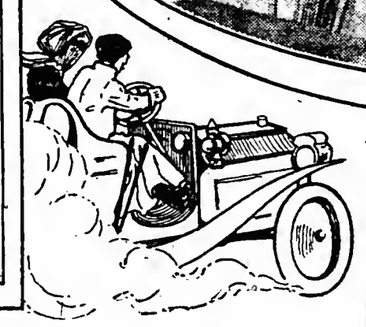
GRAND STAIR-CASE AT ENTRANCE



NEW HOME OF THE AUTOMOBILE CLUB OF AMERICA, WEST . . 54th STREET

ASSEMBLY HALL

GRILL ROOM. . .



Founded in 1899, the Organization Has Grown in Popularity and Influence Until Now It Is a Power in City, State, and Country.

WITH an active membership of 1,000 motorists, nearly all owning their own cars, and the honorary list headed by the President of the United States, the Automobile Club of America will open its new and permanent home next Thursday afternoon. The new clubhouse that has been a trifle over a year in building is situated on the north side of West Fifty-fourth Street, between Broadway and Eighth Avenue. It has a frontage of 131 feet on the street, is 110 feet deep, and eight stories in height. The members' reception and general inspection of the rooms will be held in the afternoon, and in the evening the annual meeting will be held in the big assembly hall, thus beginning the career of the club in its new home in an eminently auspicious manner.

In point of membership this, the recognized National Automobile Club of America, is exceeded but slightly by the automobile clubs of France, Germany, and Great Britain. Had the club been able to secure satisfactory quarters a few years earlier, it might to-day have been the largest in actual membership in the world. The 1,000 membership limit was reached last Fall and the officers then decided that no additions should be made until the completed clubhouse had been occupied at least three months. It is proposed to amend the by-laws on Thursday night so that a 2,000 limit may be authorized in the near future. There is already a large waiting list.

In the clubhouse, however, including the manifold conveniences for the social comfort of the members in addition to its exceptional garage facilities, with special rooms for chauffeurs and the repairing of machines, the new home of the Automobile Club of America excels all other clubs in the world. The land for the building cost over $200,000; the clubhouse represents an outlay of nearly $500,000, while with the elaborate equipment and decorations, particularly in the large three-story assembly hall, 100 feet long, an exact model of the large room in the French chateau of Cheverney, the total cost of the clubhouse will be close to $1,000,000.

Cornerstone Laid a Year Ago.

The corneretone of the new clubhouse was laid on March 21, 1906. No striving for ornate effects has been made in the architectural features, the upper floors being severely simple, expressive of the utilitarian purposes of the house; but the façade of the main floor has been appropriately decorated with marble, Indiana limestone, white brick, and terra cotta, with a light bluish effect in the color scheme around the tall arched windows on the second floor.

The main members' entrance is at the eastern end of the building. The western end includes a large room serving as a temporary garage, where about seventy cars can be accommodated, in addition to stands for washing the cars, a members' locker room, and an office for the Superintendent of the garage. At the far end are two large four-ton elevators, with platforms 10 by 18 feet. They are covered with non-absorbent fire-proof glazed material and the sides are of iron. This ground floor and the top floor, where the repair shops are located, are the only ones in the building where the handling of gasoline and oils is permitted, and the floors are finished with a hard glazed fireproof material which has been proved by tests to resist the absorption of oils and gasoline.

In the basement there is an electric generating plant with ample coal bunkers under the sidewalk, with the engines, pumps, and other operating machinery. Under the sidewalk vault is the gasoline storage room, subdivided into numerous tanks so that the contents of each will not exceed the amount prescribed by the Fire Department. These tanks are filled from pipes terminating at the curbstone line, so that the filling pipe from the gasoline wagon does not cross the sidewalk and the gasoline is conveyed to the automobiles by measuring pumps which deliver exactly one gallon at each stroke.

The repair department and machine shops are located on the top floor, which is practically surrounded by glass in addition to a skylight. The rooms are equipped with the most approved machine tools electrically driven, and in charge of an expert who does machine work for the chauffeurs or owners, and a large space is provided in which chauffeurs may take their cars apart, passing through a gate to the machine foreman such parts as they wish to have expert machine work done upon. In this department is placed the club dynamometer, which is arranged to take the full measure of efficiency, fuel consumption, power, etc., of all makes of cars.

The elevators are arranged to run to the roof level in case it is desired to carry cars to the roof for extra storage or for photographic purposes. The elevators and stairways are separated from the rest of the building by a fire wall with large automatic fire doors at each floor, and with one connecting to the main assembly room so that it will be possible to bring up cars and run them into the latter room to illustrate technical lectures. The building is equipped with a complete electric light and power wiring, including a circuit for demonstration in the lecture room.

At the main entrance to the main club rooms is a large lobby twenty-five feet wide and extending the entire length of the building, the Superintendent's office and members' locker rooms being at the left. At the end of this lobby a great staircase ascends to the second floor, with a small staircase of two or three steps at one side leading to the ladies' waiting room, situated under the landing of the grand staircase and lighted by a large dome skylight. Practically the entire front of the second floor is occupied by the elaborately decorated assembly room. Back of this hall is the grill room, capable of accommodating 300 persons.

Adjoining the grill room is the Governors' room, and on the opposite side are the bar, the serving room and the kitchen. On the mezzanine floor above is the members' billiard room with offices for the Secretary and the clerical staff of the club. No illuminating gas is used in the building, and safety from breakdown in the electric service and also night service is provided for by a storage battery in the basement. The electricity is generated by turbines.

The construction in general is reinforced concrete, and the building is absolutely fireproof throughout. Experiments having demonstrated that the most effective way of putting out burning gasoline is by throwing sand on it, all the columns in the building are provided with hooks on which are hung buckets of sand, in place of water.

Four of the upper floors, in addition to the ground floor, are devoted to garage facilities, the accommodations being sufficient for 350 cars, this feature being decidedly unique in automobile clubs besides being the largest garage in this country.

Founded in 1899.

The first steps toward forming an automobile club were taken on June 7, 1899, when a group of about twenty men met informally in the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel. Among them were George F. Chamberlin, Gen. George Moore Smith, V. Everit Macy, Capt. Homer W. Hedge, A. Whitney Lyon, John Brisben Walker, Charles R. Flint, William Henry Hall, Frank C. Hollister, and Winslow E. Buzby. They were deeply interested in what was then termed the latest fad of the day, but they were far-sighted enough to detect elements of permanency and practical utility in this budding promise of individual transportation, this "latest gift of the gods to man," as ex-President Winthrop E. Scarritt has enthusiastically expressed it.

As a result of this meeting the Automobile Club of America was organized, and on Aug. 16 of the same year it was incorporated under the laws of New York State and a month later the constitution and by-laws were adopted. Mr. Chamberlin, who had been appointed Chairman of the Committee on Organization, served during the year as the first President of the club.

It may be interesting to state the objects of the club as embodied in the certificate of incorporation. So broadly were they drawn and with such a clear insight into the future that they have remained unchanged and have been adopted by a number of other clubs throughout the country.

"The objects of this corporation are the formation of a social organization or club, composed in whole or in part of persons owning self-propelled pleasure vehicles for personal or private use; to furnish the means of recording the experience of members and others using motor vehicles or automobiles; to promote original investigation in the mechanical development of motor carriages by members and others; to arrange for pleasure runs and to encourage contests of all kinds among users of automobiles; to co-operate in securing National legislation and rules governing and regulating the use of self-propelled pleasure vehicles whenever and wherever such rights and privileges are menaced to encourage the construction of good roads and the improvement of public highways, and generally to maintain a social club devoted to the sport of automobilism throughout the country."

The club was immediately recognized by the automobile clubs of France and Great Britain as the National Automobile Club in America, and it has ever since been a member of the International Automobile Federation, having a voice in all affairs of international import.

No time was lost by the small coterie of members in putting the purposes of the club to a test, and on Nov. 4, 1899, the club held the first public parade of automobiles in the United States. Thirty-four care were in line, and the route led up Riverside Drive to Grant's Tomb. How infantile was the industry at that time may be judged from the fact that several care came to grief in ascending the slight incline at 110th Street. In January, 1900, the first club run was held to Tarrytown, and the first club banquet was given at the Waldorf-Astoria on April 2. The club's first efforts to conduct a road race were made on April 14. It took place on Long Island, over a portion of the old Merrick Turnpike. The distance was fifty miles, and great was the enthusiasm and numerous were the people who journeyed to the starting point early in the morning to witness the novel contest in motor vehicles.

Automobile Show Begun.

A. L. Riker, whose interest in automobile contests has never flagged, won this initial American event with an especially designed electric car, his time for the fifty miles being 2 hours 3 minutes, and 30 seconds. The first long distance club run was held on June 2 of that year, when twenty cars made the trip to Philadelphia. All of these activities culminated in November, 1900, when the club took the bold step of inaugurating an Automobile Show. It was held in Madison Square Garden, and brought out sixty-six exhibitors. That this step was not taken in vain has been amply proved by the unprecedented success of every Automobile Show held in New York since that time. In 1901, when the second show was held, also in November, 176 cars were exhibited. The third show was in January, 1903, the number of cars on view increasing to 227. In 1906 one building in New York was unable to accommodate the number of automobile makers anxious to exhibit, and while the Madison Square Garden Show was in progress the Automobile Club's show was held in the new Sixty-ninth Regiment Armory with about 250 cars.

Albert R. Shattuck succeeded Mr. Chamberlain as President in 1900, and he held the office for three years. When he took the Presidency, the club had grown to 260 members, and during his incumbency it moved from its limited accommodations in the Waldorf Astoria to 753 Fifth Avenue, occupying the third floor. The club speedily became too large for these quarters, but, adhering to a wise conservatism, no attempt was deemed advisable for another removal until the club should be in a position to erect its own building and equip it with every necessity for the social comfort of its members and the care and repairing of motor vehicles. So the club remained in its modest Fifth Avenue quarters offering few social attractions for its members. Lectures on practical automobile topics were held about twice a month during the winter season and the lively discussions that usually followed proved that many members knew a great deal more about a motor car than its price and the ability to drive it on level roads.

Working for Good Roads.

Under Mr. Shattuck's regime an energetic movement was advanced for good roads. Mr. Shattuck's work for improved highways was steadily rewarded by larger appropriations from the State, until a little over a year ago public interest in the good roads movement was clearly aroused and the constitutional amendment was authorized by the voters of the State, permitting the expenditure of $50,000,000 within ten years for the building of new roads and the improvement of those already in use.

The first long-endurance run instituted by the club started from this city Sept. 9, 1901, the route leading to Buffalo, about 500 miles. Eighty cars started, but on reaching Rochester on Sept. 13, the news was received of the death of President McKinley and the trip was at once abandoned. On May 30, 1902, the club held its first 100 mile non-stop run, going to Southport, Conn., and return. Fifty-five cars started and twenty-eight made perfect non-stop run scores. In October of the same year the first reliability run was held from this city to Boston and return, 488 miles. Seventy-five cars lined up for the start and sixty-eight finished within the time limit. In May, 1903, the club organized the first commercial vehicle test in this country, and of eleven delivery wagons and trucks that started, seven finished successfully.

Other Presidents.

At the annual meeting in November, 1903, when Mr. Shattuck retired from the Presidency, Winthrop E. Scarritt was elected his successor. The club then had 454 members. Mr. Scarritt served only one year, declining a re-election, but he stamped his enthusiasm for the automobile and his unswerving belief in its steadily increasing utility upon the entire club, strengthening it materially in all of its departments and adding to its National prestige.

Dave Hennen Morris, one of the younger members of the club, but second to none in enthusiasm, succeeded Mr. Scarritt. He completed his second term of office last November, and, declining re-election, Colgate Hoyt assumed the responsibilities of inducting the club into its permanent home. Mr. Morris continued the activity of his predecessors in a marked degree. Many of his suggestions were almost startling in character, but they were all marked by stern common sense and a desire to place the automobile user in a favorable light before the public by denying exclusive privileges to the motorist and insisting upon a proper recognition of the rights of others. Illegal speeding has been condemned, many unjust regulations under which automobilists suffered in former years have been eliminated and most of the ill-feeling that existed in earlier days against the man who drove a car has died out.

Besides its 1,000 active members the club has an associate, or non-resident, membership of 250. There are six life members, while among the honorary members are Thomas A. Edison, Signor Marconi, Alberto Santos-Dumont, Prof. Elihu Thompson, John Brisben Walker, and the Presidents of all the national automobile clubs of Europe.

President Colgate Hoyt is assisted in his management of the various departments of the club by a Board of twelve Governors and sixteen committees. The Governors are: Dr. Schuyler Skaats Wheeler, First Vice President; John E. Borne, Second Vice President; Gen. George Moore Smith, Third Vice President, and Melville D. Chapman, James L. Breese, William Pierson Hamilton, Col. John Jacob Astor, George F. Chamberlin, Dave H. Morris, Winthrop E. Scarritt, Albert R. Shattuck, and Henry Sanderson.

The committees are:

Executive Committee.—Schuyler Skaats Wheeler, Chairman; A. R. Shattuck, Henry Sanderson; Christopher M. Lowther, Clerk to Committee.

House.—Schuyler Skaats Wheeler, Chairman; A. R. Shattuck, Dave H. Morris, Henry Sanderson, George F. Chamberlin.

Good Roads.—A. R. Shattuck, Chairman; Col John Jacob Astor, John F. Plummer, Jr.

Exhibition—Gen. George Moore Smith, Chairman; Alan R. Hawley, William Pierson Hamilton.

Runs and Tours.—Waldron Williams, Chairman; Carl H. Page, Augustus Post, J. M. Porter, Cortlandt Field Bishop, A. R. Shattuck, Winslow Tracy Williams.

Library.—A. R. Shattuck, Chairman; Philip T. Dodge, the Rev. Wilton Merle Smith.

Membership.—Melville D. Chapman, Chairman; Charles B. Dillingham, Gage E. Tarbell.

Law and Ordinance.—W. W. Niles, Chairman; Winthrop E. Scarritt, William H. Page.

Racing.—George Isham Scott, Chairman; William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Samuel B. Stevens, James L. Breese, E. R. Thomas.

Contest—Robert Lee Morrell, Chairman; John A. Hill, E. T. Birdsall, A. H. Whiting.

Map.—Cortlandt Field Bishop, Chairman; Henry R. Taylor.

Building.—Schuyler Skaats Wheeler, Chairman; A. R. Shattuck, Gen. George Moore Smith, Dave H. Morris.

Sign Post.—Jefferson Seligman, Chairman; Melville D. Chapman, Irving Brokaw.

City Streets.—W. W. Niles, Chairman; William R. Warren, Orrel A. Parker, C. E. Knoblauch, Charles S. Towle.

Foreign Relations.—J. Howard Johnston, Chairman; William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., James L. Breese, J. Dunbar Wright, William S. Hogan.

Public Safety.—Winthrop E. Scarritt, Chairman; George F. Chamberlin, A. R. Shattuck, Dave H. Morris.

Reducing a Policeman---In Girth and Weight, Not in Rank

I'M gettin' too fat for me clothes," said Kelly the Cop to his friend, the chauffeur, as the latter slowed up his machine near Sherry's and settled back in the seat to listen to the woes of his policeman chum.

"Say! Do you know I feel foolish, and try to stand on me toes every time the Commissioner passes for fear he will get wise to me overweight?" continued Kelly. "It's me for the anti-fat crusade quick. I'm too healthy. That's what's the matter with me. I've had to let out me belt until I've had to squeeze to get the buckle in the last hole.

"I'll have to get down to weight somehow or I'll lose me job sure. Of course, I ain't so keen to stay on the force, for that matter, but I don't want us to part company that way. I want to have the keen satisfaction of handing in me badge and stick and saying, 'Here, take 'em; I'm too good a man to waste me time looking for crooks and rattling door knobs. Come around to me back door some night and I'll slip you a nip.' I want to say that to the Round Sergeant, the one who has jacked me up for pacing the time of night with me friend Clancy around the corner. Oh, that will be the happy day; and it won't be so long.

"But I'm not ready yet. I haven't got that little corner saloon what is the aim of me life. It's near, but not close enough—yet."

"You do look a little overweight to go on dress parade," said the chauffeur, as he surveyed his friend's ample girth and heavy jowls.

"Overweight? Why say, I'm swelling up like a balloon. Everything I eat helps the pads that are growing on me like air cushions. It's got to stop. If it don't I'll be in the same boat with poor old Barney McCann. You don't remember Barney, I guess. He was before your smoke wagons came into New York. Barney was one of the old guard on the force. He had a pull with the Wigwam, and nothing was too good for Barney—while it lasted. I was a probationary then down in the old Tenderloin and Barney was the guy we all looked up to as a sort of model copper. He was a strong arm 'un all right and had a case on the station house docket every day. Sometimes two or three. Graft was good in those days, too, and I guess Barney wasn't overlooking any bets.

"But Barney was careless of his shape. That was the cause of all the trouble that followed. It was a good object lesson, though, to the other coppers, and gymnasium tackle was rigged out in many a copper's cellar that only held beer before. But I'm slipping ahead of me story.

"Barney was the most biggest eater I ever saw. He was proud of it, too. Why he would go into a hash house and think nothing of getting outside enough food to last an average squad two days. Naturally enough Barney began to grow. He was pretty good size when he went on the force, I heard, but at the time I tell you of he looked like a six-year-old hippo. Overweight? Why, he must have been 150 pounds over the limit for a regulation copper. And the worst of it was he didn't wake up until it was too late.

"His finish was really brought about by a cub reporter on one of the Park Row sheets. This cub had been sent down to round up news and scandal and sassety gossip in the Bowery.

"He was the goods, I guess. He seemed to catch on to a funny streak which his paper gobbled up. His long suit was kiddin' the cops in his paper. The sheet was sore on the department then, and everything he doped up on us appeared in cold black and white.

"There was a Dutchman in the district who didn't like Barney. He had a run-in with him once, and Barney had strong-armed him into the hospital. Dutchy never forgave him. Well, Dutchy and the cub became pals, in a sort of way. I guess Dutchy nursed him for a purpose. One day Dutchy pointed out Barney to the kid, and commented on Barney's heft and girth. The cub was 'on' right off.

"Then Dutchy got busy with his imagination and told the kid about a long-distance sauerkraut-eating contest in which Barney had won hands down with a record of five quarts. For good measure Dutchy threw in the remark that when the contest was over and all the other entries down and out Barney hollered for more, and had to be choked off by the referee. The funny part was that Barney hated sauerkraut like poison. In the story the cub told of Barney's overweight, and gave a guess that he would weigh in at 350 pounds in his socks. He did what I think the newspaper fellers call a pen picture of Barney, in which Barney didn't look a bit good as a model copper.

"Well, the story came out next day. Down in the Police Board that story was read with a microscope. There was some investigating, and Barney was looked over by the weight experts of the department. They ordered him to get down to form and poor old Barney began the Turkish bath stunt until he was so weak he had to use a cane when off duty. It wasn't any use. His fat was there to stay, and although he nearly starved to death he couldn't get that fat off.

"So Barney got his. He's driving a beer wagon now and says he's happy. I don't know whether he tried to get back at Dutchy and the cub reporter or not, but I do know that the kiddin' stories kept coming out and Dutchy was never referred to in them.

"Sometimes I'm afraid that I'm getting like Barney, and me fat will get me in wrong. I don't eat as much as I use to, but tho fat keeps on paddin' out me belt line."

"Well, said Kelly's friend the chauffeur, "you ought to be glad the fat isn't going to your head."

The Need of a Producing House and a Plan for Its Developement.

THE plans which are announced for the Irving Place Theatre next season under its new manager, Dr. Baumfeld, are interesting in themselves, but they have a larger application than will appear to those who regard them merely with reference to their bearing on the German playhouse. Dr. Baumfeld has devised a comprehensive schedule of performances, which, if carried out, will provide opportunities to see plays that hitherto have been withheld from the New York public. Many of the continental plays we can well do without. But there are others which, if not exactly food for the masses, contain elements that should commend them to an intelligent and thoughtful playgoing public.

But as the plays are to be given in German the audiences will of necessity be restricted. It is perhaps too much to expect that American playgoers will often put themselves to the trouble and expense of witnessing plays in a language which they do not understand. The recent experience of Novelli only goes to prove it. Here was an actor who by all advance accounts was great, and who by subsequent critical finding was accepted as a remarkably interesting and versatile player. But it is doubtful if 5 per cent. of his audience was other than Italian. Dr. Baumfeld may succeed in attracting occasional English-speaking persons to his theatre, but the way is still open for some enterprising American manager to take advantage of the hint provided in the German director's prospectus.

I have repeatedly urged the need in New York of a producing theatre, that is to say, a house where there shall be frequent changes of new plays irrespective of the success or failure of any particular piece. For any other than an established manager with a number of theatres at his disposal and many actors under contract, such a venture under existing conditions in New York would probably be ruinous. But the plan is still possible of operation without an absolute negation of the commercial phase.

It is generally agreed by theatrical managers that except in very rare instances the success or failure of a play is not to be determined in advance. It is further admitted that far more plays drift into the hands of the producers than ever see the footlights. Many of these plays are good enough for managerial investment. It is certainly a fact that taking the product by and large (the works of native authors and the plays produced abroad that are never brought to this country) the number of plays written is far in excess of the number of plays put on trial before the New York audience. And it may be taken as axiomatic that the greater the number of productions the greater the percentage of possible gain.

Let us take, then, for the sake of argument a manager like Charles Frohman, who in addition to being lessee and owner of many theatres, has a working arrangement by which he is called upon to provide a certain number of attractions for theatres in this and other cities. He has a cellarful of manuscripts, or so it is generally believed, bought for investment. He has a large working force of actors, many of whom, during part of every season, draw salary but do not work. Let us suppose that Mr. Frohman decided to carry out the plan suggested. He has a storehouse of scenery and properties. He may cast his plays with his idle salary-drawing actors, he need go to little more expense than is involved in rental and lights, and he may produce during a season of from thirty to thirty-five weeks an equal number of plays. If he has a success it may be transferred to another house. And the profits on one successful piece will go a long way toward paying the expenses and possibly a profit for the entire season of experimenting.

The plan to-day stands a better chance of success than ever before. The public has been so surfeited with the "magnificent" scenic productions that the mere question of adornment no longer occupies its former position of importance. But it cannot be doubted by anyone who has followed the trend of affairs in the theatre that what is primarily demanded is good plays. With an interesting story and interesting acting the audience will be lenient as regards the pictures and the furniture.

Such a theatre as is here outlined is absolutely necessary, and it is as necessary to the producers as to the public. If individual enterprise cannot be trusted there should be some concerted effort to develop it.

In a measure the scheme outlined by the new Irving Place manager is identical with that of the contemplated New theatre. And both are in a measure different schemes from the one suggested here. If the new theatre project is carried forward as it has been projected we will have for the first time in years a theatre where the seeker after worthy entertainment rather than novelty may be satisfied. If the promises of the New theatre are not fulfilled we must still have such a theatre in time. The successes of the season that is just closing bear positive testimony to the fact that there is a growing demand for intelligent, if not necessarily intellectual, drama.

In the meantime a large share of the general public has got into the habit of staying away from the theatre altogether. It remains to be seen whether any individual manager will have the foresight and the enterprise to establish a house which shall be regarded as the Daly's or Palmer's of old. The time is ripe for such an enterprise. One of the greatest misfortunes of the present situation is the lack of individuality in theatres. Formerly a house was known by the company it kept. Now the name of the theatre has ceased to be a key to its character. Where one finds Ibsen to-day one will find ragtime to-morrow.

The department store idea is excellent in its way. But there are still small shops and smart shons that specialize and do a thriving trade. The small shop idea would be a blessing for our drama.

THE WEEKS' OFFERINGS.

GRACE GEORGE IN "DIVORCONS,"

a comedy by Victorien Sardou, translated by Margaret Mayo, at Wallack's Theatre to-morrow evening.

CYRIL SCOTT IN "THE PRINCE CHAP,"

a play by Edward Peple, at the Majestic Theatre to-morrow evening.

MINNIE DUPREE IN "THE ROAD TO YESTERDAY,"

a fantastic play by Evelyn Greenleaf Sutherland and Beulah M. Dix, at th Lyric Theatre to-morow evening.

The theatrical season is fast drawing to a close, not that the existing successes have yet decided to close their doors for the Summer months, but that the new productions for the season are practically ended. The only new production of the coming week is really very far from being a new production at all. It is Grace George in yet another English version of Sardou's "Divorcons," to be presented on Monday night at Wallack's. Cyril Scott comes back to the Majestic in a return engagement of "The Prince Chap." Otherwise all is quiet along the Rialto. "The Road to Yesterday" comes into the Lyric Theatre following the engagement of Ermete Novelli, but it left the Herald Square only a week ago, and has traveled no further than Brooklyn—not even outside the borders of the metropolis.

Grace George comes to Wallack's Theatre to-morrow night for a two weeks' engagement in the Margaret Mayo version of Sardou's famous comedy, "Divorcons." Miss George will appear in the rôle of the captivating and most feminine Cyprienne. Though Sardou wrote the comedy more than twenty years ago, the satire has not lost its point.

"Divorcons" is a comedy in three acts and has to do with the all-absorbing question of divorce, as might be inferred from the title. Cyprienne, who is young and beautiful, has married a middle-aged genius, whose whole time is devoted to inventions, and who is of somewhat eccentric disposition. When she comes to feel that she is being more or less neglected her fancy turns to a young officer in the Forestry Department. The husband sagaciously allows her full swing and she comes to realize how little romance there is in an affair of this kind when it is apparently sanctioned. The result is that she falls in love with her husband.

Among the players to appear in the supporting company are Frank Worthing, Robert T. Haines, A. H. Stuart, Charles Stanley, Edward Fielding, Max Freeman, Richard Wilson, Laura Lemmers, Ruth Benson, Justine Cutting, and Evelyn Carter Carrington.

On Tuesday and Thursday of the final week of her engagement Miss George will give special matinées of Ibaen's fantastic play, "The Lady from the Sea." These will be the first American productions of this Ibsen drama.

Cyril Scott opens in "The Prince Chap" at the Majestic Theatre on Monday night, and will continue there for the remainder of the season. The piece, by Edward Peple, has already been seen in four different New York theatres—the Madison Square, where it was originally produced; Weber's, the Yorkville, and the Lincoln Square, where it was preaented less than three months ago. Within the past ten weeks the play has covered the territory from New York to El Paso, Texas.

After the end of the present run of "The Prince Chap" Mr. Scott will permanently retire from the cast to prepare for a new production. He has played the leading rôle more than 600 times without missing a single performance. In fact, this will be the last time that the play will ever be produced by the original company. One reason for this is that the children, Helen Pullman and Edith Speare, who impersonate the heroine at the ages of 5 and 8 respectively, themselves persist in growing up. Besides Cyril Scott, the cast will include Charles B. Wells, Wallace Erskine, Duane Wager, J. C. Jeffries, George Schieffer, Frances Neilson, Florence Conron, Mary Keogh, Edith Speare, and Helen Pullman.

"The Road to Yesterday" comes back to the city for a run at the Lyric Theatre, opening to-morrow night. The cast is unchanged and the leading rôle is still in the hands of Minnie Dupree.

AT OTHER THEATRES.

The offering of the Morris Stock Company at the Lincoln Square Theatre this week will be "The Lost Paradise."

"Tess of the D'Urbervilles," with Henrietta Browne in the title role, will be presented at Keith & Proctor's Fifth Avenue.

Clyde Fitch's play, "Her Great Match," will be offered by the stock company at Keith & Proctor's Harlem Opera House.

Joe Weber in "Dream City" and "The Magic Knight" will return to New York and be seen for one week at the Grand Opera House.

The Bryne Brothers in "Eight Bells" will appear at the Fourteenth Street.

David Higgins in "His Last Dollar" will be the attraction at the American.

"When Women Love" is the name of the melodramn at the Third Avenue.

Harry Clay Blaney in "The Boy Behind the Gun" is to be the offering at the Thalia.

"Sergeant Kitty" is coming to the Yorkville.

"Parted on Her Bridal Tour" is the latest to be found at the West End.

Billy Clifford comes to the Metropolis in "A Jolly Baron."

Dolly Kemper in "Sweet Molly O" is the offering for the week at the New Star.

PLAYS THAT HOLD.

Dramatic offerings that remained unchanged are "The Ambitious Mrs. Alcott," at the Astor; Edward Abeles in "Brewster's Millions," at the Hudson; Rose Stahl in "The Chorus Lady," at the Hackett; Eleanor Robson in "Salomy Jane," with Wednesday matinees of "Merely Mary Ann," at the Liberty; Frances Starr in "The Rose of the Rancho," at the Belasco; Ethel Barrymore in "His Excellency the Governor," at the Empire; William Collier in "Caught in the Rain," at the Garrick; "The Man of the Hour," at the Savoy; "The Mills of the Gods," at the Manhattan; Henry Miller and Margaret Anglin in "The Great Divide," at the Princess, and Carlotta Nillson in "The Three of Us," at the Madison Square.

This is the final week of "Ben Hur" at the Academy of Music. This is the second week of Arnold Daly in "The Boys of Company B" at the Lyceum, and also of Alla Nazimova in "Comtesse Coquette" at the Bijou.

MUSICAL ATTRACTIONS.

Musical attractions that hold their own on Broadway are Montgomery and Stone in "The Red Mill," at the Knickerbocker; "The Land of Nod," at the New York; Frank Moulan in "The Grand Mogul," at the New Amsterdam; Louis Mann in "The White Hen," at the Casino, and Anne Held in "The Parisian Model," at the Broadway.

This is the final week of Richard Carle in "The Spring Chicken" at Daly's, and Frank Daniels in "The Tattooed Man" at the Criterion. This is the second week of Eddie Foy in "The Orchid" at the Herald Square.

VAUDEVILLE.

William J. Kelly, the actor, formerly a great Harlem stock company favorite, will appear in vaudeville at Keith & Proctor's 125th Street Theatre this week, presenting a new one-act version of "David Garrick." Among the regular vaudeville performers on the programme are Mayme Gehrue & Co. in "June," the Avon Comedy Four, Leona Thurber and her Blackbirds, and Frank Fogarty.

Julius Steger in "The Fifth Commandment" will be the leading attraction this week at Keith & Proctor's Union Square. Among others will be Jack Norworth, the Colonial Sextette, Murphy and Francis, Helena Frederick, and the Four Bards.

Houdini, the "Handcuff King" and "champion jail breaker," will be the headline attraction at the Colonial Theatre. Cressy and Dayne will present their new sketch, "The Wyomings Whoop," for the first time at this theatre, and Willard Simms will appear in "Flinder's Furnished Flat." Claude Vasta, Raymond and Coverly, the Willis Family, and the Wesley Troupe of Jugglers will also be seen.

Vesta Victoria will be the special star this week at Keith & Proctor's Fifty-eighth Street Theatre, making her first appearance at this house since her successes in "Poor John" and "Waiting at the Church." Therese Renz, the Empire Comedy Four, Gardner and Stoddard, and A. O. Duncan are also on the bill.

Ethel Levey will head the programme this week at Keith & Proctor's Twenty-third Street, singing a new repertoire of songs. The bill will also include "Three of a Kind," Berner's Manikins, Collins and Hart, Greene and Werner, and "The Jungle Babes."

The feature acts for the week at Keith & Proctor's Jersey City Theatre include offerings by Dr. Clark and his daughter in "The Globe of Death," Bert Leslie and company, Windsor McCoy, the Wilson Brothers, and the Three Dumonts.

At Hammerstein's Victoria Theatre of Varieties Alice Lloyd, the English singing comedienne who has made a notable hit in New York, will appear for the first time at this house. "The Futurity Winner," a racing playlet, will also be offered. Among other attractions will be Jack Lorimer, the McNaughton Brothers, "Hooked by Crook," and La Dell and Crouch.

At the Alhambra the leading feature will be Master Gabriel and his company in "Buster and His Funny Dog," and Carlotta will make a dip through the air and loop the loop all on a bicycle. Among others are Truly Shattuck in new songs, Rice and Prevost, Carter De Haven and Isabelle D'Armand, and Julian Rose.

The "Parisian Widows" hold the boards this week at Hurtig & Seamon's Music Hall.

"Wine, Women and Song," with Bonita as the leading attraction, continues its popular engagement at the New Circle.

The "Cracker Jacks" are at the Murray Hill.

The "Parisian Belles" are the drawing card at the Gotham.

Pat White and his Gaiety Girls come to the Dewsy.

A new series of wax figures is to be seen at the Eden Musee, where "The World in Wax" is continually being brought up to date. Vaudeville and the cinematograph are to be seen in the theatre.

The Zentos will be one of the special features at Huber's Fourteenth Street Museum, and Shimizo with his six Japanese acrobats will remain another week. A double company is to be seen in the theatre.

SUNDAY CONCERTS.

Sunday concerts with good programmes are offered to-day at the various Keith & Proctor houses, Hammerstein's Victoria, the Colonial, and the Alhambra. All the burlesque theatres offer Sunday bills, as do also the West End, the Metropolis, the Thalia, the Yorkville, the Grand Opera House, the New Star, and the Third Avenue. Mr. Rice has arranged a fourth concert for the Lincoln Square.

Ted Marks concerts this afternoon and evening at the American Theatre will include numbers by the Marco Twins, Gus Bruno, Pierce and Roslyn, and the Waldron Brothers. Only two more concerts will be offered this season at the Americnn.

AMATEUR MINSTREL SHOW.

The annual amateur minstrel show of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association will be offered on Thursday and Friday nights of this week in the West Fifty-seventh Street building of the association. Thirty-five members of the association will participate. Besides the "black face" portion of the programme there will be an olio containing five "all star" numbers. Some "startling specialties" have been prepared by the home talent.

AT THE CIRCUS.

The engagement of the Barnum & Bailey Circus at the Madison Squnre Garden will come to an end with the performance on Saturday night, April 20. Meanwhile the new and surprising features of the performance have won their way to the hearts of the people and such of the features as might be termed old have not lost their fascination. The circus this year is specially strong in riding nets.

Following the custom established by Mr. Bailey, Tuesday afternoon, April 16, has been set aside as Orphans' Day, and almost the entire house at that time will be turned over to the children from the various orphanages and charitable institutions of Greater New York. Already more than 5,600 acceptances have been filed, and the Garden for that one afternoon at least will be a fairyland for the little ones.

Plans for the German Theatre

Dr. Baumfeld, the New Director of the Irving Place, Outlines an Elaborate Programme.

DR. MAURICE BAUMFELD, the new manager of the Irving Place Theatre, yesterday announced his plans in detail for the reorganized German Theatre, which will be conducted entirely upon the repertoire plan. The old system of running a play through for a term of one or more weeks will be abolished, and, barring occasional repetitions, there will be a change of plays practically from day to day. Even new plays, though they may have given a hit at the initial performances, will not have a so-called run, but will be repeated only a limited number of times in any week.

An entirely new stock company will be formed. "I shall select its members personally," says Dr. Baumfeld, "and with the most elaborate care unite them into an effective ensemble."

Dr. Maurice Baumfeld.

They will be employed in the production of three types of plays, including classical dramas such as Goethe's "Goetz von Berlichingen," Schiller's "Wallenstein," Lessing's "Emilia Galotti," Grillparzer's "Woh' dem der lugt," Shakespeare's "Macbeth," and "Was Ihr Wollt," also Calderon's most famous drama "Der Richter von Zalamea." Next, attention will be given to the modern dramas and comedies of all nations. In this city the recent dramatic offerings of France, Italy, Spain, and Northern Europe are practically unknown, and even those of German and Austro-German authors have been more or less neglected. Particular care will be bestowed upon the preparation and production of such modern plays. Dr. Baumfeld adds that he realizes that the element of amusement is perhaps the strongest pillar of the success and prosperity of any theatrical undertaking, and that therefore plays tending in the direction of pure diversion will be given elaborate attention.

Next to a genuinely artistic representation, the utmost attention will be given to the purely mechanical side of the stage, that is, to tasteful and appropriate stage settings and skillful stage management in general, and to the same extent as in the best English theatres. "It would be an idle task to try to elevate a German theatre in New York to the rank of a Court or national theatre, in the European sense," adds the manager. "Nevertheless, I may say that the traditions of the foremost German stages, in which I have been brought up, to which I am indebted for my knowledge of histrionic affairs, and which I propose to be guided by in my future course, afford a safe guarantee that even during the coming provisional season the new enterprise will have a place among the best German theatres of the present day."

The season of 1907-8 will begin on Oct. 1, and will comprise thirty weeks. The regular subscription sale will be opened within a few weeks. Saturday and Sunday evenings will be devoted to non-subscription or extra performances. Special subscriptions will be provided for Thursday nights, upon which special literary productions of the modern international type will take place, and Saturday afternoons, will be exclusively devoted to the exposition of the classical drama.

The terms of subscription will be as follows:

1. For the thirty Thursday literary evenings: Boxes, $750; seats in the first ten rows of the orchestra and the first two rows of the balcony (centre,) $75; balance of orchestra and balcony (centre,) $60.

2. For the twenty-five Saturday afternoon classical performances: Similarly, $500, $50, $40.

3. For the twenty-five regular performances on Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, and Friday evenings: Similarly, $500, $50, $40.

BITS OF RIALTO GOSSIP.

Laura Nelson Hall is to succeed Carlotta Nillson in the leading role of "The Three of Us" when the play completes its engagement at the Madison Square Theatre a week from next Saturday. Miss Hall has for the past few months impersonated the character of the Wednesday matinee performances. The play will be produced for a Summer engagement in Chicago and may be seen here again in the Autumn.

For the first time in some months an original production is to be offered on the stage of the Keith & Proctor Harlem Opera House by the stock company now playing there. "The Undertow," a modern American play dealing with the question of franchise manipulation by private corporations is to be the bill for the week of April 22. Additions will be made to the regular stock company cast for the purpose of making the most of this production. This piece was originally to have been produced by Cohan and Harris and has only recently been released.

The splendor of the Court of Babylon is promised this Summer at Coney Island. The picture chosen to portray the glories of ancient civilization is the feast of Belshazzar, elaborately dramatized. This spectacle is to be seen within the gates of the "Orient," which William A. Ellis is adding as an exhibition and entertainment to the "End of the World" spectacle in Dreamland. In another building will be seen an Oriental circus. One of the big features included in the "Royal Court" will be an exhibition of Morocco bandits.

Mrs. Francis L. Pruyn is to make her debut as a professional actress at Keith & Proctor's Fifth Avenue Theatre in a new one-act play by Edith Gardner Shearn. The play is entitled "The House of a Traitor," and is based upon a short story by Prosper Merimee. The scene is laid in the mountains of Corsica, and Mrs. Pruyn will appear as a fourteen-year-old boy who becomes involved in a vendetta by betraying a fugitive from justice.

A benefit performance in German is to be tendered Franz Kierschner at the Academy of Music on the evening of Sunday, April 28. Mr. Kierschner has been connected with the Irving Place Theatre for nine years as an actor and stage director. Recently he retired.

Hamilton Revelle, who becomes a Spaniard for the time being while playing Don Luis, the Spanish gallant, in "The Rose of the Rancho," was agreeably surprised a few nights ago by two gifts from the foreign members of the company whose nationality lends color to the ensemble pictures in the play. From the Italians he received a handsome gold pencil, while the Spaniards presented him with a beautiful cigarette case in silver. For once Don Luis forgot to say "Mmnana." He thanked his admirers promptly and with emphasis.

The Actors' Fund Fair at the Metropolitan Opera House is to be a paradise for the man or woman addicted to the habit of collecting theatrical autographs and other souvenirs. They are all to be purchased at the Ann Hathaway Cottage, the contribution of the Twelfth Night Club. Only the other day a gentleman wrote to Eleanor Robson that he had gathered gloves—boxing and otherwise—from all corners of the globe and that he would be pleased to add to his collection those that she wore in "Merely Mary Ann." Miss Robson responded that the gloves were his, provided he cared to pay the price which would be attached to them at the Ann Hathaway booth.

More than a thousand men are now employed in the work of reconstructing Luna Park for the Summer months. This force will be nearly doubled in the course of the next two weeks and will include a night force to complete the enterprise.

The long engagement of "Ben Hur" at the Academy of Music will end on Saturday night. The spectacle will not be seen again in New York for five years, as the organization has been booked in other parts of the country for four seasons. Next year it will open at the Jamestown Exposition, and will play through the principal cities of the South, Southwest, and Middle West. After that it is intended to produce the drama, on a scale similar to the production at the Academy, on the Drury Lane stage in London.

TO SWITZERLAND IN PICTURES

At the Lyceum Theatre to-night at 8:30 and to-morrow afternoon at 3 o'clock, Burton Holmes will give the fourth in his double series of illustrated Travelogues, the subject being "Switzerland, from the Engadine to the Matterhorn." This is a composite of his two former Swiss lectures, and it is consequently doubly rich in beautifully colored lantern slides, with a profusion of motion pictures. Many of the latter are taken from the front end of some of the railroad trains climbing through the grand passes of the Alps to their lofty terminals. There are many motion pictures of street scenes in the principal cities, and panoramic views showing the picturesque shore lines of many of the more familiar Swiss lakes. Besides these street festivals, the Fete des Vignerons at Vevey and Swiss dances will be shown.

HIPPODROME.

"Pioneer Days" and "Neptune's Daughter" continue to be joint attractions at the Hippodrome, where Indians and mermaids are still rivals for the approbation of the audience. The circus features in the arena are changed almost weekly and may always be counted upon to display some novelty.

GERMAN ACTORS' THEATRE BENEFITS.

Two more testimonial performances will be given this week at the Irving Place Theatre by Manager Conried's company of German actors. The first will be for the Treasurer of the Theatre, Mr. Georg Bischel, and the ticket agent, Mr. George Hernstad, on Tuesday evening, when Moser's comedy, "Mit Vergnuegen," (With Pleasure,) will be given. This play will be repeated on Wednesday and Thursday evenings.

Mr. Willi Thaller will be the recipient of the other testimonial on Friday evening. He will appear in one of his best parts, that of Kommerzialrath Miller in Victor Leon's comedy drama, "Gebildete Menschen," (Educated People,) Saturday afternoon and evening, and will bring repititions of this play. Schaffmeyer's comedy, "Ebriiche Menschen," will be performed for the last time on Monday evening.

BROOKLYN AMUSEMENTS.

Herbert Kelcey and Effie Shannon in Bernard Shaw's comedy "Widowers' Houses," which was presented at a series of matinees at the Herald Square recently are announced for the Shubert Park. A feature of the production is Ferdinand Gottschalk's appearance in the role of the rent collector.

"The Lion and the Mouse" comes to the New Montauk for a week. The company, which is the same that was seen at the long run at the Lyceum Theatre, Manhattan, is headed by Edmund Breese and Grace Ellison.

George M. Cohan, in his latest success, "George Washington, Jr.," comes to the Broadway for a week.

"Way Down East" will remain at the Majestic for another week. Though this play is now in its tenth year on the road, it has lost none of its old-time popularity. Phoebe Davis heeds the cast.

The Orpheum will have among leading vaudeville performers this week Eva Tanguay, the original Sambo Girl; Wilfred Clarke, assisted by Miss Theo Carew and company, in "What Will Happen Next?" Hawthorne and Burt, Vasco, the mad musicinn; Mayme Remington, and Alexander and Bertie.

Katie Barry will be the headliner at Hyde & Behman's. Others on the bill are "Daredevil" Ralph Johnson, Tom Nawn and company, the Sisters Rappo, Ben Welch, Rogers and Deeley, Tenbrooke, Lambert and Tenbrooke, and Delphine and Del Mora.

Benjamin Chapin and Company in his sketch "The White House," with Mr. Chapin as Abraham Lincoln, comes to Keeney's. The bill also includes George Fredo and Henry Dale, Mathews and Ashley, Marinetti and Sylvester, Mildred Flora, Lark's Ponies, Asher and Patterson, and Agnes Lynn and company.

"The Black Politician," played by a troupe of colored actors, will be the attraction at Blaney's. The cast is headed by S. H. Dudley.

At the Folly "The Volunteer Organist" will be the attraction. Mellor Newman, a boy who was recently the leading soloist of a large St. Louis church, will have th principal role.

John L. Sullivan, who is a member of the "Greater New York Stars," will be the feature of the week at the Gayety. He will entertain with stories of his days in the fighting ring, and will put on the gloves for a few rounds with a sparring partner.

"In New York Town" will have its first Brooklyn production this week at the Grand Opera House.

"$10,000 Reward" is announced for the Columbia.

MEETING A MODEST DEMAND.

Frank Wilstach, the general press representative of the Shubert interests, recently received a letter from a small out-of-town weekly which circulates in a locality where the inhabitants are numbered by the hundred. This letter explained that the assistant editor and fifteen employes of the paper, together with their friends, were coming for a visit to the city and wished to attend some one of the Shubert theatres in a body.

When the press representative had somewhat recovered from the shock he wrote and suggested that it would be too much of a hardship for such a large number of the inhabitants of the said town to journey to New York, adding that it might be more to the purpose to give a special performance of one of the Shubert New York attractions in their village. He suggested that as Margaret Anglin and Henry Miller had already played an engagement of one night in Washington, it might be possible to persuade them to make a one-night stand of the aforementioned village with their play of "The Great Divide."

This true story of the demands some people will make for theatre passes naturally leads to a word about the Friars, the club of press representatives. This club, though mainly social at present, is by no means entirely devoted to having weekly and monthly "good times." Now and then the members hold a private session and go over the lists of people who are receiving free passes to their theatres. When fraude are detected the editors of the papers which these men claim to represent are advised. With the sanction of the editors the society then issues a bulletin naming the offenders and urging that they be put on the black list.

Among those billed to appear at the Novelty are Mr. and Mrs. Jimmie Barry. They will be seen in the "The Village Cut Up."

"The Kid Lifters" come to the Star.

Assay Commission Makes Report and Suggests a Coin Collection, and Also Decorations for Philadelphia Mint.

MINTS have to do with a kind of ware that has always suffered from attentions paid to it by persons who love the coin of the realm not wisely but too well. Sometimes, but rarely, have Kings and mint-masters put more value of metal into coins than was safe; but the mistake generally has been the other way; moreover, private persons in their rude zeal have copied such knaveries by clipping and sweating these counters of commerce.

In order to keep, therefore, a rigid check on the quantity of metals and alloys used in pieces of coin it has been the custom for the Director of the Mint to set aside a number of coins from each issue, cause them to be sealed up, and carefully preserved for tests as to their ingredients and weight.

At the United States Mint this testing is the business of an Assay Commission established by law. The commission of sixteen persons designated by the President is chosen so as to represent all parts of the country. The report on the coinage of 1906, from test-coins set aside in the regular way, was intrusted to Dr. George F. Kunz of New York and Prof. E. C. Franklin of San Francisco, Capt. C. E. Garner of Jacksonville, Fla., and Prof. Mendenhall of the University of Wisconsin, the Hon. Olin Merrill of Vermont, and Mr. Edward Whitaker of St. Louis. Representative Rayburn of the House, Mr. Henry Cleveland Perkins of Washington, D. C., and Dr. James Lewis Howe of Washington and Lee University, together with Prof. Owen Lewis Shinn of Philadelphia did not have far to go to meet the commission. Utah sent Mr. Frank Knox and South Dakota the Hon. A. O. Ringsrud. New Hampshire was represented by Mr. John W. Kelley, Iowa by the Hon. Sidney A. Foster, Connecticut by Mr. J. C. Mitchelson, and Western New York by Prof. E. Merritt of Cornell. This differs from other annual reports by having supplemental resolutions, which recommend steps that are not without interest to American artists.

After suggesting that two sets of all coins minted in the United States be deposited with the collection of the United States Mint for a future record of the work of the various mints at Philadelphia, Denver, San Francisco, and New Orleans, the resolution continues: "That Congress place the coin collection of the United States on a par with those of England, France, Germany, and other great nations by purchasing the famous coins of all periods, appropriating, say, $20,000—and to annually appropriate $5,000—for the purchase of coins for the collection; these coins to serve as models for the mint authorities, for artist students, and the education of the general public. The United States ranking only about No. 15 in the great collections. This annual sum could be raised by the sale of an annual souvenir medal."

Our Government has struck medals for special occasions, but it has no arrangements like the Monnaie in Paris, which supplies a number of beautiful medallions and medals by distinguished sculptors to collectors and those who desire to make presents. The Assay Commission thinks that a souvenir medal would have a large sale, and that by pursuing this kind of work the medals would help the people to educate themselves in medallic art, and at the same time provide a fund to more than cover all the expenses incurred.

Another suggestion of the resolution refers to the Philadelphia Mint as the largest, oldest, and most visited, looking to an appropriate decoration of the interior:

"Inasmuch as the United States Mint in Philadelphia is annually visited by 100,000 visitors, and as the visit is one of great interest and study, this commission would respectfully suggest that in the beautiful foyer and staircase of the mint the pannels be filled with emblematic frescoes by our great artists, giving views of gold and silver mining, metallurgical work, ancient, mediaeval, and modern minting processes artistically idealized."

The use of the word "fresco" in this passage is not to be taken literally as recommending the employment of water-colors on moist plaster, but stands for decorations in color generally. Very likely it would be found that mossic will fit the panels alluded to better than other vehicles because of its adaptability to architectural surroundings of the kind one sees in the Philadelphia Mint.

The Mint is one of the most popular of buildings in Philadelphia and few tourists who make a stay in the City of Brotherly Loot fail to take a look at its collections. That these collections are far behind the times is scarcely surprising when we consider how inartistic our coinage is and how little the authorities of the Mint appear awnre of the fact. That the Assay Commission, composed of representative men from all parts of the country, should have strayed from the regular beaten path of a report of this nature into a recommendation to inject a little art into the Mint itself, is not a little comforting. For it may wake the sleepers in comfortable Philadelphia and catch the eye of the President himself, who has large powers over the coinage. Perhaps it may help to hasten the reform of the designs on our coins, which are at present actively engaged in spreading an idea of bad art throughout the country.

A building of age and importance like the Mint at Philadelphia should have had some embellishments long ago. Our mural painters are many and expert; they would make the gloomy halls of the mint resplendent and place on its walls pictures that would teach many things about the origin and history of coins to all who visit the mint, which things are only known to those who make a special study of the subject. Passing from the general topics spread on the walls of entrance hall and stairway the visitor would have before him in properly arranged cases not only the coins of his own country but those of others. With an annual fund to purchase coins and medals the Philadelphia mint would possess in the course of time a very instructive museum of coinage and medallic art.

Current Art Matters

Among the groups into which the artists of Dresden, Saxony, have divided themselves are "Portfolio," (Mappe,) comprising six painters; "Guild," (Zunft,) containing twenty-five members; "Bridge," (Brücke,) with seven comrades—let us hope not to play bridge—and "Elbinns," who count up one dozen. Many but by no means all of the members of these little coteries have separated themselves from the Dresden Art Association, which has a clubhouse in the old city. Probably the artists are protesting against the management by laymen of important affairs in the association.

Another Frenchman of the provinces has left a collection of paintings and other art works to his native town, the ancient cathedral and coronation town of Rheims. It is particularly strong in the Romanticists of 1830-1875. M. Henri Vasnier has provided by will some 100,000f. for the cost of keeping up the gallery, but he has made a proviso that the town shall keep the collections in a special room containing a black marble tablet setting forth his name as donor in letters of gold.

In Germany the artists have been stimulated by prizes to send in designs for the Hamburg-American Line of steamships. The competition is to provide a placard and an advertisement for the First Bismarck of the line that runs from Hamburg to Havana and Vera Cruz. The prizes are 3,000, 2,000, and 1,000 marks, or about $750, $500, and $250.

The tenth annual exhibition of the Society of Painters of Mountains is open in Paris. Among the exhibiting artists who are better or less well known are Iwill and Didier-Pouget, the painter of mountains and heather in La Doddogne. Switzerland is naturally represented in many of the canvases, but Gagliardini shows views of the Alpes Maritimes, and Schrader has sketches of the Peak of Teneriffe, the bold heights round about the harbor of Rio de Janeiro, and a view from the summit of Corcovado.

A portrait of Sir Walter Scott by Henry Raeburn has been discovered in the house of Mrs. Bishop at Richmond, England. It is in bad condition, the paint having chipped off in several spots and a crease appearing right across the nose. Owing to its dilapidated look Mrs. Bishop thought it was of little value, but experts have told her that it is an original Raeburn, and a replica of those belonging to the Raeburn family, the Earl of Home, and the late Baroness Burdett-Coutts. The picture will be reproduced in Putnam's Magazine. It is now considered worth $60,000.

The municipal museum in Venice, the Museo Correr, is housed in one of those palaces on the Grand Canal which were used as headquarters by the merchants of different foreign countries. It is just at present making a loan exhibit of art objects relating to Carlo Goldoni of Venice, the playwright and composer of musical comedies and burlesques, who ended his career in Paris, where he found more appreciation and less envy and jealousy than in Venice. It was in Paris and in French that he wrote "The Kindly Curmudgeon," recently played here by an Italian company, and in Paris that he composed in French his interesting memoirs. He died at the beginning of the French Revolution. Some of the apartments in the Museo Correr are in the Rococo style, belonging to Goldoni's period, and these have been used for the loan exhibition. A three-quarter portrait of Goldoni by Longhi and other likenesses are shown. Small figures clothed in costumes of the eighteenth century are arranged in groups. Theatres such as Goldoni had to fill when he was both playwright and manager are represented by clever models. Two big carnival scenes by G. B. Tiepolo are lent by Count Papadopoli.

The Whipple School of Art, organized three years ago, has an attendance this season of about fifty pupils, who are doing very satisfactory work. The illustration class is particularly interested in its work, as it is paying special attention to grouping and composition.

The evening class includes several professional and business men who take up art as a diversion, or hope in time to make it a profession. A well-known actor and stage manager, who lately appeared with one of Lew Fields's productions, is also a frequent student at the school.

Unlike other art schools, the Whipple continues its classes all the year around. Assistant instructors are Mr. Asao Habu, a Japanese, and Miss A. C. Coles, who have taken several medals and money prizes for water colors and oil paintings at the State art exhibitions of South Carolina. The first masquerade dance ever given by the students was held on the 7th of February. Many interesting costumes were worn—Spanish, Japanese, and Mexican.

Some Illustrations in To-day's Supplement

CARDINAL MERRY DEL VAL is an uncommonly grateful subject for a painter, as Mr. Maurice Fromkes discovered when he came to paint him. His combination of Spanish and Irish blood is thought, perhaps not without reason, to give him an individuality, a distinction. He has the look of a man who can breathe easily the air of the Vatican, always charged with politics, and lend grace to debates which seem to most people peculiarly sterile and uninteresting. There is very little to be seen in him of the stately magnificence which at one time was a national characteristic among Spaniards of high rank and made them very distinct in manners and conversation from Frenchman and Italians. His manner is simple and unassuming.

The portrait here reproduced was painted at the Pope's Summer residence, Castel Gandalfo, whither the Pope never went again after the occupation of Rome by the armies of Victor Emmanuel. Neither has Pope Pius consented to break the self-imposed rule never to quit the Vatican, although the Summer seat is only some seventeen miles away from Rome, not far from Albano. It was there that Mr. Fromkes passed many agreeable hours painting the likeness of a man who is said to have had great weight in the councils of Leo XIII. The cross he wears consists of large rubies, and was given him by the late Holy Father.

Founders' Day at the Carnegie Institute in Pittsburg is always the pretext for some festivity, but last Wednesday there was more of interest going on than ever before. The institute now stands in its enlarged grandeur, and a fresh donation of millions was announced. Moreover, an international art exhibition was opened. From this collection the customary three paintings were selected by a jury of artists and duly given prizes consisting of a medal and a round sum of money in each case. They are reproduced in to-day's Pictorial Supplement.

The first prize has fallen to a Frenchman for his group called "The Bath," a nude woman, back turned, who is about to drape herself after the bath. Beside her stands the sedan chair in which she has been brought to the lakeside. It is by Gaston La Touche. Original in composition and full of sunlight and happy painting of flesh in the open air, it has met the approval of the jury composed of American and foreign painters.

The second goes to Mr. Thomas Eakins of Philadelphia for his standing portrait of Prof. Leslie Miller, a picture which was shown in New York at one of the regular annual exhibitions some time ago. The professor is in walking dress, and with one hand in his pocket addresses a class as he holds a sheet of manuscript in his right hand. The picture is a triumph of realism.

Third prize went to Miss Olga de Bosnauska of Paris for the portrait of a lady seated.

In the Pictorial Supplement also are pictures of Indian life among the pueblo tribes of New Mexico, by Eanger Irving Couse. This associate of the National Academy devotes himself to the Indians, especially those in and about Taos Pueblo. He has a studio dwelling in the little town of Taos, which lies near the Pueblo; there he spends his Summers, returning each Autumn with fresh spoils.

One picture represents two Indians propitiating the god of water by planting prayer plumes, small sticks to which feathers are firmly attached, round a pool wherein dwells the tricksy god. In another an Indian with his throwing stick in hand watches a couple of cranes feeding in a pond. A third, called "An Idyll of the Woods," shows an Indian playing on the native pipe, and a fourth, called "The Magic Forest," is a "love song" or serenade to the young girl who has come to the pool to get water in one of those jars ornamented with symbolical designs which the Pueblo Indians make. "The Mirror Signal" catches a couple of Indians sending wireless messages by sunlight to a distant comrade. "A Mountain Hunter" peers down an opening in the grove of aspens at a bird in flight. Over his back hangs a wild goose, but he hopes to make a larger bag before setting his face toward the pueblo.

EXHIBITION FOR CARICATURISTS

Annual exhibition for the caricaturists! They are about to launch in Paris a new Salon which will exhibit each year a gathering of French and foreign works of art humoristic, or at any rate purporting to suggest wit, humor, and fun. The initial show is promised soon at the Palais de Glace, in the Champs Elysées. The veteran Russian humorist who has been amusing Paris for thirty years under the name of Caran d'Ache will exhibit many cartoons and small caricatures referring to questions of church, army, navy, and municipal officers, European politics, and parochial matters only the boulevardier understands. Cappiello, Faivre, Sem, Charles Léandre, Steinlen, and Albert Guillaume will contribute. A well-chosen international exhibition, with the best caricatures from New York, Berlin, London, and Paris, ought to prove a popular after-dinner attraction for people who love to laugh. Some of the Paris funny pencils are also artists in the finer sense—Steinlen, for instance.

Last Week at the Manhattan Opera House.

OSCAR HAMMERSTEIN announces the following programme for the twentieth and last week of the season of opera at the Manhattan Opera House. In addition to the final appearances of all the artists Mme. Calvé will be heard for the three last times and Maestro Campanini will make his official farewell on Friday evening. There will be opera performances every evening besides the usual Saturday matinée.

On Monday evening "Rigoletto" will be sung, with Mmes. Pinkert, Giaconia, Severina, Zaccaria, and Messrs. Bonci, Sammarco, Mugnoz, Fossetta, Reschiglian, and Venturini. Mr. Campanini will conduct.

Tuesday evening "Carmen" will be sung, marking the seventh appearance of Mme. Calvé. The supporting singers are Mmes. Zeppilli, Trentini, (who makes her reappearance after her recent illness,) Giaconia, Messrs. Dalmorès, Sévellhac, Gilibert, Daddi, Mugnoz,, Reschiglian, Mr. Campanini conducting.

Wednesday evening "Martha" will be given in Italian with Mmes. Donalda and De Cisneros and Messrs. Bonci, Arimondi, Gianoli-Galletti, Mugnoz. Mr. Max Bendix will conduct.

Thursday evening Mme. Calvé sings for the eighth time. There will be a double bill. "Pagliacci" will be sung in Italian, with Mme. Zeppilli as "Nedda" (for the first time) and Messrs. Bassi, Sammarco, Reschiglian and Venturini.

"La Navarraise" will be repeated with Mme. Calvé and Messrs. Dalmorès, Altchevsky, Gilibert, Gianoli-Galletti, Arimondi. Mr. Campanini will conduct both operas.

Friday evening is Mr. Campanini's farewell night, officially, although the maestro will conduct again on Saturday. "Rigoletto" will be sung with Mmes. Pinkert, Giaconia, Severina, Zaccaria, and Messrs. Bonci, Sammarco, Gilibert, Mugnoz, Fossetta, Reschiglian, and Venturini. Mr. Bonci and Mme. Pinkert will be heard for the last time on this occasion, and the other singers, and Mlle. Zaccaria and Messrs. Ancona, Arimondi, Venturini, and Mugnoz.

After the second act of "Puritani" the prologue from "Mefistofele" (Boito) will be given by Arimondi, assisted by the chorus and stage band.

Saturday matinee occurs the ninth and last appearance of Mme. Calvé. "Carmen" will be sung in French and the supporting cast includes Mlle. Zeppilli, Trentini, and Giaconia, and Messrs. Dalmorès, Ancona, Gilibert, Daddi, Mugnoz, Reschiglian. Mr. Campanini conducts.

Saturday evening at popular prices the last opera of the season will be sung. "Aïda" is to be given in Italian, with Mmes. Russ and De Cisneros, Messrs. Bassi, Sammarco, Arimondi, Mugnoz, and Tecchi. Mr. Campanini will conduct.

CONCERTS OF THE WEEK.

The third and last of a series of three concerts by the Volpe Symphony Orchestra will be given this afternoon in Carnegie Hall. Henrietta Michelson, pianist, will be the soloist. The programme includes Beethoven's Second Symphony, MacDowell's tone poems, "Hamlet" and "Ophelia"; Beethoven's concerto in G major for piano, and Goldmark's overture "In the Springtime." It is announced that this orchestra will give three concerts next season, on Nov. 28, Jan. 23, and March 26.

Francis Macmillen, violinist, assisted by Rosina Van Dyk, soprano, will give a recital in Mendelssohn Hall next Tuesday evening. The programme follows: Devil's Trill, Tartini, Francis Macmillen; concerto in D major, Paganini, Francis Macmillen; Bell Song from "Lakme," Delibes, Mme. Rosina Van Dyk; (a) Legende, Christian Sinding; (b) Hungarian Dance in A major, Brahms-Joachim; (c) Aziola, (The Owl,) Ernest Blake; (d) The Bee, Fr. Schubert; (e) Saltellata Caprice, A. Randegger, Jr., Francis Macmillen; (a) Liebes Feier, Weingartner; (b) Fruhlingsnacht, Schumann; (c) Ein Traum, Grieg; (d) Serenade, Strauss, Mme. Rosina Van Dyk; Concerto in F sharp minor, Ernst, Francis Macmillen. Mr. Richard Hageman will be at the piano.

Josef Lhevinne will give a piano recital in Mendelssohn Hall on Wednesday evening for the benefit of the Edward MacDowell fund. The programme includes Brahms's F minor sonata, Chopin's "Allegro de Concert," MacDowell's "Winter," "Eagle," and "Moto Perpetuo," and two preludes, a nocturne in F and a C major etude, by Rubinstein.

The last Sunday night concert of the season at the Manhattan Opera House will be given to-night. Verdi's "Requiem" will be sung, with Mmes. Russ and de Cisneros and Messrs. Altchevsky and Arimondi as soloists. Mr. Campanini will conduct Beethoven's Fifth Symphony and Liszt's fourth "Rhapsody Hongroise," and the other soloists will be Mme. Gilibert and Messrs. Gilibert and Ancona.

The Olive Mead Quartet will give a concert in Mendelssohn Hall next Thursday evening. The programme will include Novacek's quartet, Opus 10; Mozart's duet for violin and viola, and Mendelssohn's quartet in D major.

Victor Herbert and his orchestra will give another concert at Daly's Theatre to-night. The novelty of the evening will be variations on an old German folksong by Ochs. The soloist is Miss Ada Chambers, who will sing Delibes's "Arioso" and Herbert's setting of Swinburne's "If Love Were What the Rose Is."

A concert will be given in Mendelssohn Hall on next Thursday afternoon by the pupils of the Music School Settlement, assisted by Charles Gilibert. An orchestra composed of pupils of the school will play under the direction of David Mannes. Mr. Gilibert will sing two groups of songs.

IN THE ORGAN LOFTS.

A new cantata, "Victory Divine," was presented at the Church of the Heavenly Rest last Thursday evening by the choir, organ, and a full orchestra. The cantata was under the direction of the composer, J. Christopher Marks, who is organist and choirmastar of the church.

Derrick Van Norden, tenor, has been engaged as soloist for Temple Emanu-El, commencing May 1. He will be the soloist with the Rubinstein Club at its concert at the Waldorf-Astoria on April 18, when he will sing an air from Leohcavallo's "Zaza," Meyar's "Before the Dawn," Bohm's "Das Echo," Engle's "My Heart," and Spross's "I Love and the World Is Mine." Mr. Van Norden leaves New York on April 21 to sing two performances of "Carmen" in Indianapolis, a series of recitals in Indiana, and ends his tour on May 9 in Morgantown, West Va., where he will sing in Mendelssohn's "Elijah."

There will be a special service this afternoon of the Military Order of the Loyal Legion of the United States, Commandery of New York, at the Church of the Incarnation, Madison Avenue and Thirty-fifth Street.

CHANGES IN CHURCH CHOIRS.

The following changes in church choirs will take place on May 1:

Mrs. Grace C. Kahler of Tacoma will be soprano soloist of the West Presbyterian Church, on Forty-second Street. This is the church where Clementine de Vare once received the largest salary ever paid a choir singer in this city.

Grace W. Sims, soprano, goes from the First Presbyterian Church, on lower Fifth Avenue, to Janes Methodist Church, Brooklyn.

Florence La Salls Fiske, contralto, goes from St. Andrew's Methodist Church to Holy Trinity Church.

William Philip, tenor, goes from St. Matthew's Church to the Madison Square Presbyterian Church.

E. J. Beach, tenor, goes from the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church to the position of precentor in the First Presbyterian Church, Jersey City.

J. S. MacDonald, for eight years tenor soloist at St. James's Methodist Church, 126th Street and Madison Avenue, goes to the West End Presbyterian Church, 105th Street and Amsterdam Avenue.

Georgs S. Madden, baritone, goes from the Baptist Church, Montclair, N. J., to Holy Trinity Church, Lenox Avenue and 122d Street.

Tom Daniel, basso, goes from Trinity Chapel, West Twenty-ninth Street, to St. Bartholomew's Church.

Mrs. Lorene Rogers, soprano, of Kansas City, goes to the Fourth Presbyterian Church, Ninety-first Street and West End Avenue.

Emma Brett, contralto, goes from Calvary Methodist Church, Harlem, to St. Paul's Methodist Church, Eighty-sixth Street and West End Avenue.

Franklin Riker, tenor, goes from St. John's Chapel, Varick Street, to St. Paul's Methodist Church.

A. S. Ely, baritone, goes from the Washington Square Methodist Church to St. Paul's Methodist Church.

G. A. Hubbard, tenor, comes from the Second Presbyterian Church, New Rochelle, to the Washington Square Methodist Church.

Mendelssohn's "Elijah" will be given at Calvary Methodist Episcopal Church, where A. Y. Cornell is organist and choir director, on April 18. The soloists will be Louise Voigt, Emma Brett, Cecil James, C. N. Granville, and Grant Austin, the boy soprano. On Monday, April 22, Mr. Cornell will give a song recital in Carnegie Chamber Music Hall.

Edward Bromberg has been engaged to sing solo bass at Old Trinity Church until May 1.

Sally Frothingham Akens, soprano of the Fourth Avenue Presbyterian Church, will spend two months in Paris this Summer studying with Frank King Clark.

CROTCHETS.

The Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences announces a piano recital by Josef Lhevinne on Thursday, April 18. On April 24, 25, 26, and 27 Mr. Savage's English Company will present "Madam Butterfly" at the New Montauk Theatre, under the auspices of the Institute. Last Thursday evening the Brooklyn Saengerbund of eighty male voices, Hugo Steinbruch, conductor, gave a concert in Association Hall. The soloists were Maria Nichols, violinist, and Louise B. Voigt, soprano.

The Cantata Club, Albert Gerard-Thiers, musical director, will give a second concert of the season at Duryea's, 200 West Seventy-second Street, on the evening of April 29. The club will be assisted by the Richard Arnold Sextette, with solos by Albert Gerard-Thiers, tenor; Hans Kronold, 'cellist, and Richard Arnold, violinist.

William C. Carl, organist, is giving a series of concerts in the West.

A concert is to be given in the ballroom of the Waldorf-Astoria on the afternoon of Tuesday, May 7, for the benefit of a Spanish Church, to be erected in the vicinity of the Hispanic Society of America. Madame Eames, Emilio de Gogorza, and Victor Herbert and his full orchestra will furnish the programme. The whole affair will be under the auspices of the Archbishop of New York.

On Tuesday, April 16, in the Pouch Gallery, Brooklyn, the Fenelon Reading Circle will be addressed by Prof. Hooper, Director of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences. A musical programme has been prepared by Mrs. Jennie Campbell-Keough, and Master Ralph Helwarth, boy soprano, will sing.

A special performance of "Aida" was given at the Manhattan Opera House last Tuesday evening for the benefit of the Garibaldi Society.

Corinne Rider-Kelsey, soprano; J. Humbird Duffey, baritone, and Hans Kronold, 'cellist, all of New York, will be the soloists at the concert of the Arion Club, Jersey City, on April 26. Mr. Duffey sings in four performances of "Sampson and Delilah" and two of "Faust," during this week, with the Boston Festival Orchestra tour in New England. He also sings in Mendelssohn's "Elijah" in Ithaca on April 27, and in Morgantown, W. Va., on May 9.

The pupils of Ferdinand Carri gave a concert in Mendelssohn Hall last Wednesday evening. Israel Cohen played a polonaise by Wieniawski.

The Orange Musical Union will give Elgar's "King Olaf," under the direction of Arthur Mees. Two New York singers, Cecil Jones and Frank Croxton, will be among the soloists.

Genevieve Clark Wilson will sing at a concert at the Hotel Majestic to-morrow, and with the Troy Choral Society on Wednesday. She sings with the Hammond Choral Society in Brooklyn on April 23 in Elgar's "Light of Life" and Mendelssohn's "Hear My Prayer." The other soloists on this occasion will be Genevieve Wheat, contralto; George Carris, tenor, and Frank Croxton, bass. On April 24 and 25 Mrs. Wilson will sing with the Church Choral Society, together with Pearl Benedict, contralto; Dr. Lawson, tenor, and Frank Croxton, bass. On May 14 and 15 Mrs. Wilson and Mr. Croxton will sing in the Manchester, N. H., festival in "Hiawatha's Wedding Feast" and Rossini's "Stabat Mater."

The Euterpian Society of Allentown, Penn., C. A. Marks, conductor, will present Verdi's "Requiem" on May 21, with the following soloists: E. V. Root, soprano; Genevieve Wheat, contralto; Dr. Lawson, tenor, and Frank Croxton, bass.

Leon Rennay, a baritone, who sings French songs with a great deal of charm, and who for the past two years has been an especial exponent of the works of Reynaldo Hahn, has just returned to England after a tour of America. Mr. Rennay has given recitals in many American cities, but no public recital in New York. He will return next season, however, and it is his present intention to give a concert in New York some time in December.

In London Mr. Rennay will give several recitals during the season, possibly including one with Mr. Hahn. Although it is as a singer of modern French songs that he is best known, Mr. Rennay sings German, English, and Italian songs also.

OPERAS OF THE WEEK.

Monday—"Rigoletto," evening, Manhattan.
Tuesday—"Carmen," evening, Manhattan.
Wednesday—"Martha," evening, Manhattan.
Thursday—"Pagliacci" and "La Navarraise," evening, Manhattan.
Friday—"Rigoletto," evening, Manhattan.

Hans Kronold will give a 'cello recital in Carnegie Chamber Music Hall on Friday evening, May 3.

NOTES OF MUSICAL EVENTS.

Lucy I. Marsh, soprano, sang at the Sherbrooke (Canada) Music Festival on April 9, 10, and 11.

The fourth private meeting of the Manuscript Society of New York was held last evening in the rooms of the National Arts Club. The programme was devoted entirely to the compositions of G. Ferrata of Beaver College, Beaver, Penn. The artists who appeared were, besides Mr. Ferrata, Isador Schnitzler and David Robinson, violinists; S. Van Praag, violist; Victor Sorlin, 'cellist; Denis Chabot and Mrs. Lawrence Litchfield, pianists; Elfrieda Wegner, contralto; Louis F. Haslanger, bass, and Cora E. Guild, soprano.

Pauline Donalda of the Manhattan Opera Company will give a song recital in Mendelssohn Hall on the evening of April 25. The programme will include an air from Gluck's "Iphigenie," Mozart's "Voi che Sapete," Haydn's "My Mother Bids Me Bind My Hair," Schumann's "Nussbaum," Schubert's "Du bist die Ruh," Brahms's "Meine Liebe ist grun," Faure's "Les Berceaux," Chaminade's "Si J'etais Jardinier," Bemberg's "Chansons des Baisers," Ronald's "The Dove" and "'Tis June," and Mrs. Beach's "The Year's at the Spring." Mme. Donalda gives a concert on April 25 in Montreal, and sails for London on April 27, where she will sing with the Covent Garden Company.

A concert will be given by the Heinebund Society, Carl Kapp conductor, at Terrace Garden to-night. The soloists will be Hans Kronold, 'cellist; Blanche Duffield, soprano, and Louis F. Haslanger, bass.

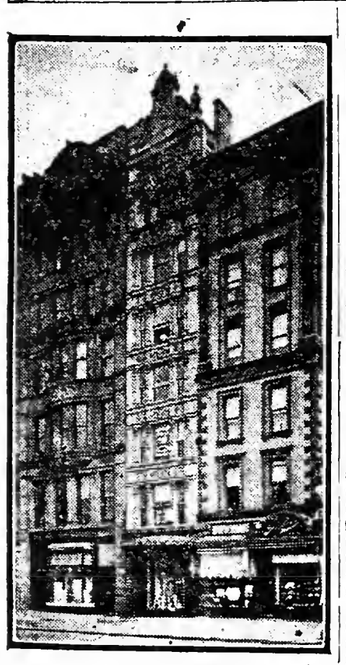
Speculative Attention Now Centred In Properties of Great Value

Remarkable Group of Transactions Which Has Marked Return of Operations from Vacant Lots to Business Districts—New High Records Created—Lower Broadway's "Boom."



481 FIFTH AVENUE.
OVER $300,000.

After a carnival of lot buying covering a period of nearly two years the real estate market has turned again within the last few months to high-grade properties in the neighborhoods around the important business and transportation centres, and has yielded a series of transactions almost without parallel in the city's real estate history.

Each of these transactions, no doubt, has had its own peculiar and interesting features, but all of them have been to a large measure based upon the principle that the great expansion of the city that is in progress all the time, but which will be more impressively shown in two or three years, will operate in two ways. In other words, the fact that vastly larger areas are soon to be accessible from Manhattan has served not only to increase values in these outlying districts, but has also brought about a correspondingly large advance in centrally located Manhattan properties.

Even with this city's vast supply of cash looking for these gilt-edged speculative opportunities, it took this principle considerably longer to "sink in" than it did the idea of suburban possibilities, but it was finally made the basis of a remarkable series of transactions, and has occasioned advances in value no less spectacular than those reported in connection with suburban acreage deals.

To speak of a lower Broadway "boom" may seem strange, since a boom is something usually associated with the further Bronx or Long Island. Yet it was only a few weeks ago that lower Broadway had as fine a boom as was ever experienced by a promising suburb. On the west side of the great downtown thoroughfare, from Cortlandt to Dey Street, there is a block in which there had not been a transfer of property for years. Within a few weeks six out of the ten old buildings on the block changed hands, as the result of six many separate transactions, for the aggregate consideration of about $3,000,000. The old building at the northwest corner of Broadway and Cortlandt Street was sold for $710,000—a figure approximating $300 a square foot, one of the highest ever paid in the downtown section, if one may except the famous Stillman corner at Broadway and Wall Street.

At the other end of the block, at Dey Street, the City Investing Company took over the two parcels owned by the Mercantile National Bank for $1,000,000, while in the middle of the block No. 181 was bought by John G. Wendel, who possibly is the expert referred to by Robert E. Dowling as the shrewdest of them all in that he never sold a piece of real estate. The adjoining buildings, Nos. 177 and 179, also changed hands, the buyer in either case being the tenant. For those merchants who want to retain lower Broadway locations the situation has virtually resolved itself into one of "Buy or go elsewhere," and it is this fact which has raised the prices for these old five-story buildings on single lots to $425,000 and $450,000 each.

At the northeast corner of Broadway and Liberty Street the property of the Williamsburg City Fire Insurance Company figured in a transaction which was remarkable not only by reason of the high price paid—$750,000—but also because the parcel passed from a corporation into the hands of an estate—quite the reverse of the usual order of things in the downtown territory. Again the Wendels were the buyers, and another prominent property has probably appeared in the real estate transfers for the last time.

When the northeast corner of Seventh Avenue and Thirty-third Street, old ramshackle buildings on a plot about 4,000 square feet, was sold at auction in 1904 for $180,000, there were many who "couldn't see it," yet this same property was sold a few months ago for $450,000. It may be argued that this figure, being a valuation given to the property in exchange for other property, is not worth serious consideration, but it may also be stated that since acquiring the corner the new owner has refused an offer to lease it for a long term of years at an annual net rental showing 5 per cent. on the valuation mentioned. If history repeats itself, the completion of the Pennsylvania tunnel project may cause what now appears to some persons to be generous discounting of the future to look like the modest beginning in the upward course of prices.

Seldom has the price in any realty deal in the city caused more genuine surprises than did the million-dollar consideration in the purchase of the Union Dime Savings Bank property at Broadway and Thirty-second Street by the City Investing Company. The "million-dollar deal" is by no means the awe-inspiring event in realty circles that it was ten or a dozen years ago, but it is a fact that various appraisers of supposed ability estimated the price in this transaction at from $550,000 to $800,000, and were reluctant to believe that a speculative corporation had paid $1,000,000 for it. These same appraisers, however, when they had recovered from their astonishment, admitted that the elements which will combine to give their property its future value—Broadway, Thirty-fourth Street, Sixth Avenue, McAdoo and Pennsylvania Stations—are such as to make any present estimate as to what this value will be little more than a wild guess. In any event, this probability of great future value caused the property to command what is believed to be the highest price ever paid outside of the financial district for a parcel of any considerable size.

Another remarkable instance of the current interest in the very choicest and most costly properties in speculative districts was furnished by Felix Isman's purchase of the southeast corner of Fifth Avenue and Forty-second Street, 75 by 100, for $1,550,000. Here again is another instance of an operator stepping in and creating a new price record in a district where values had already mounted to a remarkable level. With the present course of the real estate market in this city, the old notion that a speculator's surest method of profit was to buy below the market has been cast to the winds. The live operator realizes that he will wait long for opportunities by attempting to follow any such plan, with the result that the speculative element feels its way much less cautiously than in the past, and is prominent to a larger extent than ever before in establishing new scales of values in various sections.

Mr. Isman paid at the rate of about $210 a square foot for his Fifth Avenue corner, a record which may stand for some time for a plot of this size, but which is likely soon to be superseded if reliance may be placed in gossip as to the prices which have recently been refused for some single-corner lots between Thirty-fourth and Forty-second Streets. In the block between Forty-first and Forty-second Streets, indeed, a sale was recently effected at a price which was even more remarkable for an "inside" parcel than was the $210 a square foot for the Forty-second Street corner. This sale was that of 481 Fifth Avenue, adjoining the northeast corner of Forty-first Street, a small seventeen-foot structure, to John Hoge, the Zanesville (Ohio) capitalist, for over $300,000. This is at a rate of very nearly $200 a square foot, which, considering the fact that it does not involve a corner property, has been regarded as perhaps the most remarkable of recent Fifth Avenue prices.

Quick turns, even at small profits, make up the ideal business of the operator, but it has been regarded as highly probable that many speculators would fare as well if they were to become semi-investors, and many of them are perfectly willing to admit it. One prominent operator a few days ago in making a rapid survey of a real estate career of nearly twenty-five years, picked out half a dozen properties which he had owned at various times and said that he was not at all certain that he could not have had just as large a fortune to-day and with considerably less worry and trouble, had he simply kept his money in these half dozen properties, instead of jumping all over town, picking up a small profit here and another one there. It was probably some such idea as this which led Robert E. Dowling to buy the Hotel Empire a short time ago for $715,000. A large enough profit has been known to tempt even the most obstinate holder of real estate, but Mr. Dowling says that in this case he has decided to set in one spot and watch the growth of upper Broadway.

Not even Union Square has been exempt from the demand for high-valued properties with a speculative future. The old Everett House, which has been on the market for several years, will be taken over, at a figure said to be close to $1,000,000, by a syndicate in which the Century and Alliance Realty Companies are largely interested. The Union Square Court House proposal has had some influence in increasing speculative interest in the surrounding neighborhood, although this circumstance doubtless had little to do with the Everett House purchase. Plans for the future of the site have not yet matured, but it is probable that it will be occupied by an immense store and loft structure several years before justice is dispensed from any new Court House.

CONCISE MARKET REVIEW.

By Robert E. Dowling.

The real estate market for the next few months will, I believe, be strong and steady, without great activity.

Rents are good, and there are fewer vacancies than at any time within my recollection.

It seems to me that the let-up in general business which is indicated will be beneficial, as many have believed for some time that the volume of business was growing much faster, in proportion to the increase in the volume of money, than was healthy.

Whether we have an active market or not, it seems to me that owners of property on Manhattan Island will do at least as well in the next year as the owners of other securities—and maybe better.

It is easy to have faith in a city which, as Ambassador Bryce said a few days ago, will in all human probability have gathered within its limits within the next twenty years a population greater than was ever gathered upon a similar area anywhere on earth.

I have known many real estate experts in the last twenty years, and the greatest of these was a man who never sold any real estate.

REALTY INTERESTS HERE MUST ABANDON KNOW-IT-ALL ATTITUDE, SAYS ISMAN

What Outsiders Are Doing and Have Done—The Unknown Factor—"Real Estate Does Not Improve Gradually, but Suddenly"—Plea for Sole-Broker Method.

THE TIMES has asked me for my views concerning New York realty, and this request for a Philadelphian's opinion on the subject is so much at variance with the spirit displayed by some New York newspapers concerning investments made by outsiders in New York realty that it has occasioned thoughts which possibly the New York real estate public may be interested in reviewing.

That a prominent Philadelphian should appear to have made very many mistakes in the purchase and sale of New York realty seems to be a source of great amusement, publicly and privately, to New Yorkers. If they could be made to understand just how harmful their display of egotism is to the outside investing public they would not parade their vanity so generously. Egotism and vanity are the words. They know more about the realty situation than many outsiders do—why shouldn't they? And yet the New York realty dealers are far from right in many, many ways. They make practically no effort to bring the outside public into their operations, and miss a tremendous opportunity to broaden their field.

By some peculiar mode of reasoning they assume that every factor that is not positively shown as creating a value must be ignored. They never take into consideration "the unknown," and yet it is "the unknown" that has always made for higher prices; that indefinite quantity that always springs from somewhere, frequently from where it is least expected, and is always of great power in bringing enhanced value.

Real estate does not improve gradually, but suddenly. The elements are being gradually formed, but the climax is sudden, and whether those elements are in the form of a Marshall Field of Chicago, who makes up his mind to purchase a block on Fifth Avenue by reason of his accumulation of great wealth; the merchant from St. Louis, who by reason of a gradually increasing business deems it wise to extend his sphere of action to a larger city; or a Wanamaker, who wants another department store in New York in addition to his own in Philadelphia, they are the proofs of "the unknown value" in realty. The idea or thought of the Pennsylvania Railroad extension dropped from the clouds. The New York Central's many million dollar improvement came as a result of a wreck on its road.

The chain of stores of the United Cigar Stores Company emanated from the brain of a small tobacconist in Syracuse. Even the great projects for a hotel on Sixth Avenue and Broadway, Thirty-second to Thirty-third Street, and for mammoth office buildings on Church Street, between Cortlandt and Fulton were formulated by a young attorney from Savannah, whose name these projects bear. A. J. Drexel of Philadelphia knew enough to buy the property now occupied by J. Pierpont Morgan & Co. at Broad and Wall Streets. John Jacob Astor was not long in this country, and was far from being a New Yorker at the time he saw and took advantage of the state of the New York realty market. The Siegel Cooper Company came from Chicago, Saks & Co. from Washington, William and Robert Pinkerton, who own the property next to the Adams Express Company on Broadway, from Chicago; George Boldt from Philadelphia, D. O. Mills from San Francisco—and very many more instances could be cited.

In the matter of New York's public utilities, as well as the great industrial amalgamations, practically all of them were originated and carried to success by outsiders, and yet, year after year, the New York realty dealers pay absolutely no attention to these facts.

The man from somewhere is not considered a factor, and yet it is the man from just that somewhere that has passed through the hardest school, has been in most cases taught the lesson of realty dealing from nothing to something beyond, whereas the New York choice spots stand out beyond all question—the lowest values are fixed and positive.

Some day the European, who is content now to take 2 per cent. and increased value from his realty investments, and who has prospered in so doing, will be attracted to the 5 per cent., with a greater growth of value, in Manhattan, and many of the New York realty experts will awaken to say, "Who would have thought that would ever occur?"

It does not take brains to grow rich, stout and dictatorial in a perpetually rising market. It's all wrong to compel any one seeking investment in New York realty to go to a dozen brokers to find out who really represents an owner, and then have the seeker forced to operate through a friend of a friend of a friend of the owner. Some day the owners of New York realty will realize that the only way they can obtain proper values will be to place their properties in the hands of one broker for sale, and that one broker will then have protection, because just so sure as two or more persons handle the same property prices will be cut wherever possible, that one may be able to sell cheaper than the other, and practically chaos must reign.

The outsider will some day be reckoned with in Manhattan realty, the New York public and some newspaper commentation to the contrary notwithstanding. If the European situation was studied by the New York realty experts, in my most humble opinion, and with profuse apologies for the suggestion, a better understanding of the condition of their realty might present itself to their minds. One of the owners of the McAlpin property (Dr. McAlpin) did study such conditions and did digest the facts to be derived from this source with the result that the estate has profited by his knowledge to the extent of many millions of dollars. He has defied the expert opinions thrust upon him. He has been told by the "best" appraisers innumerable times how foolish the estate was in not accepting the fabulous amounts offered time and again for the block of ground on Broadway between Thirty-third and Thirty-fourth Streets, and yet the price has steadily grown, in the minds of the same real estate experts, at the rate of over $1,000,000 per annum during the last three years.

I deny that any man or set of men know the high value of New York City's choicest spots, and I firmly believe that it is the outsider who will make the prices and who will make the high records and prove to the New York public the existence of a great unknown quantity, making for great developments and tremendous enhancement of values.

FELIX ISMAN.

DIVERGENT VIEWS ON THE TORRENS SYSTEM

Title Registration Plan Discussed by Experts—Title Companies' Side—Deputy Register Thompson Replies to Recent Criticism.

Not since the mortgage tax agitation has there been any bit of proposed legislation which has aroused such general interest in real estate circles as has the bill now pending at Albany providing for the introduction of the Torrens system of title registration in this State.

The measure has already received the indorsement of many local real estate organizations. To-morrow afternoon meetings in the interest of the proposed change will be held at both the Manhattan and Brooklyn Real Estate Boards of Brokers, and it is expected that a large delegation will go to Albany on Wednesday to attend the hearing on the bill.

THE TIMES is able to present to-day not only the views of Deputy Register Thompson of Brooklyn, one of the bill's foremost advocates, but also the first extended analysis of the measure from another point of view in the shape of an article by Walter Lindner, Solicitor of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company.

By Walter Lindner,
Solicitor of the Title Guarantee and Trust Co.

Resolutions have been adopted by boards of real estate brokers and other bodies endorsing what is usually called in those resolutions "the Torrens System of Registration of Titles." A public meeting was held recently by the Real Estate Board of Brokers of the City of New York at which eloquent speeches were made, calling for immediate adoption of the system as a cure for all evils which attend the transfer of real estate, and a joint public hearing before the committees on judiciary of the Legislature has been fixed for April 17.

It is evident from the tone of the speeches at these meetings and the form of the resolutions adopted there that the present agitation is founded upon a belief that there are defects in the present system of recording title to land which can be remedied summarily by a system of State registration, and by putting the State into the business of title insurance. The difficult technical questions of law involved are ignored and the persons engaged in the discussion seem to be unaware of the fact that the system is not one by which the holder of the certificate of registration obtains insurance, but that the only person who has recourse to the indemnity fund is the person from whom land has been taken away by the registration.

To call the system proposed by this bill or any of the systems in operation in any of the United States by the name "Torrens System" is a misnomer. It is impossible under our constitutional form of Government to institute the Torrens system except at the time when the land is first granted by the State, for this reason that the persons whose rights are excluded by the certification issued by the Registrar cannot be deprived of their property under American law unless they have an opportunity to defend their property in a court of law or unless a statute of limitations runs against llenors and persons out of possession and in favor of the actual possessor of the land. For that reason the system as in use in the United States is not a system of registration through an administrative officer, but is a system of registering decrees of court in actions to quiet title, accompanied usually by a short statute of limitations directed against the persons whose property rights might be injuriously affected by an erroneous decision. A title which in itself is good is not helped by registration, but the registration of a title which is bad may enable the registered owner to steal the rights of those who have adverse interests, and sometimes can result in giving real estate to a person who has no equitable or legal right to the land and to deprive those who actually own it of their property.

Pending Bill Crudely Drawn.

The bill now before the Legislature is not different from any of the others in this respect. The bill is so crudely drawn that those who prepared it did not even take the trouble to adapt its procedure to the jurisprudence of the State of New York, and the details of practice under it will hardly fit in with the orderly procedure of other actions and proceedings in the courts of this State. But assuming that the bill can be made to work or that the details can be amended so as to fit in with the practice and laws of this State, an examination of the essentials of the measure seems to be appropriate at this time.

The Question of Cost.

The cost of carrying on the business of title insurance in New York City is from 70 per cent. to 90 per cent. of the income.

The mere work of examination of the title without the making of searches at actual cost of salaries will be many times $15 with respect to each title, but, assuming that the fee be raised to be commensurate with the professional labor involved, there still remains the necessity of guiding the examiner in his work by furnishing him abstracts and searches. If this be not done and the examiner must dig out the chain of title and then make searches, the system will fall down by its own weight by reason of the enormous physical labor involved and the impossibility of transacting business, for even the least active county in this State. An application for title registration involves, not only the official fees, but the fees for conducting a technical lawsuit with respect to real property, an examination of the title by the counsel who is to conduct the suit, in order that he may be able to guide the examiner through the mazes of the chain of title, and the furnishing of the necessary official or corporate searches, so that the examiner may be sure that he has before him all instruments which can affect the title.

When this expense is considered the claim of cheapness of original registration becomes untenable. As a matter of fact, it will be more expensive than an examination and insurance of title in those parts of the State where title insurance is customary, and in those parts of the State where it is usual to accept the results of examination by counsel made upon official or other searches the cost of registration will necessarily exceed the cost of examination, because all the professional services necessary in the examination of title must be rendered, and in addition to that must come the cost of conducting the action for registration, the official fees, and the cost of furnishing official searches. These searches must be not only sufficient to satisfy the mind of the attorney who has the interest of his client in his mind, but also the requirements of an official examiner, who wants above all to be protected against the possibility of making errors in his report.

Value of Examiner's Report.

The next matter to be considered is what kind of report can an official examiner of titles make? In this connection it must be remembered that there is no duty upon such an official examiner to assume risk or to determine doubtful questions of law, nor is there any reason why he should do so. In fact, that examiner will be best who assumes no risks either of fact or of law, for, after all, his duty is to protect the guaranty fund from being depleted by persons who are excluded from rightful interests in the property by reason of the registration of the title. It will not be the business of the examiner to pass upon the question whether the title is marketable—that is to say, he need not judge whether the probability of attack is so remote that, even though if made, it might succeed, the court, judging of the improbability, will require a purchaser to take. All the examiner is directed to do is to report whether he finds the title of the applicant proper for registration. He ought not to find it proper for registration unless he finds it absolutely clear of question, otherwise he risks the insurance fund, and also permits the registration to be used as an instrument of injustice to deprive those who might have interests in the property of their rights.

Whether the examiner construes his duties as strictly as that, or whether he merely takes ordinary precautions to protect his personal record against the charge of professional incompetence, the question remains how many titles in the State of New York would be certified as being absolutely free of objection. From an experience large enough to make the writer competent to speak, it is certain that nearly every title which is properly examined develops questions and defects which must be passed upon either by assuming risk of fact or by deciding questions of law, and almost every title presents difficulties which counsel for the purchaser or for the title insurance company examining the title must pass upon on his professional responsibility or at the risk of his client. Under an official examination there are practically no titles which should come out free of objection.

Refuge for Bad Titles.

It is believed that so many titles would be certified by the examiners as not being proper for registration, or as being subject to serious objections, that if this system came into operation its very friends would be the ones to try to break it down, and it would be found finally that it would be used only to bolster up such bad and questionable titles as could be got past the examiners. The bill directs, and appropriately must direct, the court to find and decree in whom the title to the land is vested. That does not mean that it must find and decree that the title is vested in whoever feels like applying for a certificate of registration, but that it must find and decree in accordance with law who is rightfully the owner of the land. It is true that the bill directs the decree to remove clouds upon the title; but if that be all that can be accomplished, there is plenty of remedy in the existing system of law. The action to determine claim is one well known to the law, and at least gives the persons whose rights are to be affected notice by the service of a summons addressed to him by name or proper description.

Will Not Facilitate Dealing.

It is evident from this sketch of the proceedings necessary to obtain a decree of registration that it would be utterly useless to purchasers of real estate to use initial registrations as substitutes for examination by counsel or title insurance companies. The expense and delay involved make it impossible to hold up commercial dealings in real estate to await the results of applications for registration. There are about 100,000 transactions involving actual title closings in Greater New York each year. It is evident that a very small fraction of these transactions could be carried through if between the time of contracting to purchase the property and the time fixed for closing it were necessary to go through the cumbersome and uncertain procedure of this bill. The bill appropriately, therefore, seems to imply that a person who thinks he is owner will make the application and does not give a right to a purchaser under contract so to do. How much benefit real estate boards of brokers will derive from the system as a help in facilitating them in their business it is difficult to see. They will have to deal with registered and unregistered titles as they find them, and they will find few registered titles which are merchantable.

Invitation to Bunco Steerers.

But, even if a title be registered in such manner that the certificate appears to be fairly clear and understandable, yet it is not very useful as an aid to practical dealing in real estate. For two years after the decree of registration "all whom it may concern" may have the entire case reviewed, set aside the registration, and obtain a judgment that the applicant's title is not proper for registration. This makes the certificate absolutely unavailable as an assurance of title upon which a purchaser would or could rely. Why, if land can be taken in this manner by decree, this two years' grace should be given it is difficult to see. If the decree can be made binding at all, this expedient is not necessary but must be taken as an admission of the essential injustice of a system which makes land the spoil of any clever schemer who can cook up a decree. Nor does this expedient act as a protection to the indemnity fund; the person who is aggrieved still has resort to that, and need not apply to set aside the decree. In fact, a crook could work it so as to get a registered title, sell it, and have a confederate recover the full value of the land from the indemnity. The game is so easy that bunco steering will become unfashionable.

If adverse rights are disclosed by the record, and especially if they are known to the applicant, it cannot be possible that the courts of this State will permit those rights to be cut off by a publication against "all whom it may concern." In a case of this sort, which arose in Minnesota in 1897, it was held that registration did not cut off a mortgagee whose rights were known to the applicant, it being held in that case that it is impossible to cut off persons by a general designation of that sort where they are known, and that the summons should be addressed to such persons by name. If this principle should be upheld in this State, and no reason can be seen why it should not be so upheld, no registration will avail against rights clearly disclosed by the record, and notice of which was actually had by the holder of the first registration and to the holders of reissue certificates thereafter.

The Stock Transfer Simile.

Much more could be said on the subject, but to exhaust it would require more space than is available for this article. One further consideration, however, it is necessary to present. The advocates of the registration system claim that after the title has been registered and the certificate in the fullness of time has become conclusive, that transfer will become facile and cheap, like the transfer of a share of stock, and that this ease in dealing with real property will make it a more desirable investment. This conclusion is false. The reason that real estate is regarded as a permanent investment rather than an object of speculation is because its ownership, when once acquired, is safe, and the holder cannot be deprived of it except by his own act. Those who indulge in this argument lose sight of the fact that the very things which make it easy to transfer land make it easy to lose land.

The foregoing considerations are presented only upon the business aspects of the question. There are many other questions of constitutional law, legal procedure, and public policy involved to touch upon which would extend this article far beyond reasonable limits, but if the discussion ever becomes serious, these questions must be thought of.

DEPUTY REGISTER THOMPSON'S VIEWS

Referring to an article recently printed in THE TIMES concerning the Torrens system, Deputy Register G. W. Thompson of Kings County said yesterday:

"You state that many observers have found the supporters of the system unable or unwilling to supply any detailed information as to the operation of the system in other localities, implying that its supporters have suppressed what they consider must be its faults. Advocates of the Torrens system are free to admit that many of the laws which have been passed providing for the Torrens system have been defective, but that does not mean that the system itself is defective. There can be no question, for instance, of the desirability of providing a court procedure, whereby old evidences of title regarding a given piece of property can be made negligible and a court order obtained for a certificate of title, which, in effect, is as final as an original patent. This the Torrens system does. There can be no question but that an accumulation of old records should be prevented. This the Torrens system also does. There can be no question but that it is desirable that real estate transactions should be rendered simple, rapid, and safe. This the Torrens system does, and so on.

"As to the particular objections raised by your informant, permit me to say that it dose take from thirty to thirty-five days to get a first title through. Thirty days is the usual time which it takes for an ordinary real estate sale to be consummated at present. After the first certificate of title is issued under the Torrens system it takes only a few hours. As to the applicant promptly and cheerfully rendering assistance, what man of intelligence could assume that any applicant for a Torrens certificate would not act promptly and cheerfully to cure any defects that may be discovered in his title?

"It is true that a purely optional system has not grown as some of its advocates have expected. It is true that the strongest advocates of the Torrens system believe that an optional system can be justified only on the grounds that it leads to a compulsory system. It is true that in Illinois a law was adopted to compel administrators and executors to register all the real property in their custody, but it is not true that this law was declared unconstitutional or invalid. The law in question had a referendum feature, which was not carried out properly in the election in Cook County. The courts, therefore, decided that the constitutionality of the law was not before them, but the question of its having been voted on properly. The court, having decided that this act was not voted on properly, did not pass upon its constitutionality, as they held that the law itself had not, in effect, been adopted, and so was not before them. Is is true that the Ohio law was declared unconstitutional, but that means nothing. The first law adopted in Illinois was declared unconstitutional, but subsequently the present law was adopted, which was declared constitutional.

"The Torrens system in Minneapolis may not be financially profitable, but as it grows it will become more profitable. I have been advised by an assistant of Registrar Davis of Cook County, Illinois, that the system now pays its own way in that county; also, that every person who has once registered property there has become a valiant friend of the Torrens system.

"Fear has been expressed that the adoption of the Torrens system will add greatly to the expenses of county government, but it must be borne in mind that the fees paid for the first registration amount to about $28, and in addition the applicant must furnish his own abstract of title at his own expense. It is barely possible that for the first year the receipts might not equal the expenditure, but after that time there can hardly be any doubt that the receipts would more than cover expenses. The important element is that when the certificate of title has been issued by the State future searches and the expenses incidental thereto are dispensed with. Thus, if we assume that the present cost of title insurance is largely due to the cost of searching, this expense has to be incurred over again with every subsequent transaction, whereas, when once a certificate of title has been issued, abstracts, continuations, and examinations are done away with and transfers and mortgages can be closed in a day at a cost of $5.

"I have to-day received word that the constitutionality of the Torrens act in California has been upheld by the Supreme Court. The San Francisco Recorder of April 6 contains the following extract from the Supreme Court's decision: 'The State has full control over the subject of the mode of transferring and establishing titles to property within its limits. For these purposes the State has power to provide a special proceeding in the nature of a proceeding in rem, to fix the status of the land and declare the nature of the titles and interests therein and the person or persons in whom such titles or interests are at the time vested. It may do this whenever it may be considered necessary or likely to promote the general welfare.'"

Looking Backward

IT is not necessary to go beyond the present generation to realize the advantages that Real Estate offers as a desirable investment. The wonderful development of the country and the remarkable growth of New York City have increased the value of its Real Estate and established its security. The newspapers have contained many stories of successful operations, and there is no one who can deny the fact that in the past few years investors have made independent fortunes by buying properties that were offered at that time. The prices obtained on Manhattan Island cannot in any way be attributed to any so-called boom movement, but solely to a latter-day appreciation of the advantages that are offered in the ownership of a desirable Real Estate holding within its boundaries. Real Estate has been the foundation of most of the large fortunes of to-day, and those who took advantage of the opportunities that were then offered are in a position to realize substantial profits at the present time.

Looking Forward

THE City of New York to-day has a population of 4,000,000 people—just one twentieth of the population of the entire United States. The number of improvements that are now under way and contemplated, together with its natural increase in population and the continued demand for greater accommodations, both in the business and residential sections, give assurances of its future. The entire country has been enjoying wonderful prosperity, but great as that has been, the prosperity and growth of New York City alone have been proportionately five times greater. The security of Manhattan Real Estate—which pays a better net income than Banks, Mortgages, Stocks or Bonds—and where values are not subject to the will of one man or set of men—has attracted the capital of investors from all over the world who appreciate the advantages offered in the ownership of a desirable Real Estate holding. The recent conditions in Wall Street and Financial Circles, as compared with the prices realized at auction sales of Real Estate during the same period, gave telling proof that its security is established beyond all doubt.

PRESENT OPPORTUNITIES

will buy a very prominent corner—almost 100x100—and located at the junction of a leading avenue and principal street. On offers made for space when the leases now running expire, which is in July of this year, the present income can be doubled. This plot stands out as a good location for the erection of a modern building; the other three corners have been improved, and it would not be difficult to lease space in a new building, as its location is in every way a good one. It is a corner easily accessible to or from any part of the city by Elevated, Surface or Subway.

$50,000 CASH

will buy a parcel that offers immediate opportunities for a quick profit. This parcel is situated on the west side and improvements now under way by the City will assure of a holding that will enhance its value on completion of the present work. It can be bought on very favorable terms and by disposing of it at retail, a good profit is assured. Will consider propositions to syndicate the transaction if agreeable. Particulars to principals only, on application.

125TH STREET.

100 feet front on the south side of the street, located between 3d and 8th Avenues; has a depth of 200 feet, running through to 124th Street, making a plot of 100 x 200, or a total of 30,000 square feet. It is the only available plot of its size on this street, and is eminently suited for the erection of a Theatre, Department Store, or other improvement which may suggest itself to those interested in that section. Agreeable terms can be made and particulars will be given to principals only on application.

OWNERS

I want the particulars of what properties you have for sale in the Borough of Manhattan. My clientele of buyers includes investors both in and out of the City and if your proposition is a good one, it will not take long to effect a sale through my office.

INVESTORS

with $5,000 and upwards will find it to their interest to keep in touch with this office. No misrepresentations are made and when particulars of property are submitted to them for consideration the facts as they exist are given. Your future business is wanted. My efforts are not confined to the making of a commission, as much as they are to the making of a satisfied client.

EXCLUSIVE BROKER

I believe it is possible to secure better and quicker results for owners if their properties are placed in the hands of one office only. In this way the Broker is able to proceed on more intelligent lines and can render a better service to the owner and very often obtain quicker results than otherwise. I make a specialty of such propositions and give them the full benefit of my advertisements in the various mediums.

MORTGAGES

Have various amounts to loan for clients on first and second mortgages. All applications must be on properties located in Manhattan Borough.

$125,000 CASH

will buy a parcel located in the Forties, between Sixth Avenue and Broadway, which runs through an entire block and has a frontage on two streets. The owner of this parcel has need of money for his own business and the price that will buy this property to-day will look cheap inside of five years—the location is central—the neighboring property is held in strong hands—and the advantage it enjoys in having a frontage on two streets gives it the preference. It is leased for a term of 21 years at a yearly rental of $28,000; the lessee pays all charges, including taxes, except the interest on the mortgage and the fire insurance on the buildings. It returns at least 8% annually on the investment.

$33,000 CASH

will buy a Madison Avenue Corner Elevator Apartment House which returns about 9% net annually on the above amount. The first mortgage has just been renewed for 3 years @ 4½%. The Second Mortgage has 3 years to run at 5%, making the combined average rate of interest on both mortgages under 5%. This parcel should commend itself to investors who desire to buy where there is an assurance of an increase in the value of their holding. The vicinity of this property has a very bright future and its location together with the fact that it is a corner, makes it an attractive proposition.

$60,000 CASH

will buy four apartment houses in the Eighties, close to 5th Avenue, plot 100x100. Property in this locality has been bought for permanent improvement and there are very few plots if any, of this size that can be secured in this section. Every one of the apartments are under lease to October. First Mortgage at 4½%. Can arrange for second mortgage for a term of years at 5%.

REAL ESTATE MANHATTAN REAL ESTATE

RECONSTRUCTION "IN THE SWAMP"

Large Building Operations Undertaken by Ex-Mayor Schieren.

INCREASE IN LAND VALUES

Many Purchases of Buildings by Tenants—Ground Values From $25 to $40 a Square Foot.

The "Swamp" is roughly bounded by the Brooklyn Bridge to the north, William Street to the west Beekman Street to the south and Pearl Street to the east. Small in area, this section is rich in legend and history, and in memories and traditions of the past. Not a few of New York's pioneer merchants and leading citizens were born in this section and here built up their business fortunes. The leather industry has always made the "Swamp" its home. It is one of the few businesses that have never migrated from their original confines, and to-day the leather trade is more firmly anchored in the "Swamp" than ever before.

As in every district where sentiment runs strong and where property as well as business is passed down from generation to generation, improvements are slow in coming. Such a condition is usually brought about by owners not caring to sell their property, especially when occupied by them for their business, or where the premises have been occupied by the same tenants for years. But when once aroused from lethargy, such a section will push ahead rapidly, new buildings are planned, old structures improved, and firms which have previously occupied rented quarters will purchase if favorable opportunity offers. Such a change has taken place in the "Swamp" during the last few years.

The William Street blocks from the Bridge to Beekman Street, while they can be regarded as being in the "Swamp," are practically on its edge, the heart of the "Swamp" being located between Gold and Cliff Streets. It is only in these two blocks that the activity has been the result of outside influences, the chief factor being the expansion of the lower William Street district. In 1904 John D. Black and Henry V. D. Black sold the Black Building at 93 and 95 William Street to the North River Fire Insurance Company and immediately bought from Daniel B. Freedman a plot of about 8,000 square feet at the northeast corner of William and Frankfort Streets, upon which they erected an eleven-story loft and office building. This building was an immediate investment success. As the result of gradual purchases, the Messrs. Black now own the entire block bounded by the Bridge, William, Frankfort, and Rose Streets, a plot of nearly 14,000 square feet.

Mr. Freedman immediately afterward made extensive purchases in the block to the south, acquiring within a short time 184, 186, and 190 William Street, 27 Spruce Street, 31 Frankfort Street, and the Scott Building, at 35 and 37 Frankfort Street. Only recently Mr. Freedman disposed of all of these holdings at a substantial profit, with the exception of the Scott Building, which he has retained as a peraonal investment. Other properties sold in this block have been 25 Frankfort Street to A. E. Bamberger and 39 Frankfort Street to B. Hahn. Values have risen at this point at least 25 per cent., and ground is now worth for improvement from $25 to $40 a square foot.

The really active buying, however, has taken place in the heart of the "Swamp" itself, and has been done very largely by the business firms located therein.

Ex-Mayor Schieren's Operation.

Ex-Mayor Charles A. Schieren has been foremost in the rebuilding of Ferry Street from Gold to Cliff. Mr. Schieren within the last three years has accumulated a plot of about 33,000 square feet at the southwest corner of Ferry and Cliff Streets, with a fifty-foot outlet into Beekman Street. This is one of the largest plots held under individual ownership south of the Bridge. Mr. Schieren has within two years erected two ten-story fireproof loft buildings, covering 17,000 square feet. His most recent building, Chapel Court, is now nearing completion. This is a ten-story building. The nine lofts have already been leased to separate tenants at about 60 cents a square foot. The fact that all these leases were made prior to the completion of the building, at an increase of at least 15 per cent. over the rents secured in the Schieren Building, completed in 1905, shows the healthy condition of the neighborhood.

George F. Hewitt purchased several years ago 18 to 24 Ferry Street, a plot of about 16,000 square feet. With several sales on Beekman Street, it can be said that about one-half of this entire block has changed hands within three years, and that prices have risen at least 50 per cent., and property is now worth in this block from $15 to $20 a square foot, if the improvement is of a substantial value, with a somewhat higher value for the Beekman Street frontage. Rents have increased as values have gone up, and there is now a stronger tendency than ever before for tenants to purchase, if possible.

Another of the modern structures of the "Swamp" is the nine-story building at 35 and 37 Ferry Street, northwest corner of Cliff Street, erected in 1904 by the Pfister & Vogel Leather Company, on a plot of 3,500 square feet. William H. Heller, New York manager of this company, who planned the building, previously owned 17 and 19 Ferry Street, northwest corner of Jacob Street.

Leather Trust's Holdings.

It is in this block that most of the notable transactions have occurred. By gradual purchasing the United States Leather Company has secured control of about three-fourths of the entire block bounded by Gold, Frankfort, Ferry, and Jacob Streets, a plot of over 32,000 square feet, covered by store and loft buildings, many of which are occupied by the owners for storage purposes. In this block is also situated the ten-story Healy Building, owned by A. Augustus and Frank Healy, which was the pioneer fireproof structure in the "Swamp." No. 55 Frankfort Street, a modern seven-story building, was bought recently by Rossbach & Brothers for their business. With these heavy purchases there is no property left in this block that can be bought. It has practically all been absorbed by interests who will hold it for their own use.

Outside buyers have also been attracted to this district on account of the signs of activity in the neighborhood. No. 25 Ferry

CONCRETE COMING INTO MORE FAVOR

Many Advantages of New Structural Method Commanding Attention.

CAUSES OF PAST FAILURES

Faulty Designing and Poor Inspection Usually Shown to be Responsible.

The widespread and constantly increasing use of reinforced concrete construction, the claims made for it by its supporters, counterbalanced by the distrust excited in the minds of financiers by a number of failures which have occurred within the immediate past, have brought this type of building prominently to the attention of investors and led to close inquiry as to its advantages and possibilities.

Although concrete is one of the oldest building materials in use, reinforced concrete is of comparatively recent origin. The story is told that about forty years ago a French gardener, one Joseph Monier, devised and patented a method of reinforcing concrete, successfully applying it in the making of flower pots. From this modest beginning an industry has been developed which has revolutionized building construction, and, in the opinion of authorities, marked the inception of the greatest advance made in building construction since the introduction of structural steel.

The predominating advantages of reinforced concrete construction are economy, ease and rapidity of erection, durability, fireproofness, impermeability, evenness of temperature, deadening of sound, monolithic nature, and rigidity.

Perhaps the most important features in the eyes of the investor are the economy and fireproofness. Although a reinforced concrete structure may run at present a little higher in its initial cost than one erected of stone and steel, its ultimate cost, due to practically nominal maintenance charges and reduced insurance rates, will more than offset the increased initial cost. The fires at Baltimore and San Francisco have demonstrated beyond a doubt that concrete is absolutely fireproof—that it is the only building material in use to-day which is able successfully to resist high temperatures.

The speed with which a reinforced concrete structure can be erected is a point of particular interest to the investor. The materials of which a building of this kind is constructed can be had anywhere, and there is consequently no delay in waiting for supplies, as is generally the case with a stone and steel structure. Speed in construction means early occupancy; a matter of dollars and cents to the owner, allowing him to fill his building with tenants with the least possible loss on his investment, and enabling the manufacturer to begin his output at a date which would otherwise be impossible.

Minimum of Skilled Labor.

The steel skeleton type of office, mercantile, apartment, and hotel buildings which has been used almost universally in this city for many years requires in its construction the services of skilled mechanics who receive the highest rates of wages, including stone masons, bricklayers, plasterers, steel erectors, terra cotta setters, and carpenters, while the materials used in the construction of the building consist of stone, brick, terra cotta blocks, steel, plaster, lumber, and so on. In the reinforced concrete building of to-day skilled labor is cut down to a minimum. With the exception of carpenters practically all of the labor is of the unskilled type, drawing low rates of wages, and the materials consist almost solely of sand, cement, broken stone, and steel rods, which are easily obtainable at low prices. Owing to this minimum use of skilled labor it is also apparent that the possibility of labor difficulties is greatly reduced.

Reasons for the Failures.

As to the failures which have recently occurred in a number of instances, there is this to be said: The apparent ease with which a reinforced concrete building can be erected has caused the business to be taken up by a large number of inexperienced contractors. A reinforced concrete building essentially requires careful designing and engineering, and, furthermore, thorough and conscientious inspection while the building is in course of erection. The failures which have occurred have been mainly due to poor design of the reinforcement and too great haste in removing the forms supporting the setting concrete.

Reinforced concrete construction, like any other form, should be done only by contractors experienced in that line. The number of firms who are now specializing in reinforced concrete leaves no valid excuse for the employment of inexperienced contractors. The neglect of this factor spells disaster, besides discrediting an excellent form of construction.

J. W. BUZZELL, C. E.

NEW CONCRETE BUILDINGS.

City's First Large Business Structures Now Nearing Completion.

Until very recently the use of reinforced concrete in this city has been confined to factories, warehouses, garages, and other similar structures. Owing, however, to the enterprise of Samuel Green and the McGraw Publishing Company two tall buildings are now nearing completion in the uptown business district, which will give New Yorkers an opportunity to judge of the merits of the new method as applied to office and mercantile buildings.

Mr. Green's structure covers a plot of three lots, running through from Thirty-fourth to Thirty-fifth Streets, just east of Broadway, and adjoining the new building which W. R. H. Martin is erecting on the Broadway corner. That Mr. Green should have taken a plot of ground worth well up toward $1,000,000 upon which to make a trial of concrete construction excited not a little comment among those who believe in letting others do pioneer work of this character. The operation, however, has been carried through successfully and the building will soon be ready for occupancy.

Fire Resisting

This quality even the most approved form of steel construction under extreme tests does not possess.

It is Indestructible

In Egypt concrete columns are still standing, while natural stone has crumbled to dust.

In California the concrete structures were unharmed by seismic convulsions and subsequent burning.

An office in

In addition to its structural excellence, the LIGHT COURTS on each side, and its direct north light from the 35th St. front make floor space singularly attractive.

West 128th St., seven story elevator Building, 75x100; 28 large apartments; total rents, $17,000; institution mortgage $90,000, at 5%. Will consider exchange in part payment.

Private Dwellings, Special.

Owing to the great demand at present for private Dwellings in this vicinity and the keen attention investors are giving to such purchases for investment and speculation, we have canvassed the market very thoroughly and secured for sale a large number of very desirable houses, many of which have not been offered before. A few of them are remarkably cheap in price and will surely not be on the market long.

We suggest an early personal call.

REAL ESTATE — LONG ISLAND — REAL ESTATE

LONG ISLAND TO SOLVE CITY TOILERS' PROBLEM

Country Life, Plus Modern Improvements, Gaining in Popularity — Ambassador Bryce on New York's Development.

By GAGE E. TARBELL.

The development of Long Island has only just begun. It is bound to have a great future, because of two important factors: First, the ever increasing population of New York, which means the gradual abandonment of Manhattan to business purposes, and second, the natural attractiveness of the island, which now will be enhanced by all the skill and resources of man.

The enormous growth of New York's population is probably not fully comprehended except by those who make it a study, although even the casual observer must realize the steady encroachment of business upon sections once wholly (and it was thought for all time) given over to residences. A few years ago, whe.. the Subway was planned, its projectors calculated that the highest number of passengers it would ever be called upon to carry in a single day would be 400,000, and this number they thought would not be reached for a long time. Now those who are crushed and jammed there know that the limit has been exceeded, and the men who run the Subway know that they are carrying 600,000 people a day with facilities for not more than two-thirds of that number.

Last year the increase in the city's population was estimated at 350,000; this year it will undoubtedly be larger, and what about the next year and the next? New York is now like a great big snowball—the bigger it becomes the more rapidly it grows—and scarcely any one has the temerity to make a prediction as to what the population will be ten years hence.

Ambassador Bryce's Estimate.

The Hon. James Bryce, British Ambassador to the United States, than whom perhaps no one has a clearer idea of American institutions and American tendencies, used these words in his speech at the reception tendered him a few days ago in the Chamber of Commerce: "In thirty or forty years, within twenty miles of the spot where we now stand, will be the greatest concentration of population upon the earth. In fact, there is no limit that can be set upon the growth of your city."

Now where are all these people going to? Large numbers of them will always live in the outlying sections from choice, and a much larger number will hereafter be compelled to seek the suburbs. Every year the exodus of homeseekers will grow and grow. With the completion of the transportation facilities now under way, a country home in the heart of Long Island will be reached within half an hour from Broadway—in practically the same time that it now takes to go from the Battery to Harlem, and much more comfortably. In fact the tide of travel has already set in toward the island and nothing can hold it back. It will simply be history repeating itself. All ready the prices of farm lands have doubled and trebled and quadrupled. Personally, I have no doubt that the future of Long Island will fully justify the confidence reposed in it by the millions of capital seeking investment within its borders.

New York Imitating London.

On the other hand, it offers in certain sections, such a sane country life as must in time be the salvation of the toiling thousands of this wealth-mad city. New York will imitate London more and more. People who really want to enjoy the part of their lives away from business, will wisb to get entirely away from the limits of the city. Country life as it is known in England, plus American advantages and improvements, is taking a firmer and firmer hold upon our people, and it is to this class that Long Island makes its strongest appeal.

The people of this age make large demands. They want to get away from the disagreeable things of the city, but they want to take with them into the country the city's conveniences and advantages. Our city life is too complex and unsatisfying; our country life has been too simple. Something between the two would constitute a sane life, one delightfully healthy, and well balanced mentally and physically. This is what Long Island is prepared to furnish to those who select a home site with discrimination.

BROOKLYN'S PARK SLOPE.

Region of Much New Building—Development Along Gowanus Canal.

George A. Allin, Manager of the Brooklyn Improvement Company, says: "Few sections of Brooklyn have shown greater activity in the recent stir in real estate than what is known as the Prospect Park Slope.

"Edward H. Litchfield for five years has been exchanging large parcels of lots for New York properties, with the result that many builders have been busily at work putting up apartment houses, as well as private dwellings. This has caused a large increase of population in the Twenty-second Ward. Louis Bonnet, Thomas Corrigan, William H. Reynolds, Jere J. Gilligan, James T. Allan, and many others have reaped the benefit of their enterprise in operating in this section. The Park Congregational Church has built a new edifice at Eighth Avenue and Second Street, and at Sixth Avenue and Ninth Street a Carnegie branch library has been erected.

"Along Gowanus Canal and the basins of the Brooklyn Improvement Company rentals are showing large increases. The Uvalde Asphalt Paving Company, the Degnon Contracting Company, William F. Hickey, Bernard Campbell & Co., the Barber Asphalt Company, and many large concerns are finding these wharves most accessible. The contemplated improvements along the canal, including a tunnel to flush it twice a day, have ended any thought of closing this important arm of the bay. The advantage of enlarging the Gowanus Canal and building the basins is seen as one counts the many vessels discharging freight at this point. Building materials are carried to the suburbs or distributed through the adjacent blocks at a minimum expense, while new industries attracted to this water front are increasing the population."

JAMAICA BAY PROJECT.

Preliminary Work Toward Making It a Great Shipping Centre.

The eyes of those interested in waterfront properties are turning just now with interest to the shores of Jamaica Bay, which, when contemplated improvements are carried out, will, it is believed, become an important shipping centre. It is planned to make of this large sheet of water, long given over to fishing and pleasure craft, one of the finest harbors of its size on the Atlantic Coast. Through the efforts of Congressman Charles B. Law the Government is to deepen the Coney Island Channel to the entrance to Jamaica Bay and pierce the bar there. The city has also determined to survey the bay, with the idea of dredging it, and city surveyors have already begun work there. It is planned to deepen and widen some of the natural channels in the bay so that deep-draught craft may be able to enter there and dock at wharves at Canarsie, Rockaway, and adjacent points. When this work has been carried out the waste meadow lands on the shores of the bay, filled in, will become valuable for warehouse and manufacturing purposes. The improvement, it is declared, will be of great benefit, particularly to the East New York, Flatbush, and Flatlands districts.

NEW STATION AT JAMAICA.

Some Speculative Buying Caused by Railroad's Recent Announcement.

Since President Peters announced his intention of establishing an important station somewhere near Rockaway Junction, in Jamaica, there has been a good deal of buying, throughout the entire eastern section of Jamaica.

Many of the speculators in this property had been buying in the western part of the town, but with the announcement of a new central station at the foot of Carlton Avenue, the prices have advanced to such an extent in the west end that the cheaper property to the east is again in favor. The fact that the Long Island Railroad intends to take care of Jamaica, by establishing two intermediate stations between Hollis and Carlton Avenues, is greatly appreciated by the residents.

CHEAPER MONEY PREDICTED.

Frank Bailey Looks for Return to Lower Interest Rates.

Frank Bailey, Vice President and General Manager of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company in Brooklyn, is one of those familiar with the situation who believes that money conditions will improve and that there will be a return, probably before the year is out, to long-time loans at from 4 to 4½ per cent. He also sees a change in the market from the feverish speculation of last Spring to calmer and healthier conditions. While he thinks realty transactions may be fewer this year in the borough, he believes that larger profits will bo made and that investors will feel more encouraged to enter the market, being assured that the activity in the realty world is proceeding along conservative lines.

THIS MAGAZINE SIX MONTHS FOR ONE CENT

If you are interested in owning your own home in the suburbs you will want to read our new magazine,

The Home Maker.

THE HOME MAKER is a handsome little monthly magazine, well printed on good paper and beautifully illustrated, and is devoted entirely to the advantages of suburban living.

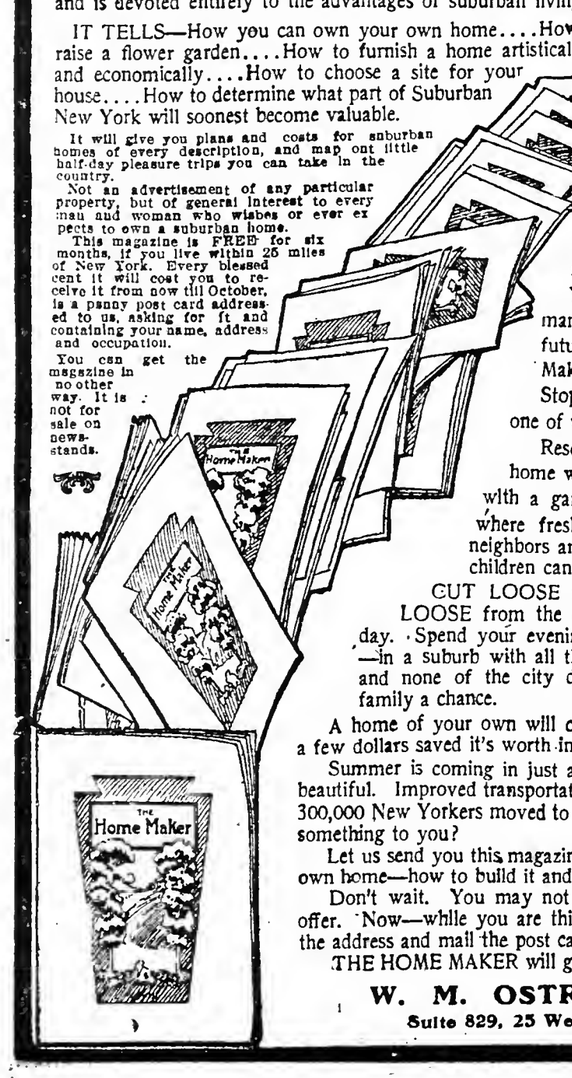
IT TELLS—How you can own your own home....How to raise a flower garden....How to furnish a home artistically and economically....How to choose a site for your house....How to determine what part of Suburban New York will soonest become valuable.

It will give you plans and costs for suburban homes of every description, and map out little half-day pleasure trips you can take in the country.

Not an advertisement of any particular property, but of general interest to every man and woman who wishes or ever expects to own a suburban home.

This magazine is FREE for six months, if you live within 25 miles of New York. Every blessed cent it will cost you to receive it from now till October, is a penny post card addressed to us, asking for it and containing your name, address and occupation.

You can get the magazine in no other way. It is not for sale on newsstands.



OWN YOUR OWN HOME

YOU want to own your own home some day, don't you?

You have planned that home—every city man has—and it has always loomed up as a future bright possibility.

Make a resolution to-day.

Stop building air castles and begin to build one of wood, brick and mortar.

Resolve to own a home in the suburbs—a home with a yard of green grass about it, a yard with a garden for vegetables and flowers, a home where fresh pure air circulates freely, where your neighbors are your friends, where you, your wife and children can grow strong and healthy.

CUT LOOSE from your stuffy box of a flat—CUT LOOSE from the dusty, noisy city which pens you up all day. Spend your evenings, Sundays and holidays in the country—in a suburb with all the city advantages you are accustomed to and none of the city disadvantages that you hate. Give your family a chance.

A home of your own will cost you less than you think. If you have a few dollars saved it's worth investigating.

Summer is coming in just a few weeks now, and the suburbs will be beautiful. Improved transportation is making the suburbs accessible. Over 300,000 New Yorkers moved to the suburbs last year. Doesn't this suggest something to you?

Let us send you this magazine for six months. It tells how to own your own home—how to build it and how to enjoy it.

Don't wait. You may not see this ad. again. You may forget this offer. Now—while you are thinking about it—tear out the ad. and keep the address and mail the post card to-day.

$25 A LOT — BUY ACRES! BUY CHEAP! DO IT NOW! — $50 A LOT

Ask the Farmers and the Market Gardeners of Long Island

Is there any money in buying acres? They are all rich.

On Tuesday, April 9th, we saw the parting snowstorm of a long and severe winter. We are actually at the dawn of spring, and from this hour we will find sunshine and the splendor of the green fields, the earth upturned everywhere to receive the seeds which decorate the fertile fields of Long Island.

150,000 people this spring will enjoy the comforts and pleasures of Suburban Life, suburban to New York, who were occupants of Flats and Apartment Houses a year ago. The great activity in Real Estate during the year 1906 induced them to either buy or rent in the suburbs, and before another year a greater number will emigrate. Electric car lines are building in every direction on Long Island; Rapid Transit Trains are increased, and the great reading, wage-earning public are bound to get out and breathe the air and enjoy the sunlight where life looks sweeter and homes more happy. Every paper published in Greater New York has repeatedly stated in its columns, "Long Island is the one and only place to live. The best channel to place your money."

The Real Estate Transfer of Greater New York Last Year Was One Billion of Dollars.

THE INVESTMENT ON LONG ISLAND WAS $600,000,000.

BELIEVE US DEAR READERS, TO-DAY WE ARE ACTUALLY AT THE BEGINNING.

350,000 people drop ed into New York last year. An equal amount will be ushered in this year. Some of them building, buying or renting. It means New York Surburban Real Estate will improve from 20 to 50 per cent before April 1st, 1908. Have you a desire to ma.e money? Make it quick?

LET US LEAD YOU INTO DAYLIGHT, INTO THE PROMISED LAND OF PROSPERITY.

We do not ask you $500 to $1,000 a lot, or $1,000 to $2,500 per acre, but will during this sale, show you one-half acre plots (10 city lots) at a sum less than you can buy a lot in the suburbs for.

$5 Down Monthly — $250 One-Half Acre (10 Lots) — $5 Down Monthly

Enough land to raise your own vegetables, raise your own chickens, keep a cow and a horse; if necessary; a spot large enough to receive all the pleasures nature can give. Buy the land on your terms and in a few years build to suit yourself.

Any Wage Earner Can Buy—Any Investor Can Purchase.

You are not giving up your life's earnings to pay for it. It is within your means and just what you want. Located in the most natural and fertile field of Long Island.

LONG ISLAND ROAD'S PLANS FOR FUTURE

President Peters Looks for Operation of Tunnels in 1909—His Estimate as to Time They Will Save—Probable Growth of Population.

By RALPH PETERS, President Long Island Railroad.

As a general proposition, the part which the Long Island Railroad Company is playing in the development of Long Island is a very important one, and its managers appreciate the responsibility devolving upon them to provide adequate facilities for the prompt and safe movement of the additional traffic incidental to the large increase in population which has already come to Long Island and the greater increase which is to come in the immediate future.

If all goes well, the tunnels under the East River, the station of the Pennsylvania Railroad in Manhattan, and a large part of the improvements of our own system should be completed and in operation during the year 1909. This, of course, entails a great amount of hard work on the part of those in charge of these properties.

The Long Island Railroad Company is enlarging its terminal facilities for both passenger and freight traffic, constructing additional running tracks, new stations, and freight delivery yards. It is also adding new equipment, and its train mileage is being increased yearly to take care of the growth in population, leaving nothing undone to meet the reasonable demands of its patrons, and, following the general policy of the great Pennsylvania system, will continue to provide facilities for the future.

When the great tunnels and terminal improvements shall have been completed, those who are fortunate enough to live on Long Island, or who shall have been farsighted enough to appreciate the future development, will be able to save more than thirty minutes a day between any point on Long Island and Herald Square, and as much as forty minutes a day between points on the island and Wall Street, via Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, and the Battery Subway.

During 1906, the Long Island Railroad carried 22,000,000 people, which was an increase of 18.8 per cent. over 1905. It carried 334,825,000 passengers one mile—an increase of 22 per cent. over the previous year, while its passenger train mileage increased 16.3 per cent. and its passenger car milesge 19.5 per cent. During the same period statistics show that 4,836 dwelling houses, 282 stores, 15 factories, and 178 miscellaneous buildings were constructed in villages along the line of the road outside of Brooklyn and Long Island City.

The ratios of acreage to population in the various boroughs of New York City, as compared with the corresponding ratios on Long Island, make an instructive exhibit. I believe that the figures, taking out cemeteries, parks, &c., would reveal something like the following:

Manhattan	160 persons to the acro
Brooklyn	42 persons to the acre
Bronx	15 persons to the acre
Queens	4 persons to the acre
Richmond	2 persons to the acre
Nassau	.5 persons to the acre
Suffolk	.2 persons to the acre

With the natural increase in population and the crowding of the business section of Manhattan further to the northward, we believe it is safe to estimate that in ten years there will be fifteen persons to the acre in Queens, one person to the acre in Nassau, and about one person to each three acres in Suffolk. At this ratio of increase the population in round numbers at the end of the ten-year period will have increased in Queens from 230,000 to 1,000,000, in Nassau from 75,000 to 100,000, and in Suffolk from 80,000 to 120,000.

NEW THEORY OF CITY'S GROWTH

History Upsets All Old Notions About the Northward Movement.

FUTURE OF QUEENS ASSURED

Student of Past Says New York Has Always Moved Eastward When It Could.

It will soon be three hundred years since the foundation of New Amsterdam, and in all that time the great city that has grown from the "little settlement in the fort" has shown one constant and uninterrupted tendency as to its growth—the tendency to develop eastward. I am aware that many New Yorkers suppose that the city's natural growth is northward, rather than eastward; but a close study of the city's history must convince one that this is an error, and that the real movement of New York's population is toward the east. The fact has deep significance at the present time.

The first fort, which contained the church, the school, and most of the houses of the original settlers, was built on the site of the new Custom House, facing what is now Bowling Green. Did the town begin to grow northward? Not at all. The first houses outside the fort were to the east, along the East River shore; and Broadway was laid out half a century later than Marketfield, Bridge, Stone, and other streets to the eastward of the fort. There are four pictures extant showing the town as it looked during the seventeenth century, and all of them show a preponderance of buildings east of the fort, with only a very few along the line of Broadway. In 1644 the town contained seventy-five houses outside the fort, and of these only five were west of Broadway.

Even when Broadway was laid out, it only extended to Wall Street; while "the Wall," built for defense against the Indians, was soon passed by the extension of the town's population along the East River. When Broadway finally grew up to the Commons, where the Post Office now stands, history repeated itself; for the main artery immediately took an eastward turn, and it was the line of Park Row, not of Broadway, that carried the city's growth further on. So it continued in the early days. Pearl Street was the fashionable street, as well as the chief business street, long before Broadway became prominent. The Bowery was the main artery of traffic out of the city long before upper Broadway or the Bloomingdale Road were thought of. Harlem and Yorkville preceded Bloomingdale and Manhattanville by decades. Always more populous, the east side has also always been more fashionable, exactly as it is to-day. Not even the millions of dollars spent by the Tweed ring in making Riverside Drive and the Boulevard could overcome the tendency of the average New Yorker to move eastward when he built his home.

It was Third Avenue that had the first street cars to the north; Eighth Avenue had to wait twenty years. The Third Avenue elevated road was finished first, because it was most needed. The Harlem Railroad, in the old days, carried twenty passengers for every one that used the "Dolly Varden" route along the Hudson. The first country club of which we have any record, the Belvedere of Revolutionary times, faced the East River, not the Hudson. George Washington's residence was in Cherry Street. And the evidence might be piled up indefinitely. New York has from the first "heard the East a-callin'," and now is hearing it more than ever, but with this difference: As far cast as New York could grow, it grew; but there was always a limit, fixed by the width of the Island of Manhattan, and limited by the width of the East River.

This year we are changing all that. The tunnels and bridges, that will be opened one after another, under and over the East River, will once more permit New York to resume its naturally eastward growth, and the results promise to be the most important shifting of population that has taken place in the entire history of the city. Already the centre of the city has moved to the section of Manhattan Island lying between Twenty-third and Fifty-ninth Streets; here are the busiest marts, the largest manufacturing establishments, and, for the present, the densest population. For all time this part of the city will have the densest day population, though its night population is sure to decrease as business replaces housings.

Just as sure as there is a science of population, just so surely will the new growth, the twentieth century growth of New York, take its origin from this centre, and move eastward under and over the East River. Already the management of the Rickert-Finlay Realty Company has ascertained by actual test that its four properties at East River Heights, Broadway-Flushing, Douglas Manor, and Westmoreland are more easily reached from this centre, say from the corner of Thirty-third Street and Fourth Avenue, where there is a Subway station, than are localities equally distant in Harlem or the Bronx, where the cost of land is much greater. This advantage will soon be accentuated by the opening of the Belmont tunnels under the East River; then will follow in succession the four new tracks of the Long Island Road, and the eight tracks which the Blackwell's Island Bridge will accommodate.

TWO-FAMILY HOUSES.

Profitable Form of Investment—Ratio Between House and Ground.

One of the strongest demands in the renting market is for two-family houses. These are preferred to flats, although the rents, as a rule, are higher. Thousands of such houses have been built in Brooklyn, the suburbs being studded with them, and there is no indication of a falling off in their popularity. Many of the houses of this class now being built in certain of the suburban districts are much more elaborate and expensive in the character of their construction than the general run of such buildings. In some neighborhoods as high as fifty dollars a month is obtained for a floor of seven or eight rooms and bath in one of the better type of two-family houses. William E. Harmon of Wood, Harmon & Co., in discussing recently the subject of opportunity in real estate for the small investor, expressed the opinion that the two-family house was the best possible investment for the young married man.

Mr. Wood was asked what kind of a house it would be advisable to put up on a lot worth, say, $1,000. He replied that the question went to the very root of the real estate problem. One feature of realty development in Brooklyn, he added, was the wide disproportion in most cases between the cost of the land and that of the building erected upon it. Heretofore in Brooklyn, he said, there had been much more land than there was demand for. A condition resulting from this was that the land was so cheap that the building upon it on the average cost at least three times as much as the land. This, however, is gradually changing. The land values in the borough are steadily rising, and will continue to rise until the difference in the value of land and buildings has been adjusted, as in older New York.

DEMAND FOR ACREAGE.

Valuations Steadily Advancing—High Prices for Shore Front.

Robert T. Stokes of the firm of Stokes & Knowles, recent buyers of the Continental and Phenix Buildings, at Court and Montague Streets, is a firm believer in the real estate future of Brooklyn and Long Island. He is confident that the present upward tendency of things will continue indefinitely.

"The outlook for Long Island suburban properties," said he, "never seemed brighter than at the present time. The valuations are steadily advancing all along the line. There is a great demand for acreage along rapid transit lines. From our viewpoint, it seems that the boom in Long Island real estate is only just beginning, and that when the subways which are now nearing completion are opened the most optimistic of men will be surprised. We are having great demands made upon us for choice acreage properties. Shore front properties are very scarce, and bring almost any prices the owners may put upon them. We expect that the acreage business this Spring will eclipse that of any similar period in the last few years."

To Improve 39th Street Ferry.

A change that is being looked forward to with expectation by South Brooklyn and the suburbs to the southward is the fuller operation of the Thirty-ninth Street ferry by the city. Bigger and faster boats and an improved service generally on this line will, it is believed, take thousands of people out of the daily Brooklyn Bridge crush. Bay Ridge is also urging vigorously that the city establish a ferry between the Battery and Sixty-fifth Street.

BAYSIDE-FLUSHING

Bayside, Borough of Queens, N. Y. City.

Following the success of its Lawrence Manor, Penwood, Vista Lawn and Bay view developments, the McKNIGHT REALTY CO. is now preparing the greatest and last of the undeveloped properties of Bayside, the most popular residential section on the North Shore of Long Island.

Bayside-Flushing, this new development, parallels the Long Island R. R. from the Bayside station to the Auburndale station, and has a frontage of about a mile on Broadway, the main thoroughfare on the North Shore, which is to be widened to a 100 foot wooden block parkway, from Flushing to the City Line.

To those who wish country comfort with its outdoor sports, both Winter and Summer, and yet desire city conveniences Bayside-Flushing will stand out to them as the ideal homesite. It is now surrounded by many beautiful dwellings of wealthy residents, and you will know your neighbors before you build your home was, before the consolidation, a part of the old town of Flushing. It is in the center of the most popular residential section within the city limits, on beautiful Little Neck Bay, with its yacht and golf clubs, boating, bathing and fishing, and yet is only 30 minutes now from Herald Square, which time will soon be halved on completion of the many improvements under way.

$200,000 is now being spent to make this the greatest of all the Long Island developments from the standpoint of beauty as well as comfort. Streets will be macadamized, and cement sidewalks, water, gas and electricity, installed.

Fifty new homes for as many different parties have already been contracted for on this new property, and its success bids fair to excel that of the former developments of Bayside.

By buying now you may discount the many improvements of transportation facilities and save the difference between the higher values that are sure to come and the present low prices, at the same time securing an ideal spot for a home for you and your family.

Applications for reservations will be filed in order received. Special concessions will be made to first buyers.

Dont's Affecting Real Estate Investments.

¶ Don't buy property fifteen, twenty-five, thirty or more miles out when there are large undeveloped areas lying closer in. New York City, as all cities, grows from its center outward, hence the closer lying sections must be the first occupied for the housing of population before the remote sections can be affected. A profitable real estate investment is one which can be re-sold with reasonable quickness and not one that must be held for years.

¶ Don't buy property without first considering for what it is available. If it is so located that it is quickly available for business and living room, it has a lot value. If it is so located that it is only available for market gardening it has only market garden value. Don't be fooled into believing that a market garden is a lot.

¶ Don't buy property remote from a five-cent transportation line. No section of the city has ever developed rapidly or produced the expected profit except that it can be reached for a five-cent fare and without change of cars.

¶ Don't buy property dependent solely on a trolley, but be sure that said property is located near to a rapid transit line. A five-cent fare line and a rapid transit line are both essential to a rapid inflow of population which is essential to a rapid rise in values.

¶ Don't buy property in outlying sections and remote from the civilizing influences of churches, schools, stores and society. If you do you will find that the home seeker will not select your site for his home and the property purchased will remain unoccupied and unprofitable.

¶ Don't buy property except that it is laid out in accordance with the topographical map of the city. If it is not so laid out you may find the street lines will be changed and the improvements provided destroyed. All of this will largely destroy the value of your holding.

¶ Don't buy property except that it is brought to the grades established by the topographical department of the city, otherwise again your improvements are destroyed and your property is found to be either on a high elevation or in a hole, both of which conditions are very much against the intrinsic value of your property and its desirability as a site for building.

¶ Don't buy property that is not provided with a complete and adequate sewerage system. Any section where a considerable number of houses are to be erected and which is dependent upon cesspools for sewerage must quickly become contaminated and entail doctors' bills, and very likely undertakers' bills. You cannot overestimate the importance of this precaution. It will not do for you to consider that you are buying the property only to resell and not to live upon, as you will find no market for your property if the section is unhealthful and dangerous to life.

¶ Don't buy property in a section that is not restricted in accordance with the location and surrounding conditions. Property located in a territory with a tenement house future should not be restricted to a high class residential section. And likewise the reverse. In either case the future values of your property are largely destroyed.

¶ The conclusions to be drawn from the foregoing dont's are naturally as follows:

¶ Make your investments as near to the heart of the city as possible, keeping in mind the class of property you are desirous of purchasing.

¶ Make your investments where you are most convenient to both trolley and train service; where you are most convenient to schools, churches, stores and consequently a built-up community; where you are provided with the most complete improvements which should include sewers, conduits for electric light and telephone wires, the property thoroughly graded, the streets provided with paving and curbs and gutters, sidewalks, water and gas mains, shade trees and shrubbery. The sewering and paving should be done in accordance with the city's specifications and under a city inspector. You are thus relieved from all future expenses in the way of improvements which in many cases, where left unprovided, cost you more than the original cost of your lots.

¶ In this connection we take the liberty of calling your attention to our development. Here you will find the closest development of a high-class nature to be found in the city.

¶ You will find both trolley and train service adjacent and convenient.

¶ You will find the property laid out in accordance with the topographical plans of the city, and likewise brought to the topographical grades established by the city, thus insuring perfect surface drainage.

¶ You will find a complete sewer system being installed.

¶ You will find conduits being laid for electric light and telephone wires, thus eliminating all unsightly poles and overhead wires.

¶ You will find the best granolithic sidewalks, the best granolithic curbs and gutters to be had.

¶ You will find the streets paved in accordance with the city's specifications.

¶ You will find it lying in the southerly part of Flushing, with Flushing's built-up section extending practically on three sides, with a public school within two short blocks; with a number of splendid churches; with all kinds of stores for trading facilities, and with the best society, making it one of the most pleasant places of residence in the Borough of Queens.

¶ You will find it adjoining Kissena Lake Park, a park possessing more natural beauty than any other of the city's park holdings; with Kissena Lake in its center and with fine golf links on its easterly side. In fact, nothing can be desired in connection with this property as a good residential proposition that it does not possess or is not being provided.

¶ This means its rapid up-building, and consequently a rapid rise in its real estate values, making it an exceptional opportunity for a home buyer or for an investor. Lots from $650 up sold on easy terms, or liberal discount for cash. Also houses for sale or built to order. Terms easy.

Uptown McAdoo Tunnels Probably the First to Be Operated—All Bridges and Tubes Now Building to Be Finished in Three Years.

In New York and its suburbs, probably more than in any other city in the world, real estate improvement, real estate development, and real estate valuation are all dependent to a very large extent on available transit facilities. Hence it is that within the past decade the insistent cry from all boroughs has been "Rapid Transit!" Crowded from the older sections of the city by the constant and tremendous increase in commercial activity, the ever growing population has been forced out and out toward the suburbs, until there are houses in sections ten miles from the City Hall, more people than lived in what was the entire City of New York fifty years ago.

The transportation of business men and women between their homes and their places of business has come to be regarded as New York's greatest problem. With the main portion of the greater city an island, boundaries of which are incapable of change, this whole question naturally becomes a question of interborough communication and of communication with the New Jersey side of the North River. With this granted the construction of tunnels under, and of bridges over the two rivers that encircle Manhattan, becomes of paramount importance, and it may be said that not until the rivers are spanned by a sufficient number of bridges and their beds pierced by a sufficient number of tunnels will the great transit problem be anywhere near solution. Increased transit facilities within the boroughs are of importance, and not to be disregarded. As parts of the interborough systems of communication and transportation they are fundamental necessities. Without the lines reaching beyond the rivers, however, internal transit improvements would be of little use in solving the problem and would have but slight effect, comparatively, on real estate values in and about the city.

Skyscrapers have risen to great heights within the last ten years; suburbs have sprung up and real estate values have been enhanced. Surface railway mileage within the boroughs has increased; a subway system of large capacity has been built—almost entirely within one borough—and the service on the elevated lines has been enormously improved. It is a noteworthy fact, however, that interborough communication has not kept pace with other improvements. New York City to-day has but two bridges across the East River, only one of which is used to anything like full capacity. Twenty years ago it had that one bridge. The full significance of this does not occur to many people. It means, briefly, that the most important branch of the transit problem has been sadly neglected, and that within twenty years the actual interborough transportation facilities have increased not more than 25 per cent., while there has been a demand for a full doubling of the capacity of the Brooklyn Bridge, and a duplication of the East River facilities on the other side of Manhattan Island.

Weak Point in City's Transit.

Here is the situation to-day. The somewhat antiquated and greatly overburdened Brooklyn Bridge used to its full capacity as limited by its old and totally inadequate terminal facilities; the Williamsburg Bridge used to the capacity of its trolley tracks, with the elevated section neglected and rusting; no tunnels under the East River; no tunnels under and no bridges over the North River. To the north, it must be said, there has been a great improvement, and to the bridges that span the Harlem the Bronx owes its prosperity and growth

While it is true that the important part of the transit problem has been neglected, the neglect is hardly chargeable to the authorities now in office or to their immediate predecessors. While the cry of "Rapid transit" is still being raised everywhere to an extent that would lead a stranger to believe that absolutely nothing had been done of recent years to relieve the situation, the fact is that much has been done and that within the next five years, or perhaps within four, the interborough transportation facilities will be not only doubled, but quadrupled, and that without a single new improvement being authorized or the construction of a single line that is not already well advanced.

But the busy New Yorker does not realize this. "Sand hogs" may burrow twenty-four hours a day, steel mills may run overtime to prepare the material, and engineers may pore over plans till "the cows come home," but while there is no new subway opened and no new bridge accessible the New York business man seldom, if ever, thinks of such things.

There are no less than ten distinct improvements well under way, each of which will have a decided effect on the interborough transportation problem and a consequent effect on real estate in outlying sections of the city or in the suburbs.

Pennsylvania's Tunnels.

Of first importance, though it will not by any means be the first improvement put into operation, is the Pennsylvania Railroad's system of tunnels, its new terminals, and its direct connection with the Long Island Railroad lines. When completed this system will bring every suburb on the Pennsylvania lines in New Jersey, as well as all those on the Long Island road, many minutes nearer the centre of Manhattan.

The improvement is naturally divided into two parts, with the great depot covering four whole city blocks as the dividing point. The depot itself is no small undertaking, and, when finished, it will undoubtedly alter the section of Manhattan in which it stands. Seventh and Ninth Avenues, Thirty-first and Thirty-third Streets, must of necessity become thoroughfares of greater importance than they ever have been; large business places, theatres, and hotels will probably be built close to the depot, and thus, little by little, those who now reside in the old houses about the big hole in the ground will be driven out and the district change completely from one of residences to one of business places.

As far as the tunnels under the North River are concerned, the Pennsylvania's improvement is almost completed. The two parallel tubes have been bored through for many months, and the interior steel work is all in place. Several parties have walked from New York to New Jersey through one tube, to come back through the other dry shod. The work in progress at present is the arduous task of sinking iron pillars beneath the tubes, at distances of fifteen feet, down to bed rock. These pillars will be bolted to the under part of each tube so that there will not be the slightest chance of the tube sagging. To all intents and purposes the rails will rest on bed rock.

On the other side of the North River another gigantic tunneling operation is under way. From four sets of headings a series of tunnels is being cut through Bergen Hill. Emerging from the river tunnels at Weehawken, the Pennsylvania trains will run through the Bergen Hill tunnels, across the Hackensack Meadows to Harrison, N. J., where they will join the main line. All possible speed is being made on this work, work being carried on from both ends and from the middle of the tunnel line.

Under the East River, where the Pennsylvania is to have four tubes—two for its own trains and two for the Long Island Railroad trains—the progress made has not been nearly so rapid, and there is little doubt that the operation of the whole improvement will have to wait the completion of this section of the work. Boring was begun from the Manhattan side about a year before the "sand hogs" commenced to dig under the river from the Long Island side. The river is 4,000 feet across. At present the borings have been carried about 1,200 feet from the Manhattan shaft and between 400 and 500 feet from the Long Island City shaft. As each shaft is comparatively close to the river's edge, this leaves, approximately, 2,400 feet to be bored. The tunneling work, however, has progressed much more rapidly of late, and it is expected that it will be completed in January of next year.

Tunneling under Manhattan Island, at a deep level, has proved more difficult than at first supposed. From the North River to the site of the station rapid progress has been made. To the east of Seventh Avenue, however, and particularly between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, quicksands have been encountered and have caused delay. They have also necessitated doing part of the work by the open-cut method. It is asserted by the Pennsylvania's representatives, however, that this section of the work will be finished at least as soon as the other sections.

Unless unforeseen hindrances occur the whole Pennsylvania improvement will be completed in 1909 to all intents and purposes. It will probably be put in operation in the early part of 1910. Its cost will approximate $100,000,000.

The McAdoo Enterprises.

Next to the Pennsylvania improvement in importance, and, in fact, of greater importance in some respects, is what has come to be known as the McAdoo system. The value of these lines to Jersey suburbanites can hardly be overestimated and it is not unreasonable to assert that they will entirely change the conditions that prevail in respect to passenger traffic that crosses the North River. As an argument against granting the McAdoo franchises the point was raised that the building of those lines would result in numerous New Yorkers becoming residents of the State of New Jersey. Such will undoubtly prove to be the case.

The McAdoo system, like the Pennsylvania, is best considered in two divisions—the "upper" and the "lower" lines. The two are distinct on the Manhattan side of the North River, though joined together with a loop on the other side.

Both tubes of the upper system are completed with the steel work and concrete in place. From the foot of Morton Street, where these tubes touch the Manhattan shore, a subway is being constructed under Christopher Street to Ninth and thence up Sixth Avenue. The shore work has progressed very rapidly, although started long after the river boring. On excellent authority it may be stated that trains will be running from Fourteenth Street and Sixth Avenue, under the river, to Hoboken in October, unless the newly begun legal proceedings, instituted by the New Jersey officials, prevent.

The lower division was begun a long time after the upper and an effort has been made by Mr. McAdoo and his associates to make a record-breaking job of it. The borings have been made from the Jersey side in both tubes and have proceeded to a point just about half way across the river. Rock has recently been encountered which will probably retard the work to some extent and no one connected with the enterprise is willing to hazard an opinion as to just when that division will be ready for operation. The work of boring under Fulton and Cortlandt Streets has already been begun. The foundation for the gigantic office building above the station is rapidly being sunk. A fair estimate is that the work will be finished within eighteen months. With the possibility of a legal obstacle to overcome, however, a conservative guess would set the opening day for the lower McAdoo tunnels as about Jan. 1, 1909. By that time, too, the extension subway under Sixth Avenue to Thirty-third Street, which connects with the upper tubes, will also be finished and the northern terminal building, which is to be built on the block on which the Manhattan Theatre now stands, will likewise be completed.

The year 1910 then, at the latest, will see three sets of tunnels, each consisting of two tubes, in operation under the North River, with high speed electric trains composed of cars of the latest and most commodious type. The McAdoo cars will have side doors, operated by compressed air. The Pennsylvania lines will have larger cars and they will have to be new on account of the electrical equipment. Accurate computation of the number of passengers that will be carried on the lines mentioned is altogether out of the question, but it is very clear that within three or four years the facilities for reaching Jersey and its many suburban towns will be increased threefold at the very least.

Work Under East River.

Aside from the Pennsylvania's four-tube system under the East River, what is known as the Battery tunnel is entitled to consideration first by virtue of its being an extension of the present Subway system and a direct means of transit between the Bronx and Brooklyn. Considered in relation to the whole transit scheme of the greater city, it is every bit as important as the present Subway was at the time it was opened to the public.

The tunnel lines, two in number, leave the main line of the Subway a little south of the present Bowling Green station and run to a deeper level, turning toward the east. There are two tubes under the river bottom, and the lines strike the Brooklyn shore at the foot of Joralemon Street. There is a subway under that street to the Borough Hall and up Fulton Street and Flatbush Avenue to the Atlantic Avenue station of the Long Island Railroad. The road is four tracked from the Borough Hall to the railroad station.

It is now several weeks since the headings met in the tubes. All the boring, therefore, has been done, and as in all cases of construction of this sort, the steel work has been put in as fast as the shield through which the "sand hogs" work progressed. The cement is being put in rapidly and the other finishing work is being done as quickly as possible.

The completion of this improvement means more for the cause of interborough transportation than appears at first glance. While the system will not reach any great part of Brooklyn, it will feed all the Brooklyn Rapid Transit lines because a passenger will be able to ride right into Brooklyn for 5 cents and then take the Brooklyn Rapid Transit cars for another 5 cents, making the same total of fare as is charged now when the point of change is the Manhattan terminal of the Brooklyn Bridge. It is not improbable that the corner of Atlantic and Flatbush Avenues will become as important a transfer point as there is in the greater city.

Then, too, the connection with the Long Island Railroad at the point where that company's lines are to run under ground is a distinct advantage. In any event passengers on the Subway bound for suburban points on the Long Island Railroad will be able to change on the same floor without going up or down stairs. There has been no official talk of a physical connection between the two lines, but it is by no means out of the question, and it may be that some sort of an agreement will be made not at once, but eventually, whereby the Long Island Railroad's electrical suburban trains will be run from the Atlantic Avenue station under the East River and to the Brooklyn Bridge terminal.

Pushing Belmont Tubes.

Another under-river tunnel system is being built further up the river which is almost as important as the Battery tunnel. It is the so-called Belmont tunnel from the foot of East Forty-second Street to Long Island City. The franchise for the road antedates that of any tunnel in operation or in course of construction, and there has been some doubt expressed as to its validity. On this account court proceedings may hinder the work and delay the opening.

There are two tubes in the Belmont system and they make a loop in Long Island City at a point very close to the Pennsylvania-Long Island connection. It is said to be the intention of the promoters of the enterprise to use the tunnel in connection with the Belmont surface lines in Queens County. But little is known of the progress of the work, it having been the policy of the Belmont interests to maintain secrecy regarding it, owing probably to the fact that the construction, under the terms of the old Steinway franchise, should have been finished last January.

The latest authentic reports obtainable are to the effect that the headings have not met in one of the tubes; that there is a portion of the river bottom, near Man-o'-War Rock, still to be bored through. If this is the case, Mr. Belmont's prophecy that the road would be in operation in June is incapable of fulfillment. Even if the borings have gone through within the last week or so it is still improbable that the road can be put into operation before the late Fall. The chances are that the Belmont Tunnel will not open until the McAdoo northern tubes and the Battery Tunnel have been in operation at least several weeks.

In the announced plans of the owners this system does not offer enormous relief to the transit conditions at present prevailing, but by its peculiar situation the system is capable of becoming of the greatest importance. Its value lies in the fact that it reaches to the very wall of the present Subway on the east, with a physical connection the work of only a few hours, and right into the yards of the Long Island system on the west where a similar connection with the whole Long Island system could be made in a very short time. In the course of time it will become an important feeder to the Long Island Road, and there is every likelihood of its being made an integral part of the Manhattan Subway system through connection with the present line and the proposed Lexington Avenue subway. The announced intention is to run single cars, probably those of the Queens County lines, through the tunnel, but the time will doubtless arrive when trains like those in the Subway will be operated over the line.

With the consideration of the Belmont tunnel the list of under river lines about Manhattan is exhausted. There is, however, the all important matter of over-river bridges to be considered, and while the activity of the authorities along this line has been confined to the East River, with a Hudson, or North River, bridge still in the "discussion" stage, the bridges already under construction will mean much to the cause of transit between the boroughs.

Delays on Manhattan Bridge.

The caissons and piers for the Manhattan Bridge, which will span the river a little to the north of the Brooklyn Bridge and between it and the Williamsburg Bridge, were put in place several years ago, and work is now in progress on the anchorage. In the ordinary course the steel work would now be plainly visible from the bridge to the south. That such is not the case is due to the fact that the contract was held up and that a small strike delayed the work. In the latter part of June or early in July, however, work on the towers ought to be underway. The steel is being prepared in the shops, and it is calculated that once the steel is on hand very rapid strides will be made, as the contractors are already far behind time.

Under the contract the bridge must be finished by December 15, 1909. There will probably be an allowance of four or five months made on account of the strike, and it may be one or two months after that before the bridge is ready for public use. A fair estimate, therefore, places the opening time in June, 1910. The work of condemning the land for the approaches is about to commence and the bridge when finished will nearly, though not quite, duplicate the facilities offered by the Brooklyn Bridge. There will be tracks for elevated trains, but no arrangements have been made as yet for the connection of those tracks with the trunk lines in Brooklyn or Manhattan. These tracks will probably be used solely in connection with the so-called subway loop. In addition, the bridge will have a complement of trolley tracks similar to those on the Williamsburg Bridge.

Blackwell's Island Span.

Much further advanced than the Manhattan structure is the Blackwell's Island Bridge, from the foot of Fifty-ninth Street over the mid-river island to Queens. Its steel towers have already risen to their full height on either bank, and the span of the bridge that extends over the island is about completed. The main sections of the bridge, built on the cantilever plan, are extending out over the water a few feet more every day. Junctures will be formed within a comparatively few months, and then the finishing work on the bridge itself, the laying out of approaches, and the putting in place of the trolley tracks will proceed rapidly. The bridge will probably open, taking a conservative view of it, about January, 1909.

As a means of opening up new sections of the greater city and deflecting travel from the already greatly overcrowded north and south transit lines in Manhattan, the Blackwell's Island Bridge is as important as any improvement now under way. It will develop greatly and rapidly that section of Queens to the north of Long Island City, and it will serve to change the nature of the territory in Manhattan which it immediately taps. With the Fifty-ninth Street crosstown cars running the width of Manhatan and then over into Queens, many things are possible, and while real estate values about Astoria and just south of there may have risen rapidly in price during the last few years, there is every prospect of a boom when the Blackwell's Island Bridge opens.

Brooklyn Bridge Improvements.

It would scarcely be in keeping to leave the subject of bridges without mentioning the intended improvement of the terminal in Manhattan of the Brooklyn Bridge, which will add greatly to the capacity of that old and overburdened structure. The intention is to erect as rapidly as possible a temporary terminal in which the surface cars may be accommodated on a sub-surface level, leaving two floors of the terminal proper for the accommodation of the elevated trains. The plans have been drawn for this work and the bids will be asked for within a few days. When the work is done, in approximately eighteen months, it will be possible to run through elevated trains to all sections of Brooklyn during the rush hours and the trolley cars will be run more speedily and be more accessible than they are at present. Similar plans for the improvement of the terminal in Brooklyn have been submitted to the authorities and will probably be carried out. At that end of the bridge it is proposed to carry the trolley cars on the elevated structure for two or three blocks, in order that congestion on the surface may be completely done away with.

Subway Connecting Bridges.

The proposed subway loop between the East River bridges is also of great importance. This loop will extend from the Manhattan terminal of the Brooklyn Bridge, under Centre Street to Delancey Street, or, rather, to the extension of that thoroughfare which the city proposes to open, and under Delancey Street to the Williamsburg Bridge. The loop will also have a spur running under Canal Street to the new Manhattan Bridge. By it the three bridges will be directly connected on the Manhattan side.

On the Brooklyn side there will be a subway extending much further from the water's edge. It will probably follow the lines of Broadway, Williamsburg; Stuyvesant and Lafayette Avenues, and the extension of Flatbush Avenue. The detailed plans for the Brooklyn loop have not been finished as yet, but bids were received last Thursday for the first section of the Manhattan loop, and the contracts for the other sections will be let probably before June 1.

Trains of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company will be operated in the loop subway, and possibly those of some other company as well, as the contract for operation is not to be let until the road is built. It can be seen at once that the loop will greatly increase the facilities for reaching Brooklyn and Williamsburg, and it will materially relieve the present congestion in lower Manhattan. It will permit the use of all three bridges to the limit of their capacity for elevated trains.

These, then, are the ten improvements that will be completed within the next five years and which will not only go a long way toward solving the transit problem, but will also result in great development of outlying sections and a consequent boom in the real estate business. These, too, are the improvements on which work is being carried on every day practically without the average New Yorker thinking anything about it. With the constant cry for "Rapid transit" ringing in his ears what visitor would believe that about $200,000,000 was now being expended on work that will strike at the very heart of the transit trouble of the city?

REAL ESTATE — LONG ISLAND — REAL ESTATE

FOR A COUNTRY HOME

LONG ISLAND The Land of Homes

The nearest and most accessible suburban residential section to New York City. Its desirability as a location for a Summer or Permanent Home is fully attested by the tremendous influx of resident population, to accommodate which such unparalleled building activity is now in progress. 4,836 dwellings were erected on Long Island during the year 1906.

Ideal Conditions for Summer and Permanent Homes.

Within Long Island's ocean and Sound bound territory (more than 400 miles of shore line) is embraced the varieties of nature which appeal to all—its beaches on the ocean side—its beautiful bays, its wooded hills, its valleys, springs and lakes. Trending east and west, it is cooled during the Summer by the prevailing south breezes from the ocean—an ideal place for those who contemplate building a home near the city of New York, affording an opportunity to live in the country and attend to business every day. Modern schools, libraries and churches of all denominations.

Accessibility—Transportation Facilities.

The electric train service of the Long Island Railroad, together with the facilities which will be afforded by the tunnels, will virtually place the LONG ISLAND HOME at the threshold of the metropolis—a few minutes' ride from any section of New York. Electric trains are operated from the new terminal station at Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, where connection will be made within one year with the subway tunnel under the East River to the Battery, in Manhattan.

HEALTH.

Pure water, perfect drainage, equable climate. The water is from artesian wells fed by subterranean streams, and much of it is bottled and shipped for use in this city.

PLEASURE.

It is unexcelled for yachting, canoeing, surf and still water bathing—hunting, golfing and automobiling—nearly 1,000 miles of perfect macadam roads

INVESTMENT OPPORTUNITIES.

The improvements in transportation facilities are having a remarkable effect on real estate values. There can be no investment made with more promising results than in real estate on Long Island. Those who wish to operate farms of from one to one hundred acres within easy reach of the best market in the world will find their opportunities on Long Island.

The Long Island Railroad Company now issues Monthly Commutation Tickets at uniform rates each month, and which are much lower than the rates formerly paid by those who commuted only during the Summer months.

"Long Island Summer Resorts," a book containing a list of hotels and boarding houses on Long Island, free on application or mailed upon receipt of 4c. postage by the General Passenger Agent.

Garden City Estates

¶ Forty years ago that far-sighted merchant prince, A. T. Stewart, with the whole country to choose from, selected the property embraced in the Garden City Estates as the ideal spot upon which to develop New York's most model and high class suburban community.

¶ The great natural advantages which impressed A. T. Stewart and induced him to spend millions, have been supplemented by the projectors of Garden City Estates with every modern improvement, until to-day the homeseeker and investor will find:

¶ Two railroad stations.
¶ Perfect sewerage system.
¶ Granolithic sidewalks and curbs.
¶ Parked boulevards.
¶ Electric light, gas, telephone and telegraph.
¶ A hotel open all the year, recognized as a rendezvous of society.
¶ Parkway lined by trees thirty years old.
¶ Beautiful drives radiating in every direction.
¶ The most classic cathedral in America.
¶ Public schools and famous preparatory schools, St. Paul's for boys, and St. Mary's for girls.
¶ Golf links famous on two continents.

¶ And all this in the very center of the highest type of social life of Long Island.

¶ Twenty-five beautiful modern homes are to be erected immediately at prices from $5,000 to $15,000, including lots, also decorations, gas and electric fixtures, range, etc., ready for occupancy. They will be built on plans to suit the purchasers who act promptly.

¶ Write for a booklet or see the property for yourself.

can be reached from Long Island City or Flatbush Avenue, Brooklyn, by train to Rockaway Park; thence a pleasant walk of about five minutes, or two minutes by trolley, will bring you to the property; there are more than 80 trains daily and the present running time is 35 minutes; when tunnels under and bridges over the East River are completed Belle Harbor will be within 20 minutes of Manhattan.

BELLE HARBOR

is located on the Rockaway coast; it has a frontage of about 5,000 feet on the Atlantic Ocean and a similar frontage on the still waters of Jamaica Bay; the beaches on ocean and bay fronts are as fine as any to be found on the Atlantic coast.

is building up very rapidly, and although a comparatively new section it has already about 40 attractive cottages on the property and a great many are in the course of erection; it is an ideal place for yachting, rowing, fishing, surf and still water bathing, as well as all outdoor sports; the Belle Harbor Yacht Club has erected a magnificent house on Jamaica Bay, and a high class fishing club house will soon be on the property.

The atmosphere at

is so invigorating and cool during the Summer months that no discomfort is felt in outdoor exercise during the day and restful and refreshing sleep is assured at night.

Great pains have been taken and no expense spared in the development of

BELLE HARBOR

It has an unsurpassed sewerage and drainage system, the water is known to be clear, fresh and healthy; all streets and sidewalks are in perfect condition, and gas and electric lighting has been arranged for.

is carefully and rigidly restricted.

BELLE HARBOR

has metropolitan Fire and Police protection; free mail delivery; public school and churches.

Prices at

ARE $600 PER LOT

and upward, which is materially lower than prices asked for other developed seashore property.

VAST SUMS FOR LOFT BUILDINGS

Year's Outlay Between 14th and 23d Streets Estimated at $15,000,000.

IMPORTERS MOVING UPTOWN

Higher Rentals Established, with No Lack of Tenants for Modern Structures.

It has been said that the time is not far distant when the whole of Manhattan will be devoted to business, and although this observation at the present time may seem rather far fetched, it certainly appears to be within the limits of possibility.

The stability of business property in Manhattan is no longer a matter of speculation; in fact, it is established beyond doubt. The difficult problem is to determine to what extent this condition will affect values in various sections in the future.

As merchants have been compelled to move for one reason or another from the lower section of the city, the natural trend has been northward, on a line with the main arteries that give easy access to their commercial homes—a movement which has practically emptied the territory below Fourteenth Street of various lines of business, and similarly in the district north of Twenty-third Street and east of Sixth Avenue, has compelled many to move to the section west of Sixth Avenue.

The section from Fourth to Fourteenth Street has displayed but little activity. A large number of buildings in this section are of modern construction and tenanted by merchants who have occupied them for a number of years, and who have not yet found it necessary to follow the "upward trend."

The area between Fourteenth and Twenty-third Streets, Fourth and Sixth Avenues, has become a new wholesale dry goods section. The rapid development of this section has resulted in an almost complete transformation of its properties. The large importers of laces, woolens, millinery, dry goods, and kindred lines have found here their "happy hunting grounds," and the enormous demand for floor space has resulted in greatly enhancing ground values and, in turn, placing rentals in new buildings upon a basis that existed only a few years ago near Fifth Avenue.

MILLIONS FOR NEW LOFTS.

The new buildings consist mostly of eleven and twelve story structures, with a few exceptions, where they have been built fifteen and sixteen stories high. It is safe to estimate that the outlay in these improvements within the last year has been in the neighborhood of $15,000,000, with rarely a vacancy upon the completion of a building.

One of the advantageous features of the situation in this district has been, and is, that lines of business which have located there have been of such character as to bring about the erection of store and loft buildings of a very high standard, giving to the section a most imposing character. It was originally supposed that this section would be occupied mainly by manufacturers of cloaks and clothing, the presumption being based upon the fact that a number of firms in this line had already located in this territory, but this has only been temporary, as, with the "upward trend," came the large importers, who, slowly but surely, are pushing the tenants above referred to into a cheaper location.

This again has caused an increase of values and rapid improvement with modern buildings almost as far north as the Thirties.

So great is the demand for space by merchants who desire to locate in this belt and whose business is of a more desirable character, that it is obvious that they will soon outbid the tenants whose business will not warrant their keeping pace with the rapidly increasing rental values, and who will, therefore, be compelled to move to other sections.

Fourth Avenue is just at the present time in a somewhat transitory state, as is also Broadway. Fifth Avenue has already been so far improved that there is hardly an available plot of any size remaining. Sixth Avenue, being given over to retail trade, with many of its properties tied up on long leases, has witnessed but comparatively few improvements.

WEST OF SIXTH AVENUE.

That section west of Sixth Avenue, between Fourteenth and Thirty-third Streets, is receiving considerable attention. Buildings of fair character have been and still continue to be erected, and are tenanted by firms who have their factories and salesrooms under one roof and who are also in good commercial standing, but who do not feel that they are warranted in paying the rentals demanded east of Sixth Avenue, but still find it absolutely necessary to be within easy access thereof. It is the same condition as prevails in the Fifth Avenue retail section, where the cross streets are being given over to the merchants whose business does not warrant their paying Fifth Avenue rentals, and where a number of concerns whose business will not permit of a Fifth Avenue location have already moved to Madison Avenue.

BROOKLYN SUBURBAN TRANSIT.

Two of the greatest of the transit improvements which have been planned for Brooklyn, and which already have sent land values skyward in certain parts of the borough, will, it is expected, be completed and in operation this Summer. These are the Brooklyn-Manhattan subway and the reconstruction of the Brighton Beach line of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit system. With the recent joining of the subway tubes under the East River and the opening of the Long Island Railroad's underground station at Flatbush and Atlantic Avenues, it is expected that subway trains from Manhattan will soon run out over the splendidly improved Atlantic Avenue division of the Long Island Road to Jamaica and beyond. The fact that there is but one station on the three-mile stretch from Flatbush Avenue to East New York makes the Atlantic Avenue improvement of more benefit to the growing districts than to older Brooklyn.

Shinnecock Hills
The Ideal of a Summer Home

The most exquisite combination of Land and Water on the whole Atlantic Seaboard, whose natural formation is one of the most remarkable on this Continent. It presents features absolutely unique—such as will appeal to the cultured and refined, who appreciate the advantages of such society as has already established its homes here on these beautiful slopes.

Beautiful View----Perfect Climate

From this noble line of Hills, the view is most enchanting. The great Peconic Bay on the one side and Shinnecock Bay on the other, with the Atlantic Ocean beyond, assure a Summer temperature that only an Ocean Island can provide; many degrees lower in fact than any other near-by resort can boast. The Winter temperature is correspondingly higher. Statistics show 70 more fine days in the year than New York boasts.

Facilities For Every Known Sport

The famous Shinnecock Hills Golf Course, and the National Golf Course, finest in the world, is now under construction; Automobile Roads skirt the entire shores for miles; yachting, boating, fishing, beach bathing, Duck, Snipe and Partridge shooting are directly at hand. Absolutely nothing left to wish for.

Villa Plots in Shinnecock Hills of all sizes—all highly restricted—are now offered for the first time.

Belle Terre Estates

Port Jefferson, Long Island

Five to 100 Acres Each

The Belle Terre Clubhouse in its every detail, from the quaint entrance with "coaching scene" wrought in the door to the great fireplaces in the hall, suggests the charm of an old English inn. An atmosphere of simplicity and quiet elegance pervades the entire place. The "hotel orchestra" is conspicuous by its absence. In its place entertainments of a highly artistic character will be provided at occasional intervals.

For those who are seeking rest amid surroundings of great natural beauty and a location of unequalled healthfulness, with such diversions as yachting, automobiling, golf, horseback riding, tennis—all free from the "crowd," with the added assurance of unquestionable social surroundings—the Belle Terre Club and the Belle Terre Estates have been designed.

The Clubhouse will be opened on June 15th. While intended especially for residents of the colony, reservations may be made by others who would like to make an experimental residence in this delightful place with a view to permanent affiliation with the colony. Rates $5 a day and up.

BROOKLYN MARKET ON SOUND FOOTING

Home Sites in Demand, with Investors Supplanting the Speculators.

NEW BUSINESS CENTRES

Growth and Expansion of the Borough Have Created New Areas of Activity.

Rounding out a record-breaking trading year, the realty interests of Brooklyn are looking forward with supreme confidenee to a continuation of the activity which developed in the local market to such a phenomenal extent last Spring. The heavy dealing did not cease with the coming of Winter, but is still on and increasing gradually with the opening of the outdoor season. But while there is every indication that there is to be no falling off in the volume of realty business in Brooklyn this year, there are unmistakable signs of a change from the feverish and, in some sections, frenzied speculation of a year ago to a conservative and more progressive condition of things. The speculators are, of course, still in evidence, but their activities are no longer the notieeable feature of the market that they were.

Everywhere the appearanees are that the man who buys merely for a quick profit, and with no idea of developing his holdings, is giving way to investors and homeseekers with plans for the improvement of their new possessions. The brokers of Brooklyn, as a rule, prefer the latter classes of buyers, on the theory that the development to whieh they are quite certain to apply themselves is calculated to lend a sustaining influence to realty values and keep healthy the tone of the market. Mere speculation, with no attending development of property, they hold, must, by a natural law, run its course sooner or later, leaving a broken market in the end.

Realty men throughout Brooklyn freely predict that this will be a banner year in that borough in the suburban home-site field. Brooklyn is growing at a rate which amazes even the hard-to-astonish Manhattanite who finds occasion to journey through the not long ago country districts of Kings County. Since last Spring the borough, which many wise men believe will some day contain more people than Manhattan and the Bronx combined, has experienced the greatest increase of population in all its wonderful history of growth. The rapid spread of business districts and the driving out of dwellers by the great railroad and public improvements in Manhattan have caused to migrate to Brooklyn thousands of families seeking homes. There has also been a record-breaking influx of aliens, newly landed on these shores. From Manhattan's crowded east side Brooklyn is drawing by way of the Williamsburg Bridge the overflow of population and some astonishing changes are taking place in the character of neighborhoods in the older sections of the borough.

The steadily incoming population must be housed, and in the providing of living places for these people the vacant tracts in Brooklyn are undergoing a transformation which excites the wonder of visitors from other cities. It is an interesting fact that the vast home building operations which are to be seen in Brooklyn's suburbs are being carried on for the most part either for or by people who have long lived in that borough. The explanation of this seems to lie in the fact that a majority of the newcomers are people in humble circumstances. Although ambitious to own their own homes eventually, and with eyes on the rapidly developing suburbs, they must content themselves at first with modest flat and tenement quarters. In their demand for living quarters is heard the death-knell of the conventional and time-honored one-family two-story-and-basement houses, which line the older streets of Brooklyn. These houses, unprofitable as they stand, are giving way to flats, and the erstwhile owners of them are flocking into the suburbs to build new homes for themselves.

So rapid and far-reaching has been the development of Brooklyn's outlying districts, the old county towns, that trading in acreage properties there has practically become a thing of the past. There is probably not a single farm in Kings County remaining in the hands of those who owned and worked it as such. All have been taken up by realty promoters, and are being dotted with cottages. Through the marvelous growth of the borough, most of the farmers that were in Kings County have been enabled to retire either wealthy or well to do. Even the fishermen and clamdiggers of Canarsie, a few years ago struggling for a bare living, have been placed in comfortable circumstances by the sale of their more or less small holdings, until recently valuable only for the raising of garden truck for the family table.

But while the story of Brooklyn's remarkable growth and realty development has necessarily to do chiefly with its great suburban area, the older sections of the borough have also played important parts. In fact, the story of Brooklyn's realty market, in all its features, is a story of continued activity and steadily advancing values. Those neighborhoods which have become undesirable as living places are becoming valuable from a business standpoint, and the commercial life of the borough is expanding into districts where the hum of trade was not to be heard before. There was a time, not long ago, when there was no business centre of importance in Brooklyn outside of the Borough Hall neighborhood, the Fulton Street shopping district, and lower Broadway, in Williamsburg. Here were all the banks, the trust companies, the big stores, and the office buildings. With the growth and expansion of the borough there have sprung up new business centres quite as busy and lively as the old ones. The Williamsburg Bridge, the Manhattan Bridge, now building, and better transit facilities between different parts of the borough have brought about these changes. A new centre which is drawing to it many enterprises located elsewhere in town is that at Fulton Street and Flatbush Avenue. Here is to be the gateway to the Manhattan Bridge, and one of the most important stations of the Manhattan-Brooklyn Subway. Already there are four theatres in the neighborhood, the larger banks are establishing branches there, and several of the largest stores in Brooklyn are near this junction. The Realty Associates have purchased a plot near the old Montauk Theatre. It is understood that when the theatre building is sold by the city to make way for the extension of Flatbush Avenue the Realty Associates will buy it and move it to the site they have acquired. On DeKalb Avenue, near by, the Dime Savings Bank is building what is to be one of the handsomest banking houses in the city.

Another important new business centre which is growing rapidly is that at Broadway and Myrtle Avenue. Broadway and Gates Avenue, further uptown, is also attracting much attention as a business neighborhood. The older business centres, however, have not suffered through the building up of the new. Realty values in these are steadily advancing, as was evidenced in the sale a few days ago of the Continental and Phenix Buildings on Court Street. Bought for $1,100,000 a few weeks ago, they have been resold at a valuation of $1,250,000, probably for improvement with a skyscraper office building. Business property in Montague Street and up Fulton Street, through the shopping district, is also in great demand and increasing greatly in value. Montague Street, which was formerly lined with brownstone residences, is now given over almost entirely to business for several blocks westward from Court Street. Good business property, in fact, is in demand in all parts of the borough, but there is not much of it in the market.

HOLLIS QUEENS COUNTY
Long Island

ON THE MAIN LINE L. I. R. R. 1 MILE BEYOND JAMAICA

Chichester Ave., Hollis.

The Suburban movement is nowhere better illustrated than at Hollis, one of the most beautiful spots along the Long Island Railroad. Hollis is not a boom town nor a factory community, but a real live, progressive village, essentially residential. All that Nature and Man can do together to make a town attractive and livable has been done here. The Engineer has planned and constructed thoroughly equipped lighting, drainage and transit systems. The Architect has planned beautiful homes, homes with distinctive individuality, not the monotonous row upon row of brown stone or brick that weary the eye in the city. The landscape architect has laid out beautiful gardens, adding new beauties bestowed by Nature in the lively situation. A journey to Hollis will well repay you. Come away from the busy, noisy, crowded city for a day and visit this modern, quiet, livable spot, not so far from Manhattan as to be inconvenient, nor so near as to be intolerable.

25 Cent Map of Greater New York

Distances from the City Hall
Comparative values of real estate
Proposed transportation lines, bridges, ferries, etc.

Parties contemplating the purchase of suburban lots should send for this free map. It gives all the information one needs to judge an investment intelligently. Large operators always make use of a map like this, hence they make few mistakes.

Our object in publishing this map is to show the relative location and value of New York City lots in the Borough of Richmond, which we are now offering at $190 up, with macadamized streets, cement walks, etc. Terms $10 down, $5 a month.

Richmond Borough is to-day on the eve of development, just as the Bronx and South Brooklyn were several years ago. Our property is closer to the City Hall NOW, both in time and distance, than Bronx lots that are selling at $2,000 up.

We advised the purchase of Brooklyn lots five years ago and our customers made large profits. NOW we advise the purchase of Richmond lots at once—before the new tunnels and ferries are completed.

Our map of Greater New York, giving all the facts and conditions that every one should know before purchasing suburban property anywhere, will be sent, free of charge, to those who mention this paper.

MASSAPEQUA

LOTS $39 EACH | $5 DOWN | $2 PER MONTH | ONLY 150 TO BE SOLD

THE 300 LOTS AT MASSAPEQUA, put on sale by us last Monday morning, were sold in 48 hours, and so many people were disappointed that we persuaded the owner to allow us to sell 150 more at $39 each.

We guarantee to refund your money providing you do not find:

FIRST: That these lots are located in the finest, highest, dryest and healthiest location at Massapequa.

SECOND: That this tract of 5,000 lots fronts on the Montauk division of the Long Island Railroad.

THIRD: That they are only 1 mile from the beautiful Great South Bay, and 12 miles from the City line.

FOURTH: That every lot is 25x100, and cannot be duplicated by the acre or lot at twice that money anywhere in Massapequa.

FIFTH: When these lots are put on the market and excursions are run to the property, you will have 300% profit on your lots.

WE RECEIVED HUNDREDS OF REQUESTS BY MAIL, but we could not reach them before the lots were sold. If you send us $5 deposit, we will select whatever number of lots you wish and mail the map showing the lots selected, and if they do not meet with your approval we will refund your money.

Sale opens 10 A. M. Monday at our office and continues until 150 lots have been sold at $39 each.

FOR HOMES OR INVESTMENTS

One of two motives actuates men in buying country property—either life is to be strengthened or purses to be lengthened. If you buy for a home, what could offer greater inducements than

NEW DORP

A town for select residents, where restrictions bring good people in by keeping the others out.

It is not a city—else it would lose its charm. It's the genuine country, where one can come in close contact with nature. Yet there are city conveniences, such as running water, electric light, covered walks telephone and telegraph service, etc.

IT HAS COST HALF A MILLION DOLLARS TO IMPROVE THE PLACE.

If you BUY FOR INVESTMENT, here is

for you can BUY NOW AT LOWEST PRICES in our choice sections, where, with all the above improvements, the rise will be rapid and sure.

The beauty of it for a new-comer is that we have reserved some desirable lots, which we will sell to the right kind of people at the "GROUND FLOOR" PRICE, $350 PER LOT.

REAL ESTATE — BRONX — REAL ESTATE

OPENING UP OF THE EAST BRONX

Large Area Heretofore Neglected on Account of Poor Transportation.

12,000 ACRES AVAILABLE

Westchester Road and New Haven Improvements Will Open Up Vast Territory.

The peculiar position of the East Bronx, constituting a comparatively small area of unimproved land, (roughly speaking, 12,000 available acres,) bounded on one side by the fully built-up Manhattan Island and on the other side by the fully built-up towns of Yonkers, Mount Vernon, New Rochelle, &c., presents an almost unprecedented land condition, which can only be explained by the peculiar incidents attending the growth of Manhattan Island on the one hand and of the near-by suburban towns on the other.

Up to within the last few years the population of New York could find housing only in one of two ways, and that was either on Manhattan Island itself or in the near-by suburbs reached by the New Haven Railroad, the New York Central, or the Putnam. The great middle tract, constituting the present East Bronx, was not reached by the surface cars, elevated roads, &c., and was not adequately served by the railroad lines, because these had their first important stations just beyond the present city line. So we had the anomalous condition of the Manhattan population being compelled to "skip over" this great city tract to find housing less desirable in sections further out. This condition was furthered by the fact that a considerable portion of this available area was held, as it is now held, by a few owners, such as the Astors, the Lorillard-Spencers, the Pearsalls, the Morrises, the Watsons, &c.

The first break that occurred in this condition was when the Subway pushed its way up to the southern end of Bronx Park. Next came the electrification of the New Haven local line and its increase to a six-track road, now under way. Still, however, there was no available territory of a desirable nature until the great estates could be broken up. The first and the greatest of these estates, comprising some 300 acres, in the highest part of the East Bronx, is the Morris Park Race Track. The holdings in this one tract are larger than any other two holdings put together in the entire Bronx.

With this first break in the solid phalanx of high-class real estate held out of the market came the first opening in the street system, as heretofore no streets were permitted by the owners to be cut through this entire section. The result has been the immediate initiation of a building campaign, the equal of which has seldom been witnessed. On top of this now come the subway extensions, the one on Westchester Avenue and the other on White Plains Road; the Westchester Railroad, the Port Chester Railway, and the various surface roads of the new Inter-Urban Company, and the extensions of the Union Railway Company—criss-crossing this section in every direction and for the first time making it available for that purpose for which it naturally is most fit, that is, the housing of New York's population.

J. G. ROBIN.

STEADY INCREASE IN BRONX.

Gradual Filling Up of New Apartment Houses—Market Outlook Good.

Conditions in the Bronx at the present time are on a fair, sound, satisfactory basis. While there is no marked movement in any direction, there are certain conditions which indicate a steady market for some time to come.

These conditions are the gradual filling up of apartment houses already built, the absorption by the public, at auction, of Bronx real estate whenever it has been offered this Spring at unexpectedly good prices; the opening up and marketing of the old estates which have been for years unimproved and the advertising and opening of bids for new routes of rapid transit and extensions of the present lines.

All this is simply the continuation of the steady increase in the value of Bronx real estate which has been going ahead for the last fifteen or twenty years, and while at times there is a rapid upward tendency when special causes arise, these movements only emphasize the fact that the steady advance in prices has not been fast enough to reach the actual values, as compared to other portions of the city, and still the values are low enough when one will consider that on leading thoroughfares, which in the course of ten or twelve years will be the leading arteries of the city, north, northeast, and northwest, lots can still be bought for $2,500 to $5,000 each. One can easily see that the values are not too high, but rather underestimated, when it is almost certain that these same lots will sell in ten to fifteen years for from $10,000 to $15,000 apiece.

The outlook, therefore, is such that, while one would not advise purchasing a large amount of unimproved land, which would be costly to carry, still one can purchase on the leading thoroughfares or in newly opened sections where lots are selling below the value of $1,000 and $1,500 without any risk whatever, and with the assurance that within the next four or five years the property is bound to increase in value and show a good profit.

Personally, I am of the opinion that the most desirable sections to purchase are in those that will be reached by the present rapid transit systems, as I think these sections will show the greatest activity and the largest increase for the next few years.

J. CLARENCE DAVIES.

CHANCES FOR LARGE CAPITAL.

Realty Operators Realizing from 25 to 50 Per Cent. Annually.

For the larger capitalist, who is willing to put into his investment both brains and industry in addition to his capital, there are still very large possibilities in investments in New York City realty. Those of this class who are engaged in the purchase of old properties and the reimprovement of them, with new buildings, are safely turning their capital over at from 25 to 50 per cent. profit annually. Individuals, firms, and companies there are who are engaged in building operations for the market, using their own capital and buying land and building materials at first hand, who count a profit of 25 per cent. on any operation a very low one. And for the investor who builds for his own investment, there is always the advantage of acquiring his finished property below the market and so having all the advantage in the renting competition.

For the commercial firm, company, or individual, ownership of the property required for the conduct of their enterprises is of advantage in several ways. First, it establishes for them a basis of credit of the first quality, not so easily acquired in any other way; second, it gives them their necessary space at a lower rental than they could get it in any other way; third, it secures their tenure, upon which a good-will may be established that in time may be the most valuable of their assets, and saves them from the enormous increase in rental expenses that invariably attends the development of business centres in New York. If such an establishment requires only a part of a building for its own use it can often let the rest to such advantage as to secure its own rent substantially free.

ALONG JEROME AVENUE.

Jerome Avenue was planned by Boss Tweed to be and is the most important thoroughfare northward into upper Westchester County. It is laid out 100 feet in width, a finished street, and is midway between the Hudson River and the Sound.

The lower Bronx is now crowded. The territory immediately to the north is fairly well filled. Many are predicting the next move will be into the Belmont section. It will be but a very short time before the territory north of Van Cortlandt Park will be filled with the best class of homes, not those of the very rich or the very poor, but those of the intermediate class, who are seeking comfortable residences in good neighborhoods.

BELMONT, ON JEROME AVENUE.

Belmont, with its several additions, is the most favored of all New York's suburbs. Situated on Jerome Avenue, at its junction with Yonkers Avenue, it is on a high plateau north of Van Cortlandt Park, on the line of the proposed subway, where the North and South and East and West trolley lines now cross each other at Yonkers Avenue.

It has grown, is growing, and will continue to grow.

Belmont has every advantage—the finest of water, the best of schools, a combination of everything good. It is a natural centre; with the completion of the subway which is assured it will create a new Harlem in that section. It is experiencing a healthy and normal growth, no undue inflation, and the increase is coming rapidly and fast.

The New York Realty Owners Company is developing this section in a conservative and broad manner, adding largely of late to its holdings, and is the sponsor for this section and its great development.

The future of Belmont is assured. It is reached now by convenient and good train service—trolley—elevated and Subway services. A single fare of 5c. carries one from Belmont to the Battery or anywhere in New York City. Write for booklet B. New York Realty Owners Co., 489 Fifth Av., N. Y.—Adv.

To Avoid Being RUN OVER By a TROLLEY-CAR

you must get out of its way; the oftener the cars run, the morecertain your chance of being RUN OVER. (Not much chance when a semi-occasional car runs ONLY once in a while.)

BUT—if you plant yourself on a spot where there are SIX different kinds of cars whizzing by every few minutes, you're certain to get RUN OVER in SHORT ORDER.

THERE is the WHOLE of the philosophy of PROFITABLE real estate investment; Plant yourself in FRONT of the Rapid Transit lines—NOT in front of ONE semi-occasional line—which may CHANGE its train schedule at any moment and leave you stranded—get in front of a HALF DOZEN of them—all different.

By means of these lines, the population of the big city is going to RUN OVER you or OVERRUN you and your property, and THAT means INCREASE of value, for the THREE SECRETS of increase in real estate values are:

1st---Rapid Transit.
2d---More Rapid Transit.
3d---MOST RAPID TRANSIT.

Now, in MANHATTAN Borough there is a busy crossing, (a "NECK,") at 33d Street and Broadway—you probably know about it—one man made ONE MILLION DOLLARS in ONE YEAR buying and selling real estate within 2,000 feet of that corner.

IN BRONX Borough there is just such another "Neck."

It is a narrow strip of land between Bronx Park and the New Haven R. R. tracks, and through this NECK every Subway, every transportation line, built, building or projected, MUST PASS to get out into the open.

AT THE HEAD of this NECK is the famous old MORRIS PARK RACE TRACK, so that ALL these Rapid Transit lines built or building MUST serve this property.

And as a matter of fact, ALL of them DO serve Morris Park.

NOTE—however, that the various high-speed lines running through and around Morris Park have their tracks fenced in or underground; it is YOUR PROPERTY that will be overrun, NOT you or your children.

As all Real Estate experts who are not engaged in booming "Dream Cities" in newly discovered "cabbage-patch suburbs" know, New York city can logically grow ONLY Morris Park-way, and with 350,000 new inhabitants marching NORTHWARD every year, and SIX different kinds of transportation lines to supply the territory with the FINEST transportation in the world—what ENORMOUS profits must accrue to the fortunate individuals who are able to buy some of this land NOW, at the PRESENT prices, at

MORRIS PARK

No matter how much or how little money you have to invest,—get in at to-day's LOW prices at Morris Park. Come in to talk it over or drop us a postal for information.

ACTIVE SEASON IN WESTCHESTER

Transit Improvements Attract Homeseekers to City's Northern Suburbs.

MOUNT VERNON'S GROWTH

New Rochelle, White Plains, and Other Towns Busy Centres of Buying and Building.

One hundred million dollars to bring suburban Westchester within twenty-five minutes of the City Hall—this expenditure by the New York Central and New Haven Railroads will enhance Westchester County realty many hundreds of millions. Electric equipment, about completed, on these lines will make Mount Vernon, New Rochelle, Pelham, White Plains, and Larchmont as accessible to the business district of the metropolis as the region around Central Park or along Riverside Drive. The heights in the heart of this suburban territory between Long Island Sound and the Hudson will be made practically an integral part of the greater city, and jammed-in metropolitans will move from apartment hotels, flats, and tenements to elbow room and breathing space in individual homes.

The elevated and the Subway were the means of establishing the flats in Harlem and the skyscraper barracks in place of the squatters on the rocks of the upper west side. Electrified railroads, to supplement the elevated and Subway, will be the means of establishing true homes on the hills and shores of old Westchester. Formerly only the very rich could afford to live in this beautiful region. Now all classes have been accorded the same privilege, and they will not be slow to take advantage of it.

These conditions have created in Westchester County one of the most attractive and interesting real estate markets in this part of the country. The growth of Mount Vernon alone, as indicated by the following recapitulation of building operations in the past few years, is one of the strongest proofs of this state of affairs:

Year.	Buildings.	Cost.
1903	85	725,450
1904	117	561,800

Many costly and handsome buildings were erected during 1906. Besides these, plans were filed last November for apartments to house 421 families, while hundreds of beautiful private residence have also been built. Mount Vernon has had its share of the great wave of prosperity which has swept over the entire country during the past year, and we believe the year 1907 bids fair to afford even better possibilities for shrewd real estate investment.

During the past year several syndicates in White Plains which have bought properties have realized 100 per cent. profit on them. In the outlying districts of Mount Vernon there has been a good demand for property, which is an index for the coming year, and doubtless foreshadows much buying on Chester Hill. Another feature of the present situation is the tendency of large Western manufacturing concerns to establish offices in New York on an extensive scale, and the occupants of these offices are seeking homes in Westchester County. Recently the demand for certain classes of property has been in excess of the supply.

Five million dollars is to be expended on a parkway 200 feet wide along the Bronx River for a distance of eight miles from the Bronx Park, through Mount Vernon, East Chester, Scarsdale, and White Plains to Kensico. Within recent years the great development of the towns north of the city, especially in Mount Vernon, Bronxville, and White Plains, has threatened to detract much from the scenic charm of Bronx River, the ideal being sacrificed in the march of improvements on every side. Acting on suggestions of representative citizens, a law was passed authorizing Gov. Higgins to inquire, through a commission, as to the advisability of taking over a strip on either side of the river. This commission recommended the acquiring of the land necessary for the park, which will vary from 400 to 600 feet in width. The sentiment of residents along the entire line of the proposed improvement is unanimous in favor of it.

The fast growth of New Rochelle speaks for itself, proving it to be one of the most desirable home towns on the New Haven Road, while the signs of steady expansion in Larchmont, Mamaroneck, Harrison, Rye, and Port Chester are hardly less noticeable.

Beechmont Park, designed from Tuxedo, is developing into a beautiful community. Kress Park, situated on one of the highest elevations in the county, with a fine view of the Sound, is another important addition to New Rochelle. Houses built to order can be had in Kress Park for from $12,000 to $15,000, and the interest of homeseekers seems to be about equally divided between the two localities.

DISCOUNTING THE FUTURE.

Great Expectations in One Downtown Area—Where the Armenians Buy.

In the region of old buildings south of Fulton Street and west of Broadway owners have anticipated possible advantages from proposed subways and tunnels, some of which will not be in operation for many years, with the result that properties are held at such prices that sufficient rent cannot be had to carry them and pay even a low rate of interest on the money invested. It is not at all probable that any property in this section will be taken for office building purposes for some time, or at least until the vast amount of space is rented which will be available in May, 1908, in the Terminal Buildings, City Investing Building, Singer Building, and other buildings in this section, while purchasers cannot afford to pay the prices asked and improve with other than office buildings.

Buyers who ordinarily are interested in any property which is held at fair figures will not consider purchasing real estate in this territory at the present prices. I have had this statement made to me repeatedly this Spring. No doubt property in this section is bound to improve, but it will be a long time before it will improve enough to warrant the figures at which most owners are holding it.

In the lower part of this section in the vicinity of Rector Street a number of Armenian merchants have bought up any property offered and have paid excellent prices. These properties they rent to Armenians, Greeks, and other foreigners at much higher rents than are commanded by properties of similar construction in other neighborhoods. Lofts in Washington Street, near Rector, are bringing $900 per annum, whereas similar lofts in Warren, Murray, and adjoining streets bring about $720. Owners in this section feel confident that the Babbitt property is soon to be improved, and that in connection with this project may come the proposal to cut through a new street from Broadway to West Street, south of Rector Street. It would be a very great benefit to a large area of land if such a street were cut through between Rector and Morris Streets, thus breaking up blocks now 700 feet long on Greenwich, Washington, and West Streets, but the possibility of these changes is yet too remote to be taken into consideration in estimating present values.

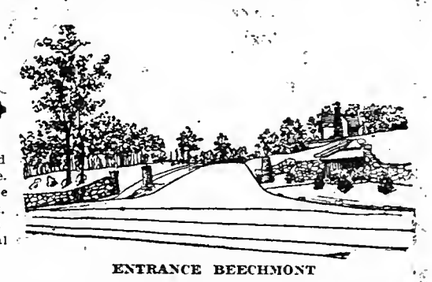
NEW ROCHELLE, N. Y.



ENTRANCE BEECHMONT

New Rochelle, N. Y., is unquestionably conceded to be the fairest and most accessible suburb of the metropolis. Located 17 miles out on Long Island Sound and reached by the N. Y., N. H. and H. R. R., makes this City of Superb Homes and all city improvements the Mecca for all those seeking a Country Residence. The natural advantages are splendid, and all the sports of the times are represented by its numerous clubs—on water and land. Good train services and trolley; the coming new Rapid Transit Road will add far better facilities for travel, in the near future—not duplicated by any other city or town near New York. Its beautiful parks are superb results of artistic handiwork. Among them are Beechmont, Sutton Manor and Broadview. The Banking facilities are the best. Schools and Churches of all denominations. Property investments are safe and sound as Government Bonds, and owing to the city's great development in the last few years, Real Estate is advancing by leaps and bounds—yet Homes, Cottages and Residences are within reach of all at reasonable market values.

Farms and Acreage in Westchester County.

TO THE PUBLIC

The reason of the rapid growth of Westchester County is caused by the high rentals of New York and the natural tendency of the people to invest where the property is sure to increase in value. New York, being hemmed in by the North and East Rivers, has the natural tendency to build northward through Westchester County. Look at Harlem 20 years ago; then the Bronx; now it is Westchester.

When railroads fight to go through any county, then you can rest assured that property in that vicinity is bound to increase. Remember the New York & Portchester Railroad fight. The poor man has as much right to expect an increase on any piece of property that he may purchase, whether for home or for speculation, the same as the rich, and he should be as careful when he invests his hard-earned money to build a home and save rent. He should not be led into wildcat schemes just because he happens to go to some wilderness that has been made pretty to deceive him, and when others buy he thinks he misses a good chance if he does not do the same.

With his small capital, he should look around, and if he sees homes being built up, and inquires how the people living there have been treated, he is 100 per cent. better off to put his little savings down, pack his furniture, move in and pay off his little home instead of paying rents for the rest of his life.

Let him look back and see what property was selling for in the same vicinity a few years back, and if he finds that it has not increased in value naturally and has been boomed "by fly-by-night" land companies, then he should stay away and invest where it has a natural tendency to increase. Westchester County has jumped and is continually jumping in prices without booming, and that is the main reason I advise investing in Westchester County within commuting distance to New York City.

M. FRANCOLINI, Pres't.

Are Your Water Tax Bills Too High?
If you own an apartment house, factory or a business building, and your water bill was $25 for the past six months, what assurance have you that it will not be $250 for the next six months?
It often jumps up that way.
When will the next bill be rendered?
Is that meter out of order, and will the new bill be "pro rata"?
Has a meter been ordered and been put in by the City at a cost which you deem exorbitant?
Why have you not been supplied with a water bill for the last year or two?
Did some tenant, for revenge or spite, let the water run for a week or more, making you liable for a bill that may run into hundreds of dollars?
Does your tenant, who agreed in the lease to pay the meter charges regularly, pay the same?
Does your water supply run to waste by reason of defective plumbing or otherwise?

You Cannot Answer These Questions
But the Water Supervision Company Will answer them for you, and charge you only a nominal figure, beginning at $6 per year, and grading in accordance with the value of the service to you.
Upon request, we will gladly send our representative to explain full particulars. Write or 'phone.

NEW JERSEY

NORTH JERSEY'S GROWING SUBURBS

Signs of Great Development, Even with Inferior Transit Facilities.

NEW ENTERPRIZES PLANNED

High-Speed Road to Connect with McAdoo Tunnels—Bridge Project Advanced.

The transformation of the New Jersey territory lying north of Weehawken, and as far west as the section north of Ridgefield and Ridgefield Park, extending to Englewood and Bergenfields, has been during the last three years as wonderful, comparatively, as has been the development of Long Island since the Pennsylvania improvements were announced, or the activity on Staten Island since it has had adequate transportation.

The reasons for the comparative neglect of this section by real estate investors are obvious, the most important of these having been the transportation facilities, which were not only poor, but expensive for the service rendered. To-day the transportation has been so vastly improved that this territory will compare favorably with near-by Long Island and Westchester County. The Public Service Corporation, with its trolley lines starting out from Hoboken and Weehawken, reaches into this region through Union, Hudson Heights, Fairview, Ridgefield, Ridgefield Park, and Hackensack. The Northern Railroad of New Jersey, from the Erie Station in Jersey City, runs directly north through the eastern section of Bergen County, through Ridgefield, Morsemere, Leonia, Englewood, and Tenafly, and on to Nyack. The Fort Lee Ferry and the New Jersey & Hudson River Railway & Ferry Company, from 130th Street, Manhattan, give excellent service to Grantwood, Leonia, and Englewood on the north, Hackensack, Passaic, and Paterson on the west, and Rutherford, Arlington, and Newark on the south, running on a fifteen-minute schedule, whereas five years ago the traffic warranted only hourly service.

Increase in Population.

The earnings of these two last-named corporations are a fair indication of the recent growth of Bergen County. It is stated on good authority that as late as 1903, the earnings of this system did not exceed $4,000 a month, but that last year the gross earnings averaged over $40,000 a month, and that the earnings in January and February of this year exceeded those of 1906 by 12 per cent. The population of towns served by the lines of these corporations in 1900 was 26,623, while in 1906 it was reported to have been 155,200. Statistics from the last New Jersey State census in 1905 show that in the previous five years the population of Eastern Bergen County, in many of the boroughs, had doubled, and that in none had there been an increase of less than 25 per cent.

Within the last month there has been announced by the West Shore Traction Company its plan to build a high speed trolley line from a point near Newburg, N. Y., south to Jersey City, to connect with the McAdoo tunnels.

The Hudson River bridge project is steadily assuming more definite form. New Jersey will probably have an opportunity to vote this Fall upon the question of authorizing the State to contribute its share toward the erection of the structure, and the joint Bridge Commission appointed by the Legislatures of New York and New Jersey in 1906 has reported that the construction of such a bridge is feasible. The Legislatures of both States have been asked for further appropriations with which to carry on the work during 1907.

Five Years' Change in Values.

William H. Zabriskie, Secretary of the North Jersey Title Guarantee Company of Hackensack, said recently concerning values in these suburbs west of the Hudson: "Five years ago land could have been purchased in the localities now known as Edgewater, Grantwood, Hudson Heights, and Palisade, as well as in other nearby sections, for from $500 to $1,000 an acre. To-day much of the same land properly developed is selling at $1,000 to $1,500 a lot. The growth of improvements will, naturally, be from east to west, and this movement is being felt very perceptibly beyond the Palisades in such thriving suburban towns as Morsemere, Leonia, Englewood, and Hackensack. These developments have been going on steadily without the aid of tunnels or bridges, with transportation of a very indifferent character furnished by trolley companies, but with the prospect of improved transportation we are, in my opinion, on that eve of the great activity and great increase in values."

F. E. KNOX.

STATEN ISLAND OUTLOOK.

Developing Large Tracts—Borough Attracting Many Industries.

Staten Island is now entering upon what promises to be the most active year in its real estate history. The year 1906 was phenomenal in the number and size of real estate transactions, particularly in acreage property, and this condition promises to continue throughout the present year until the acreage, a very large proportion of which still remains in original hands, has been absorbed by investors, who, by comparing the low prices of Richmond Borough acreage with prices in Kings and Queens Counties, recognize the fact that the prices for good property on Staten Island are such as to afford excellent opportunities for investment and prospects of large profits.

One of the highly encouraging features of the market is the appearance of the land developer, who improves his purchases by the construction of streets, sewers, water mains, sidewalks, and other improvements. The developers, in the very nature of things, are the forerunners of the speculative builders, a number of whom have been looking over the field with a view of starting operations at an early date.

The demand for building lots in 1906 was one of the pronounced features of the market, and from present indications the demand for well-located property available for improvement promises to absorb quickly any offerings which are made. The buyers to a very large extent are residents of the island, but within the last few months there have been many buyers from Manhattan and Brooklyn, and even the Bronx, attracted to Richmond Borough by the easy accessibility of Staten Island by means of the new municipal ferry, which has greatly aided in the upbuilding of the borough, and by the comparatively low prices of building lots, particularly since the latter are being improved with sewers, water mains, and cement sidewalks.

Owing to the rapid growth of the Atlantic Terra Cotta Works, now the largest establishment in the country in that line, and the building of Lewis Nixon's new engine works, employing from 1,000 to 1,500 men, Tottenville is attracting the attention of investors, and has witnessed a large number of transactions at advancing prices. Tottenville and Perth Amboy, across Staten Island Sound, are fast becoming a new industrial centre, owing to excellent water and rail shipping facilities. The great improvements now being made by the Government in deepening and widening the channel of Staten Island Sound are making this section available for oceangoing vessels drawing 25 feet of water.

The purchase by the city of the water supply companies of the borough has had a most beneficial effect on the development of real estate, meaning that rates will be reduced and a large number of extensions built to all parts of the island.

In the matter of transportation, great improvements have been made not only by the steam roads, with a view of caring for the increased demands upon them by the fast-increasing population, but plans are also maturing for a new trolley route connecting Tottenville with the present terminus of the Midland trolley at Richmond. This will make accessible at a cheap rate of fare a part of the borough which is particularly adapted for residential purposes.

In conclusion, it can be stated with a considerable degree of satisfaction that the facilities for obtaining loans for building operations have greatly improved since the establishment of the new ferry and the consequent activity in real estate. A number of large financial institutions in Manhattan are now making loans on Staten Island, giving evidence of the growing confidence in the future of the borough's development.

J. The premises in question are also within very short distance of two railroad stations, one being Millington and the other Lyons, on the Morris & Essex Division of the D., L. & W. Railroad. There is a never failing stream of water running through the property, fed by springs. In addition to a large commodious residence, there are two tenement houses for workmen and numerous barns, stables, wagon houses and other outbuildings, all in good state of preservation.
The land is well adapted for farming purposes, raising of grain, hay and fruits, and is also well situated and located for stock farm.
The property is located on the summit of Long Hill and has a northern and southern slope, affording a beautiful view in all directions of all the magnificent scenery of the adjacent hills and valleys in the northern part of Somerset County, within plain view of the famous "Banker's Mountain" residences of Bernardsville. Aside from the tillable land there are about 40 acres of fine timber land.
The sale of the above premises under decree Court of Chancery, in partition action, will take place TO-MORROW, MONDAY, THE 15TH DAY OF APRIL, 1907, AT TWO O'CLOCK in the afternoon, at the Court House in Somerville, N. J., under the direction of the Special Master to make sale under court's decree.

"ONE IN AUTHORITY" WAS AGAINST DEWEY

The Staats-Zeitung's Explanation of the Diederichs Incident at Manila.

GERMANY URGED TO ACT

The Kaiser's Government Followed What It Believed Was the American Policy.

The interest of public men generally, and of naval men in particular, centred yesterday in the denial of ex-Ambassador Andrew D. White that he, when Ambassador at Berlin, had suggested the attitude of the German naval squadron under Admiral Diederichs at Manila, which resulted in an apparent attempt to block the work of Admiral Dewey. The denial, which appeared in THE TIMES of yesterday, was made in answer to explanations offered concerning the speech delivered April 8 by Melville E. Stone at Herman Ridder's dinner to Ambassador Tower. In his speech Mr. Stone declared that we had not been quite fair with Germany in several matters, and that one of those matters was the Diedcrichs episode.

Mr. Stone was averse to discussing the subject further yesterday. The published extract from his speech was correct, he said, and he had no additional comments to make.

Senator John C. Spooner of Wisconsin said that he had heard the story before, but that he took no stock in it after having read what Mr. White had to say about it. Further than this he would not talk.

At the navy yard Rear Admiral Coghlan, who bore a prominent part in the battle of Manila Bay, and whose famous "Hoch der Kaiser" speech was an outcome of the Diederichs episode, could not be seen.

The Staats-Zeitung's Account of It.

In this morning's issue of the Staats-Zeitung, the Manila Bay incident is discussed at length in the editorial columns of that paper. That editorial, which it is stated gives the facts in the case, in part is as follows:

"On May 1, 1898, Admiral Dewey attacked and destroyed the Spanish fleet. At that time there were a large number of German merchants in business in the City of Manila. There was a great deal of confusion there, and these merchents were naturally apprehensive as to their lives and property. Prince Henry of Prussia was at Hongkong, and a delegation went to him and urged that some German vessels should be sent to the Philippines to safeguard the German property there. This request Prince Henry cabled at once to Berlin.

Why Germany Acted.

"At that moment, and indeed for many months after, there was no popular sentiment in the United States in favor of permanently holding the Philippines or making them colonial possessions of this country. Indeed, one who had full authority to speak for the American Government assured the authorities at Berlin that the war must not be construed into a contest for territorial aggrandisement, and asked why Germany would not take the islands. This was taken as an official communication. He also communicated this suggestion to the State Department at Washington, where it was not favorably received. The German Government was not informed as to the feeling at Washington, and for the moment accepted the suggestion as expressive of the American point of view. They were very uncertain, however, as to their desires in the matter. The German merchants at Manila were very urgent that the United States should assume and maintain sovereignty in the islands, and the Berlin authorities rather favored this view.

Diederichs Didn't Understand.

"It was with the suggestion from this American authority before them that on May 11 Admiral Diederichs was instructed to go from Hongkong to Manila. The English sent a like fleet under Capt. Sir Edward Chichester. Admiral Dewey knew nothing of what had been going on at Berlin. Admiral Diederichs had been led to believe that the United States did not want the Philippines, and would be very glad indeed if Germany would take them off her hands. These two different points of view inevitably found expression in the actions of the two Admirals.

"If Diederichs seemed at all officious his justification lies in the fact that his Government had, through no fault of its own, been misled. It is also true that for motives of their own certain American and foreign newspapers greatly exaggerated the episode, charging Diederichs with many things of which he was not guilty, and crediting the English officers with a degree of friendship for which there was no warrant.

"On July 4, 1899, at Leipsic, Ambassador Andrew D. White, than whom no man knows the facts better, said: 'I feel bound to acknowledge the conduct of those in authority—those who represent Germany to our country and who have been all that we could desire from the first during the war. The German Government recognized at the outset our full rights as belligerents. It has observed a strict and full neutrality; and this neutrality has been neither cold nor grudged. There has been no request made by our Government which has not been met promptly and freely. There have been occasions when, had there been a wish on the part of the rulers of Germany to check our career, delays and evasions might have taken place, but there have been neither delays nor evasions.'

"The German Government has acted most tactfully respecting this whole matter. Although frequently criticised in this country, they have maintained a dignified silence, and have never disclosed the authoritative suggestions made to them that we did not want the Philippines, but would be glad to have them take them."

Germany's Attitude at Portsmouth.

The editorial also discusses Emperor William's connection with the Portsmouth Peace Conference, and declares that it is untrue that the Kaiser, as reported, had advised the Czar to continue the war with Japan. Along this line the editorial reads:

"As to the Portsmouth Peace Conference, it was asserted at the time that the German Emperor was endeavoring to have the Czar go on with the war. The very contrary is true. It was in the days of the third week of August, 1905, ROPE-LADDER BURGLAR.

Drops Into a Servant's Room at Prof. Starr's, But Is Scared Off.

A burglar scare in the block in Fifty-fourth Street, between Fifth and Sixth Avenues, where John D. Rockefeller, Jr., Senator Chauncey M. Depew, and other rich men live, kept the residents out of bed for several hours just after midnight on Saturday. Yesterday the police of the East Fifty-first Street Station related how many attempts had been made by sneak thieves to enter the homes of the well-to-do in this block.

Several days ago a thief carried off $7,000 worth of jewelry from the bedroom of Prof. M. Allen Starr of Columbia University, at 8 West Fifty-fourth Street, across the way from the University Club. The fellow left behind a casket containing $20,000 worth of Mrs. Starr's jewelry.

Attempts were also made to rob the houses of Dr. Allan M. Thomas, 35 West Fifty-fourth Street; Dr. W. B. James, 17 West Fifty-fourth Street; Mrs. J. T. Willetts, 39 West Fifty-fourth Street; Gen. Anson G. McCook, 33 West Fifty-fourth Street; the Rev. Wilton Merle Smith, 29 West Fifty-fourth Street, and Mrs. J. R. Wolff, 31 West Fifty-fourth Street.

Naturally, after the $7,000 robbery became known the residents paid particular attention to skylights and windows, as it was asserted the thief who got away with Dr. Starr's jewelry got in through a skylight.

Yesterday morning about 2 o'clock a hurry call for the police came from the home of Dr. Thomas, at 35 West Fifty-fourth Street. The call was telephoned to Police Headquarters, and was sent on to Sergt. Raynor at the East Fifty-first Street Station. The Sergeant hustled Roundsman Hallahan and ten policemen, two in plain clothes, to the scene. Other policemen were picked up on the way and the entire block was surrounded.

Detectives Beeron and Baer went to the doctor's house. They found Dr. Thomas and his butler, both armed with revolvers, in a very angry state of mind.

In separate back rooms on the top floor two maids, Lillian Nelson and Christina Gustavson, slept. The latter told the police that she had been awakened by her window being slowly opened. She saw a man swing himself in from a rope ladder hung from the roof. The man held a small electric lamp in his hand. When he saw that she was awake, she said, he whispered to her:

"If you make the slightest noise I'll kill you."

While she was wondering what to do the man heard a noise below stairs, got out on the window ledge, went up the ladder and disappeared. She quickly locked the window and gave the alarm.

THIS LAND OF FULFILLMENT

Is All It Promises, to the Thrifty—As Tom Quinn Has Found.

Special to The New York Times.

CALDWELL, N. J., April 14.—It is doubtful if there was a happier man aboard the Cunard steamship Umbria when she left New York on Saturday, than Thomas H. Quinn. Quinn is a young Irishman, who, a few years ago, held the position of clerk in the Post Office at Dundrum, a small seaport town on the east coast of Ireland.

Among those who called at the Post Office was Miss Lucy Shannon, the pretty daughter of John Shannon, proprietor of the Head Inn, and a man of local prominence. Miss Lucy is the only child. She became engaged to Tom Quinn.

When Mr. Shannon heard of the engagement he made strong objection; he wanted for a son-in-law a man who could succeed him in his inn and other business enterprises. But then his daughter said she would not marry anybody but Tom Quinn. Mr. Shannon sent for Quinn.

"Young man," said he, "I don't want to stand between you and my daughter, but you must prove yourself worthy of her. Go out into the world, see what you can do, and when you have saved up £500, honestly earned, come back and I will admit you to partnership in my business and give you my daughter's hand."

Well, Quinn sought out Lucy, and between them it was decided that he should come to America—that land of promise for so many of his countrymen. He came and got a clerkship in Paterson, N. J. But when he had paid his board and sent $10 a month to his mother to help in the family's support, he was still saving very little of that $2,500 he had to take back to win a wife.

One day, about a year after his arrival, he happened to pass a horse market in Newark while an auction sale was on inside. He dropped in out of curiosity, and knowing something about horses and seeing one that was going cheap, he bought it. The next day he sold the horse to a contractor at a good profit.

He visited the horse market again; and it was not long before the contractors of the surrounding towns commissioned him to buy all their horses. And he saved his money.

Before sailing yesterday he purchased a draft for £500 payable to John Shannon, Dundrum, Ireland.

CAR WRECKS A CARRIAGE.

Coachman, His Sister, and a Woman Friend Thrown Out and Hurt.

A carriage belonging to Mrs. Cunningham of 109 East Thirty-sixth Street, in which David Sherry, Mrs. Cunningham coachman, had been giving his sister Elizabeth and a woman friend a drive in Central Park, was run into and wrecked by a Third Avenue trolley car, at Thirty-first Street, late yesterday afternoon. The carriage was demolished, and all of the occupants thrown out and injured. Sherry had his left arm and nose broken, while both of the women were painfully bruised.

The police do not know whether Sherry had Mrs. Cunningham's permission or not to take his friends driving. Sherry and his sister were taken to Bellevue Hospital, where their injuries were dressed, after which they were sent home. The woman friend was attended to in a drug store near the scene of the accident. The car, which was bound north, struck the carriage a broadside blow, and, according to a bystander, Sherry was thrown nearly twenty feet. The women were thrown under the wreck of the vehicle. The horses were not injured.

109 East Thirty-sixth Street is the residence of Frank Cunningham, a lawyer of 25 Broad Street. Mr. Cunningham is a member of the University and Yale Clubs and of the Bar Association.

SLAIN AT A WINDOW AT NIGHT BY ROBBER

C. J. Schanbacher's Family Say He Said Before Dying That a "Stout Man" Did It.

BIG CIGAR THE ONLY CLUE

Found at the Foot of the Fire Escape —Police Investigate Report of Family Quarrels.

A fat, black cigar, larger than the average, supposed to have been dropped by a murderer in his flight, is the only apparent clue, if it can be considered such, to the killing of George J. Schanbacher, a wealthy real estate dealer, who was found dying in his home at 307 East Forty-fourth Street early yesterday morning, and who died a few hours later in Flower Hospital. Nothing was taken by the burglar, if burglar it was.

There was a shout and a pistol shot, and when the family, aroused from their slumbers, rushed in they found Mr. Schanbacher standing in his night clothes looking blankly at an open window. Blood was flowing from a wound in his stomach, and a dark stain showed upon his night clothes.

"A man shot me. He was short and stout and—dark, very dark," whispered the wounded man as his wife and sons gathered about him. He could say no more, and was assisted to a couch. Whether he meant the man was dark or referred to the darkness of the room is not known. He was too weak to explain further. There was no light in the room except for the dim rays which came through the open door from a gas jet turned low in the kitchen near by.

All the Stories Agree.

But the open window was there and a fire escape outside. It seemed to tell the story of the murderer's flight after that one shot was fired. Such is the story told by the family of the murdered man, a story in which the police have been able to pick no flaw in spite of a day spent mainly in having the stories of every one of the nine Schanbacher children and of the wife told over and over again and compared one with the other.

The cigar was found by Frederick Schanbacher, one of the sons, when daylight came and the rear yard was searched. It lay just under the fire escape, as though it had fallen from the pocket of a man in great haste scrambling down the iron ladder. It had no band, and was such a cigar as a man would have bought in a saloon. There are no smokers in the Schanbacher family.

When the Schanbacher lad took the cigar to the East Fifty-first Street Station and offered it to the house Sergeant, he says the Sergeant exclaimed:

"This is no evidence. Take it and smoke it yourself." But the lad insisted that it be taken. He left it there.

Mr. Schanbacher was looked upon as one of the wealthiest men in the neighborhood. He owned the apartment house in which he lived, also one on East Seventy-second Street. His greatest money-making system, however, was to rent entire blocks of apartment houses and tenements and sub-let them as apartments. At one time he rented "Guinea Row," on Forty-fifth Street. He also rented all the houses in the block in which he lived, between First and Second Avenues. He usually collected his rents on Saturday and deposited them in the bank on the following Monday. This was known to every one in the neighborhood.

Dead Man Suffered from Asthma.

But on last Friday Mr. Schanbacher was ill. He was a chronic sufferer from asthma. On Saturday he remained in the house, so no rents were collected. There was $24 in the top drawer of a bureau in the room where he was shot. That was all the money in the house. It was still in its place after the shooting, and nothing else had been disturbed.

The Schanbachers occupy the entire second floor of No. 307. There are five rooms and a bath. In the front of the house sleep the three sons, Herman, 22 years old; William, 20, and Frederick, 19. The next room, a large one, is the bedroom of the six daughters, Christine, aged 16; Freda, 17; Amelia, 14; Louise, 13; Helen, 12, and Katie, the youngest, aged 9. The bedroom of Mr. and Mrs. Schanbacher is the middle room. Behind that is the kitchen, and back of all a sitting room, facing on an open courtyard.

The Schanbachers retired early on Saturday night. Herman, who is an amateur magician, and his sister, Christine, went to a theatre and reached home shortly after midnight. Herman says he fastened the rear windows, and is sure the locks were secure. Christine is sure that she locked the door which opens upon the hallway leading to the street. At 1 o'clock there was no one awake on the second floor, according to the stories of the family. Mrs. Schanbacher says she was suddenly awakened about 2:20 o'clock by a loud yell from the rear room, the sitting room. She sprang up in bed. Instantly there was a pistol shot. Then she screamed, she says. Her cry awakened the children. They had not heard their father's cry, nor the shot which followed.

Shot by the Open Window.

Herman was the first to reach the kitchen. His mother was close behind him, and the other children soon appeared in their nightrobes.

"My father was standing in the middle of the floor when I reached the room," said Herman. "I saw at a glance that the window was open. My father was looking at the window and trying to point to it, but he was too weak to raise his arm very high. I led him to the couch and he tried to tell us what had happened. 'A man shot me,' he said, and added that 'it was a short, stout man, who was dark.' I heard him try to say something about the window, but he was in great agony and could not talk very well.

"'Get a doctor!' he managed to say, and some one ran out to give the alarm. Soon there were three or four policemen in the room. My father was sent to the hospital."

Mrs. Schanbacher, a woman of about 35, corroborated the story of what took place directly after the shooting. She said that her husband had no enemies, as he had never been hard on his tenants, and was of such a disposition that every one liked him.

"Oh, it must have been a burglar," she said. "It must have been. It is out of

EXPEL GEORGE SUTTON.

Paris Police Banish Him Under the Prevention of Gambling Law.

PARIS, April 14.—The police have issued an expulsion order under the prevention of gambling law against George Sutton, the American billiard player, who recently ran a school for billiards here.

A delay in expulsion of forty-eight hours has been accorded to Sutton.

Georga Sutton, the present holder of the world's championship at the 18-inch balkline billiard game, two shots in, is a Westerner by birth and has been a well-known figure in the billiard world for a score of years. He competed for the world's championship honors half a dozen times in the last ten years, and finally wrested the title from Slosson in the tournament held in Madison Square Garden last Winter. He was a competitor for the same title when Slosson won it in 1906, and in that contest established the present world's record, both for the high run and high average, running 234, and averaging 100 in his match against Willie Hoppe.

TRAIN WRECKERS KILL THREE.

Cars Catch Fire After Being Derailed in Louisiana.

ALEXANDRIA, La., April 14.—Three men killed, and one probably fatally injured, is the result of what is believed to be the work of train wreckers at Cheneyville, thirty miles southeast of here, on the Texas and Pacific Railroad, early this morning, when a westbound passenger train plunged into an open switch while running at a high rate of speed.

The wreckage caught fire and the mail car, baggage and express car, and two passenger coaches were burned. The dead are Engineer John J. Covington of New Orleans, Fireman Michael Kass of New Orleans, and an unidentified man. Express Messenger William Kough of New Orleans, badly burned, was the man injured.

An investigation showed that the switch lock had been broken and the switch turned and the signal lantern thrown away. A full investigation is now being made by the railroad officials.

CHEWED LEAD TO LIVE.

Sailors on a Wrecked Bark Had Neither Food Nor Water.

Among the passengers who arrived here last night on the steamer Seguranca, from Santiago and Nassau, were six seamen who were wrecked on the British bark Trinidad, while bound from Santa Cruz, on March 28, for New York, with a cargo of cedar and mahogany.

On April 1 the bark ran into a hurricane which, at the end of two days, left her unmanageable. The storeroom and cabin were flooded, all provisions were ruined, and for five days the men had nothing to eat, and no water to drink. On the fifth day they were picked up and taken to Nassau by a small sponging schooner.

Capt. Christensen and three of the crew are still at the hospital at Nassau. The others in charge of Second Mate Randolph Quese, came here. Mate Quese said that when rescued the men were chewing bits of lead to keep from drinking salt water.

MRS. A. D. BROWN'S FIANCE.

Charles H. Kauffman Denies That He Was Once a Coachman.

Special to The New York Times.

BALTIMORE, April 14.—Charles H. Kauffman, the Boston man who is to marry Mrs. Laura Brown, widow of Alexander D. Brown, the banker, denies the story that he was formerly a coachman. He is a man of good appearance, and says he has known Mrs. Brown for several years and that he met her at Narragansett. Mrs. Brown, when asked what Mr. Kauffmen's business or occupation was, replied that he was a Boston gentleman and that so long as she was satisfied with her choice it did not concern the public. Further than this Mrs. Brown declined to give any information about her intended husband.

The disparity in their ages, the widow being 66 and Kauffman thirty-two years her junior, is made light of by both. Mrs. Brown insists that difference in age does not affect their love for each other. The marriage will take place in a few weeks, and will be a quiet affair.

PROSPERITY OF PITTSBURG.

$250,000,000 Paid Annually to Wage Earners of the District.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 14.—A report just compiled by the Chamber of Commerce shows that $350,000,000 is paid annually to the wage earners of the Pittsburg district, a majority of whom are included in the 250,000 workmen employed in the 3,029 manufacturing plants of the district. The production of the district for last year was 551,000,000 tons.

It requires 3,500,000 freight cars a year to transport the product of the district, and the railroads last year carried 113,000,000 net tons of freight, while the steamboats transported 9,000,000 more tons, a grand total tonnage for the year of 122,000,000 tons.

The coal product of the district alone was 46,000,000 tons. The production of steel was over 6,500,000 tons. Nearly 7,500,000 barrels of petroleum were also produced, while about 750,000 tons of steel rails were manufactured here. The blast furnaces of the district turned out 5,410,000 tons of iron in 1906.

The value of some classes of manufactured products are shown by these figures: Electrical and auxiliary manufactures, $45,000,000; air brakes, $10,416,000; underground cable and wire, $15,000,000; railway switch and signal appliances, $45,100,000.

In the steel-car plants 47,500 men constructed 80,000 cars, using in their manufacture 1,000,000 tons of steel. One thousand mills and 17,000 families consumed 250,000,000 cubic feet of gas during the last year, while the total population of the district is 760,337 people.

CENSURED, TAKES HIS LIFE.

Young Man Upbraided by Father for Keeping Late Hours Drinks Poison.

Upbraided by his father because of his habit of remaining out late at night, Joseph Curvie, a stationary engineer, twenty-one years old, who lived with his parents at 1,105 Prospect Place, Brooklyn, committed suicide yesterday by swallowing cyanide of potash.

It was late yesterday morning when the young man reached his home. His father, John Curvie, told him he ought to keep better hours and that his habits in other particulars were not what they ought to be. Joseph seemed to be greatly affected by what his parent said. He went into the kitchen, and a few minutes later the family heard him fall to the floor. His father and a brother, William, ran to the kitchen, where they found Joseph lying unconscious near the [illegible]

$6,000,000 A YEAR LOTTERY PROFITS

Federal Officers Say the Morrises, Baldwin, and Howard Got It.

DENIAL BY THE MORRISES

Declare in Statement on Indictments That They Have No Interest in Any Lottery.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, April 14.—That profits of $6,000,000 a year were divided among the men at the head of the Honduras Lottery is the assertion made by the Federal officers in Mobile whose investigations have resulted in the twenty-four indictments for conspiracy. They declare that Alfred Hennen Morris and Dave Hennen Morris of New York and New Orleans and Albert Baldwin, Sr., and Frank T. Howard, bankers of this city, are the owners of the company and got the great share of these profits.

Evidence showing an organization throughout the country has been gathered by the Government through its raids and the admissions of some of the men implicated. This organization called for huge expenditures all the way along the line, but even after they were paid there was plenty left for the men "higher up." When the cases are tried, it is said, the country will be astonished at the revelations of the widespread operations of this big gambling scheme, despite all the efforts of the Government to stop them.

Should the Federal officers prove their case against the four men mentioned, they will show that the lottery business of the country has simply been handed down from father to son, although the younger Morrises and Howard have sought to free their names from connection with lotteries. Undoubtedly proof of such a connection would again raise questions among society people of New Orleans which were raised in the excitement over the old Louisiana Lottery.

Alfred Hennen Morris and Dave Hennen Morris are sons of the late John A. Morris, whose father was known as the "Lottery King of Delaware." On their mother's side they are grandsons of Alfred Hennen, an illustrious jurist of Louisiana.

It was through the late Charles T. Howard, father of Frank T. Howard, that the elder Morris and his associates, among them Baldwin, obtained from a reconstruction Legislature the charter of the Louisiana Lottery Company for twenty-five years. Howard was the first President of the company.

While the Morrises and the Howards and their associates amassed fortunes, social sentiment for years ran very strongly against them. Howard was blackballed when he applied for membership in the Jockey Club, which operated the famous Metairie race track. He swore that he would convert the track into a cemetery, and to-day the Howard family tomb stands on the site.

When the younger Howard married, social antagonism told so heavily that the father forsook a mansion he had built in New Orleans and made his home at Biloxi. His wife's life was rather desolate then, but she was a very lovable and charitable woman. She built the present Church of the Redeemer as a memorial to her husband and purchased the beautiful West home adjoining and donated it to the church as a rectory. Frank T. Howard has always made his home in New Orleans, and in recent years has been prominent socially.

In its halcyon days the Louisiana Lottery Company's possible receipts were $4,000,000 a month, with prizes running about 60 per cent. thereof. Unsold tickets were always put in the wheel, however, and often drew the prizes. The principal stockholders amassed big fortunes.

When John A. Morris died his wealth was estimated by close friends at between $18,000,000 and $20,000,000. He was not only the largest stockholder in the old lottery company, but the daily drawing was his personal property, and this alone paid him profits of about $1,500 a day.

Chapman Hyams, one of the indicted men, is the head of the firm of Hyams & Moore, one of the leading stock brokerage firms of New Orleans. Hyams and Baldwin are both Directors of the United States Trust Company and Savings Bank, which is regarded as a trust and savings adjunct of the New Orleans National Bank, which is one of the banks through which tickets have sometimes been cashed since the anti-lottery law went into effect.

P. J. Demarest is now President of the Honduras National Lottery Company. Gen. Cabell has served as commissioner of drawings, a place for years occupied by Gen. Pierre G. T. Beauregard, whose social position in New Orleans suffered somewhat by virtue of the fact. The alleged connection with the lottery of the other New Orleans men indicted is not known.

W. P. Johnstone of Cincinnati has for some years been known as a man of very large income and as a cotton speculator of considerable resources and success.

DENIAL BY MORRIS BROTHERS.

Declare They Are Not Interested in Any Lottery Scheme.

Denial that they were interested in the Honduras lottery was made yesterday by Alfred Hennen Morris and Dave Hennen Morris, who have been indicted by the Federal Grand Jury in Mobile, Ala., with several other prominent men, on charges of conspiracy to defeat the United States anti-lottery laws. It is alleged that they conspired to keep the old Louisiana lottery alive under the name of the Honduras lottery. Their statement reads:

"Referring to the published reports of the indictments found in Mobile for a conspiracy to violate the anti-lottery laws of the United States arising out of the alleged operations of the Honduras Lottery Company, in which it was stated that we were among the owners of the company, we beg to state that we neither of us have any ownership or other interest, direct or indirect, in any form whatsoever in the Honduras Lottery Company, or in any other lottery company or lottery enterprise of any description. Respectfully,

"A. HENNEN MORRIS,
"DAVE H. MORRIS."

OBJECT TO "THE SMOKE."

New York Law School Faculty Want More Dignity in the Student Paper.

The name of the college publication of the New York Law School is The Smoke. The editors say the title connotes no idea of hot air, but was designed to suggest a publication filled with witty, airy things which would afford recreation and enable the student mind to unbend after hard plugging in the vitals of bulky law books.

The Faculty has now demanded that the publication have at least a more dignified name. The editors are steadfast in defending The Smoke, and they have behind them the approval of the student body in their fight for "a name and a principle."

MEXICO CITY SHAKEN.

Shock Lasting 4½ Minutes Does Some Damage—Heaviest in Years.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 14.—An earthquake lasting four and a half minutes startled this city to-night. The earth rocked in a long, swinging motion, terrifying the inhabitants but doing no great damage, so far as can be learned, in this city.

Clocks in the city stopped at 11:34 (Mexican time,) which is thirty-six minutes slower than American time, and the perceptible motion of the earth ceased at 11:38½.

Telegraph wires were put out of commission and for a short time the city was in darkness owing to the failure of the electric lights. One wall of The Associated Press office was cracked from floor to ceiling.

The asphalt on a paved corner on Cinco de Mayo Street, one of the principal business streets of the city, was cracked open for a distance of ten yards. The shock is pronounced the heaviest here in years. People are thronging the streets, many having fled from their houses and dwellings in their night robes.

ESCAPES FROM SIBERIA.

Krustieff, Workmen's Leader, Had Been Sentenced for Sedition Speeches

ST. PETERSBURG, April 14.—It is announced that M. Krustieff, President of the Executive Committee of the Workmen's Council, who on Jan. 11, 1906, was sentenced to exile in Siberia and the loss of all civil rights for seditious speeches, has escaped abroad.

PUT $60 IN KITCHEN STOVE.

Mrs. Cobine Recovers the Money to Pay the Doctor's Bill.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., April 14.—Mrs. Frederick C. Cobine, imbued with the Spring cleaning motive, cleared odds and ends out of dresser drawers to-day and burned them in the kitchen stove. She had the range roaring with inflammable stuff when she suddenly remembered that there had been an envelope containing $60 in one of the drawers.

She gave one hasty look. The money was gone.

Mrs. Cobine deshed to the stove, lifted the lid, and unflinchingly thrust both hands into the flames to find the envelope.

She found it and recovered the scorched bills, but burned her hands badly. When the notes are redeemed at the Treasury Department their value will just about pay the doctor's bill, but will not compensate for the pain Mrs. Cobine suffered.

CAR HITS ALBANY EXPRESS.

Jumps the Track at Yonkers and Holds Up Traffic Two Hours.

A car of a northbound freight jumped the track just south of the Yonkers station last night and crashed into the engine of a southbound Albany express. Both trains were going slowly, so little damage was done, but the freight traffic on the northbound track was tied up for nearly two hours, while the southbound train was blocked for one hour.

The express had stopped at the Yonkers station, and had just started when the freight came in sight. The coupling of one car of the freight train broke and one car jumped the track to the southbound track, crashing into the front of the express engine.

The passengers on the train were shaken up a bit, but no one was injured. No effort was made by the railroad men to clear the tracks until the wreck had been reported to New York and orders received from there. The express engine was able to take the train to New York.

THOMAS WATSON FIGHTS.

Hits a Negro Porter on a Train and Others Take a Hand.

Special to The New York Times.

AUGUSTA, Ga., April 14.—Thomas Watson, once candidate of the Populist Party for the Presidency and now editor of a magazine in Atlanta, engaged in an altercation with a negro porter on a train between Atlanta and Augusta Saturday, and it ended in blows.

Watson was on a sleeping car, and was annoyed by the slow time made by the train and by what he termed the lack of courtesy shown him by the road officials. He and the conductor disputed, and the porter took the conductor's side. Watson hit the porter in the face with his grip, and there was an encounter between Watson, his friends, the conductor, and the negro. While the fight was in progress the train was stopped.

Passengers put an end to the trouble. Watson and the others had some bruises from the fray.

RAZOR FIGHT IN SUBWAY.

Passenger Who Tried to Part Negroes Badly Cut.

The passengers in a north-bound Subway train last night were terrified by a razor fight between two colored men. So far as is known neither of the negroes was injured, but Fritz Norman, a watchman, employed by Ludwig Baumann & Co., who tried to separate them, received a slash reaching from his left ear to his mouth, which severed the muscles in his cheek.

Two men helped Norman from the train at the Wall Street station. Policeman Grosky sent in a hurry call for an ambulance to Hudson Street Hospital, as Norman was growing weak from loss of blood. At the hospital it was said Norman would recover. The negroes escaped.

GEN. CHRISTMAS NOT DEAD.

Wounded in a Gallant Attmept to Carry His Chief from the Field.

PUERTO CORTEZ, April 9. (By Mail to Mobile, Ala., April 14.)—A telegram from the United States Consul General at Tegucigalpa to Acting Consul Greeley here says:

"Gen. Christmas, who is in the hospital slightly wounded, was shot while trying to carry his chief, Gen. Barhona, the Minister of War, from the field. Barhona was mortally wounded and begged Gen. Christmas to save himself, but Christmas would not abandon his chief, so was shot and captured."

The government at Tegucigalpa is controlled by a Junta composed of Gen. Maximo Rosales, ex-Minister of War; Gen. Sierra, candidate for the Presidency when Arias was overthrown; Gen. Gutierrez, revolutionary chief of the forces of Policarpo Bonilla, and E. C. Fiallos, Minister of Public Works.

WAR TALK OPENS PEACE CONGRESS

Bishop Potter Sharply Criticises Dr. Dix at Carnegie Hall Choral Service.

PASTOR SPEAKS FOR WAR

Bishop Calls Trinity Rector's Remarks to Loyal Legion "Oratorical Drippings."

STEAD PRAISES SOLDIERS

Peace Delegate Says We Must Admire and Applaud the Fighting Man—Meetings in Many Churches.

The long-heralded Peace Congress, held in this city as a preliminary to the Hegus Conference, began yesterday with war talk. First, William T. Stead of London praised the fighting man to the Ethical Society, and then Bishop Potter took exception to remarks made by Dr. Morgan Dix, rector of Trinity, to the Loyal Legion, upholding war, and decrying the efforts of the peace advocates to abolish it. During the day, too, there were minor skirmishes, Richard Bartholdt, peace leader, taking exception to a passage in President's Roosevelt's message, while Rabbi Emil Hirsch of Chicago, another peace advocate, took exception to the President's "big-stick" policy.

By far the most interesting skirmish was that between Bishop Potter and Dr. Dix. In the afternoon Dr. Dix preached a sermon to the members of the Loyal Legion, in which he said that war was an ancient, honorable, and necessary art; that the profession of a soldier was a noble one; that we were a long way from the thousand years of peace mentioned in the Bible; that even with international peace we would have to contend with internal strife, and, finally, that people who talked of international peace wasted both time and breath.

All of this, Bishop Potter, speaking at the choral service in Carnegie Hall last night, referred to as "oratorical drippings," regretting that he had heard the the sermon of Dr. Dix, and questioning whether it was a pleasure to listen to such utterances.

Mr. Stead was somewhat bitter in his talk to the Ethical Culture Society. He told them that they got together and talked, expressing admirable sentiments, but never doing anything. He called them "miserable peace people" and said:

"If you had attended as many peace conferences as I have you would know how sick I am."

At the Broadway Tabernacle, too, Mr. Stead went for the clergy and religious organizations, asking them where they would be if they had to appear before a court-martial and telling them that they might think they could fool God Almighty, but they wouldn't be able to hoodwink a judicial body.

CARNEGIE HALL SERVICE.

Choral Programme and Speeches at Preliminary Peace Meeting.

The first skirmish of the great fight against war took place last night in Carnegie Hall, where the introductory meeting or choral service of the first National Arbitration and Peace Congress was held. Earlier in the day there had been "small outpost" engagements at many of the city churches, and to-day at 3 o'clock the real battle will begin, for though the congress held here is but preliminary to The Hague conference, it is all-important inasmuch as The Hague conference has been called by President Roosevelt, and the United States is now regarded all over the world as the Nation of all others in the forefront of the international peace movement.

That the great aim of those behind the movement that has brought about the convening of the congress in this city is by no means underestimated by the general public was apparent last night, when, long before the hour for the choral service to begin, the streets about Carnegie Hall were filled with long lines of persons waiting to get into the meeting. The crowd was most orderely, and in no way resembled the mobs that surge about the big building when political conventions or other gatherings of that kind are being held.

Peace Emblems in the Hall.

In the hall there was a display of everything emblematical of peace. The back of the stage was hung with white material, gold star adorned, with white-bordered silk American flags festooned here and there. In the centre a soft white electric sign blazoned forth the watchword of the congress, "Peace," and on the white-draped and flag-hung balconies were shields of David and placards bearing the names of the world's peacemakers of all times.

An elaborate musical programme had been prepared for the occasion, and the Oratorio Society and a full orchestra, together with Mrs. Hissam De Moss, soprano, and Mr. David Mannes, violinist, all under the direction of Frank Damrosch, gave selections from the works of Handel, Mendelssohn, and Brahms.

Andrew Carnegie was to have presided, but the train bearing him and his foreign guests from Pittsburg was delayed, and the ironmaster did not put in an appearance until very late, when he quietly took a seat in a box, saying that, being late, he did not care to go upon the stage. In his absence Bishop Potter took charge.

The first speaker was Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch of Chicago. He made an impassioned plea for the substitution of the plowshare for the sword. "If words were expressive of our true sentiments," he said, "there would be peace and plenty instead of war." To cry that the world would mbecome steeped in materialism was false, he said, because materialism was as often as not the guiding motive of strife. While a great man had said "Speak softly, but carry a big stick," it should be remembered that the possession of a big stick very often provoked hostilities.

Bishop Potter made the next address. After explaining that the purpose of the congress was to show the sentiment of the American people to the whole world, he declared that every soldier was a non-producer, and therefore a burden on the community, which had trouble enough to pay for the battleships that were built. He also took issue with the address of Dr. Morgan Dix, delivered earlier in the the day.

"I had the pleasure, if you can call it such, of listening to a clergyman of my own denomination this afternoon, and in the course of his oratorical drippings he characterized our gathering here as hysterical sentimentality," said the Bishop.

Archbishop Farley was unable to be present, being in Washington at the conference of Archbishops. The address he had prepared was read by Mgr. Lavelle of St. Patrick's Cathedral. In part it was as follows:

Archbishop Farley's Address.

"War is so great an evil that one of the world's greatest generals described it with laconic eloquence as the most perfect state of human misery. There is wanting to it no horror, moral or material.

"Its benefits, if any, are indirect and uncertain; its evils are immediate, inevitable, and universal—vitiation of human character, waste of life and gain, arrest of human progress, injustice to the helpless and innocent, popular and permanent legacies of hate, and all the fiercest and most ruinous passions of the human breast. Its genuine symbol is the storm that blots out in a brief space the harvest, the home, even life itself, leaving behind it desolation, despair, and death.

Religious Influence Needed.

"I am not prepared to say that we shall ever entirely remove that dread scourge from society; but I believe it can be notably diminished in frequency and mitigated in its conduct. If this mitigation of the brutalities of war is to continue and is one day to cease among men, it will be through the influence of two great moral forces, Education and Religion.

"If in all the nations that make up modern Christendom, the youthful generations were taught, in all earnestness, the law of Christian holiness and rectitude of life, and made to know the divine exemplar of that life, we should have begun the formation of a Christian public opinion that would in time discredit many of the motives and occasions from which wars have in the past originated.

"I am of the opinion that we ought to appeal more directly to the influence of all religious bodies. In the individual, peace is a natural fruit of the religious sentiment. Logically, therefore, it should be the mental habit of a society that, speaking in a very broad sense, calls itself Christian, knows no higher ideals than those of the Prince of Peace. Hence I read with pleasure that Dr. Hillis, the historian of The Hague Conference, justly praises Radbertus's fine definition of the art of politics—'the royal art of ascertaining and accomplishing the will of God.'

"I believe with all my soul that until we recognize openly the moral power and authority of religion, not of the vague individual sentiment, but of organized religion—our efforts for a universal peace will accomplish but an imperfect result. I shall not, therefore, entirely surprise any one if in connection with the profound influence of religion in all that tends to create and preserve a state of peace I call attention to the continuous existence of a famous tribunal of peace—the Holy See at Rome.

"Its services in the past are so well known that all impartial historians, even such as do not recognize its spiritual authority, agree that for centuries it was a eucessful court of final resort for countless conflicts. The only practical international law for centuries was the Gospel of Christ as preached by its legatees to Emperors and Kings. Through centuries of selfish feudalism, when all Europe was splintered into countless little States, the Holy See was the only external force they bowed to and habitually invoked as unselfish, independent, courageous, beloved by the poor and weak, and feared by the rapacious and powerful.

"That tribunal still exists. Lord Stanley in the House of Lords, July 23, 1857, thus referred to it, when the question of International Arbitration was under discussion: 'Such a court exists already, the Court of the Bishop of Rome; all Continental Europe was disposed to recognize it as the proper arbiter when war was threatened between nations. He called attention to the happy settlement of the Caroline Islands dispute by Leo XIII, whereby war was averted between Germany and Spain. 'The Code of the Law of Nations,' he continued, 'drawn up at Lille by Catholic savants in November, 1869, could easily be accepted by England, which, following the example of Germany, need not hesitate to trust the impartiality of the Pope.'

Pope's Vast Authority.

"The Holy See is still the working head of the great Catholic body, over 256,000,000 of souls, and its moral authority was never greater. All these countless millions would surely welcome the recognition of the Holy See as a factor in international arbitration. It stands forth universally venerated as a divine representative committed to the works and the interests of peace by the nature and history of its office, at the head of a great working system of international religious administration which permits it to reach rapidly and efficiently the minds and the hearts of whole peoples and races.

"I am not prepared to say just how the Holy See might again take its place as a factor in the work of universal peace, or how the Christian world shall resurrect a tribunal that was once its pride and honor. It is certainly significant enough that when the Czar Nicholas first proposed an International Tribunal of Peace he invited the Holy See to take part in the proceedings, and that the Queen of Holland wrote personally to Leo XIII. requesting his co-operation. I think I can safely say that if the Holy See were no longer excluded from this noble and eminently religious enterprise the thirteen or more millions of American Catholics would at once take a livelier interest in the movement for the abolition of war. It would appear to them as more than a Utopian scheme, as something practicable, and in a large measure attainable."

Carnegie Hall was thronged to its capacity long before the music began and the audience styed throughout the service. It is safe to say that there never was a more attentive audience in the great concert hall. The music was well received, and all of the speeches were roundly applauded.

So great was the crowd when the doors were opened that late comers stood no chance of getting in. It had been arranged, however, that overfluw meetings should be held at several near-by churches, chief among which was Calvary Baptist Church. Fully fifteen hundred persons attended these overflow meetings. Rabbi Hirsch and Bishop Potter going to each and making brief addresses on "Peace."

BELITTLES PEACE CONGRESS.

Dr. Morgan Dix Tells Loyal Legion War Is Necessary.

The Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, rector of Trinity, speaking to the members of the Loyal Legion yesterday in the Church of the Incarnation, made little of the Peace Congress which virtually began last night, and spoke of the "ancient, honorable, and necessary art of war." He said in part:

"This is a military order, and as such it stands for a certain estimate of the value of the profession of arms. That profession is one of the oldest in history; honorable and useful to the State. You, as members of such an order as this, can have no sympathy with people who waste time and breath in decrying the soldier and misrepresenting the value of his work; such would disband, had they the power, the armies of the United States and run our navy on the rocks, there to break up and go to pieces. • • •

"The art of war is an ancient, honorable, necessary art. Appreciating the motives of peace societies and giving them credit for the good which they have done, we warn them, however, not to be over sanguine or to become excited in the expectation of immediate, or even early, success. The day is not in sight when their ideas can find universal, or anything near to universal, acceptance. Not one of us will live to see the entrance into the thousand years of peace. We fear that if international war should cease that happy occurrence would not bring war to an end; it would still have to be waged not by nation against nation, but within each nation, between forces protective of law order and other forces destructive to the peace and quiet of the State.

"Dismiss the police, disband the National Guard, and secure non-interference by the General Government, and what would happen? I know what I am talking about, for I saw with these eyes the Astor Place riot of 1849, and the draft riots in 1863, and the Orange riots in 1870-1871; and I venture to predict as possible, that within a month we should see worse things yet; mobs parading the streets, houses burning, shops looted, and citizens flying for their lives. Such revolutionary outrage would of course provoke resistance."

Among the listeners to Dr. Dix was Bishop Potter, who at the peace choral service in the evening criticised the clergyman's remarks.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE SERVICE.

Baron de Constant and Mr. Bartholdt Address a Large Congregation.

Services preliminary to the Peace Congress, the regular sessions of which will begin to-day at Carnegie Hall, were held in several city churches yesterday, the meetings being addrssed by one or more of the delegates to the congress. In every instance, contrary to the expectations of many, the attendance was extremely large, and the intense interest displayed in the speeches on international peace occasioned surprise.

Chief among the special services was that held at the First Church of Christ, Scientist, which was attended by a congregation of nearly 2,000 persons, and was addressed by Baron D'Estournelles de Constant, head of the French section of the International Peace Conference; Richard Bartholdt, President of the American Arbitration Group, and Hayne Davis, American Secretary of the International Conciliation League. At this meeting Mr. Bartholdt took issue with President Roosevelt as to a passage in the latter's message.

After the services had been opened with an organ prelude consisting of the National Anthem and the "Marseillaise," Mr. Davis read a passage from the First Corinthians, thirteen chapter, on charity. This was followed by a quotation from Mary Baker G. Eddy's book, "Science and Health," reading:

The divine principle of the First Commandment bases the science of being, by which man demonstrates health, holiness, and life eternal. One infinite God, good, unifies men and nations, constitutes the brotherhood of man; ends wars, fulfills the Scripture, "Love thy neighbor as thyself"; annihilates pagan and Christian idolatry—whatever is wrong in social, civil, criminal, political, and religious codes; equalizes the sexes; annuls the curse on man, and leaves nothing that can sin, suffer, be punished, or destroyed.

Mr. Davis then introduced Mr. Bartholdt, explaining his work in the interests of international peace and giving him the credit of calling together the congress that will convene to-morrow. He also explained how Baron d'Estournelles came to leave the diplomatic service to take up the fight for peace.

Mr. Bartholdt said that the question of international peace was the greatest moral question before this or any other people in the world, and that the love of one's fellow-men and the love of peace was the essence of religion.

"We cannot be good Christians without being opposed to war and to the taking of the lives of men in war," he said. "War is a flagrant violation of every tenet of religion."

Quintinuing, he said that it was a time for deeds, not words, and that the congress which is to meet to-day is called for the purpose of expressing the public sentiment of America in favor of arbitration and peace. He then called upon those present to say "amen" to the programme that had been arranged. The internationnl condition to-day, he said, was not a peaceful one, but simply an armistice. What was needed was to replace this temporary peace with permanent peace, which could not be disturbed save when one nntion rebelled against the will of all the other nations. As individuals went to court to settle their differences, so nations should do the same, and they should obey the law they had made for the guidance of their citizens. Continuing he said:

"Against these contentions two arguments have been advanced by, what I must say, are high authorities. The first, contained in the President's message, was that if a nation finds it has been wronged by another nation, it must stand for its rights and protect its rights, even if the doing so leads to war. To this I answer: 'Who is the best judge of what is right, the Government that thinke it has been wronged or an impartial tribunal appointed for the purpose of settling such disputes?'"

Referring to the cases settled by The Hague Tribunal thus far and the fact that not a single appeal had been taken, Mr. Bartholdt said it had been evidenced that the moral force of public opinion was more powerful than armies and navies. It was proposed, he said, to have the next Hague Conference made a permanent body, and the programme arranged for presentation there contemplated an arbitration treaty between all nations and thorough investigation of all important matters before action was taken. The nation opposing this plan, he said, would be regarded as the black sheep of the family.

Baron d'Estournelles spoke first in French. In English he praised the people for turning out in such numbers to listen to speeches on peace, and said that no such interest was displayed in the subject in the capitals of Europe. Every one was agreed on the principles of the movement, he continued, but the thing was to discover the way to accomplish the end. That progress had been made he felt assured, for twenty-five years ago the firing on the fishing boats in the North Sea by the Russian Admiral Rojestvenski wou'd have caused a great war.

What was necessary, he said, was a "trust" of good will, an organization of individuals to forward not simply arbitration, but conciliation.

After Baron Eugene de Ferse of St. Petersburg had spoken a few words, a motion to support the programme arranged for The Hague Conference was passed unanimously.

PROGRAMME FOR TO-DAY.

Carnegie to Preside at Two Meetings —Reception to Delegates.

The Peace Congress prozrnmme for to-day includes a reception and luncheon and two meetings at Carnegie Hall, at both of which Andrew Carnegie will preside.

At the first deliberative session, which will begin at 3 o'clock, the address of welcome to the foreign and other guests will be made by Mayor McClellan. This will be followed by the rending of a letter from President Roosevelt, who was at first expected to be present. Elihu Root, Secretary of State, will address the meeting on "The American Sentiment of Humanity," and there will also be addresses by Gov. Charles E. Hughes and Mr. Carnegie. This meeting is termed the opening meeting.

The evening session will be devoted to "International Views of the Peace Movement." Addresses will be made by Baron d'Estournelles de Constant of France, Prof. Hugo Munsterberg; "Germany, a Land of Peace and Industry," Oscar S. Strauss; "The Recipient of the Nobel Prize," William T. Stead of London; Col. Sir Robert Cranston and Sirf Robert S. Ball, "The Evolution of Warfare."

The reception and luncheon will be held at the City Club, 55 West Forty-fourth street, from 1 to 2:30 o'clock.

PEACE TALKS TO Y. M. C. A.

E. D. Mead and Rabbi Hirsch Address the West Side Branch.

At the men's meeting under the auspices of the West Side Branch of the Young Men's Christian Association at the Majestic Theatre yesterday afternoon Edwin D. Mead of Boston and Rabbi Emil G. Hirsch of Chicago, both here for the Peace Congress, spoke.

Rabbi Hirsch deplored the building of cruisers and battleships, and said that it was the greed of the world that had made these ships necessary.

"Repend ye, repent ye," he continued, "for undoubtedly the kingdom is nigh and wars will soon come to be amenq the lost arts.

"In time of war one would think that every nation had a different God, for they all pray to their God that victory may perch upon their banners. If nations would remember that there is but one God for all could they ask Him to bless their arms, thereby implying that the arms of the other nation should not be blessed? If every man is God's child then we should have no wars on this earth.

Mr. Mead said in part: "To every man and to every nation comes the moment to decide in some great cause. Every age has its common cnuse. The age of your fathers was the freedom of the negro. This age it is war versus peace. Will you etop the system that demands man killing?"

PEACE SPEAKERS DIFFER.

Subject of Spanish War Broached at Meeting in Boston the Cause.

BOSTON, April 14.—Rarely has there been so large a gathering of Boston people under one roof as that which assembled in the Christian Science Church tonight "to swell Boston's voice," as one speaker said, "in recognition and support of the National Peace and Arbitration Congress," which begins in New York to-morrow. Over 5,000 people listened to three Boston orators as they pleaded for universal peace. They were ex-Secretary of the Navy John D. Long, ex-Gov. John L. Bates, and William Lloyd Garrison. The Rev. William J. McKenzie of Cambridge presided, and the meeting was unsectarian.

Ex-Secretary Long, who opened the speechmaking, said that the gathering was to speed arbitration and save human life. He referred, however, to the late war with Spain, and said that he did not know how it could have been avoided or how Cuba could have been rescued without war, although the conflict gave pain to President McKinley. "But the war was not waged," he said, "for conquest, glory, or gain." It was brief, and the wounds were soon healed.

William Lloyd Garrison did not spare the churches of the country in his criticism, and said that the bearers of the name of Christians were ever ready to uphold and justify legalized murder when their own country was involved. He denounced the war with Spain, and said:

"This guilty Nation and our kindred in guilt across the Atlantic are ripe for repentance, which should manifest itself in acts."

Ex-Gov. Bates referred briefly to ex-Secretary Long as the bravest man that ever issued orders to a fleet of war vessels and to Mr. Garrison as the man who had done more to bring on the civil war than nny one else in the country, and who in the end was still shouting that he would never retract. Thinking men, he said, no longer desired, but demanded, that the court at The Hague should have larger power in arbitration, and that it should be supplemented by a world's parliament with power to define the great principles that should govern civilized nations in their relations with each other.

People's Institute Invites Hughes.

Without a negative vote, the 2,000 people who attended the meeting of the People's Institute at Cooper Union last night adopted a motion to invite Gov. Hughes to address them some night in the near future on legislative questions of the day. The resolutions declared that they regarded him as a Governor who was striving for the best interests of the people of the State.

Manufacturing Openings in the Middle West.

The manufacturing trend is westward. The actual capital invested in manufacturing industries in the States of Illinois, Wisconsin, Michigan, Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota and Missouri was 42% greater in 1905 than in 1900——And there was a considerably larger percentage of increase in these prosperous Western States than in a corresponding number in the East.

THE CHICAGO MILWAUKEE & ST. PAUL RAILWAY

reaches the important manufacturing and commercial centers of these "money-making" States. Right now—to-day—there are industrial openings which offer numerous opportunities and advantages to new or enlarged industries.

Manufacturers who desire to establish new or branch factories at any point reached by the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway in these flourishing Middle-West States are invited to write to the Industrial Department. Prompt attention will be given to all inquiries. Address,

STEAD TALKS WAR TO ETHICAL SOCIETY

Editor Glorifies the Fighting Man as One We Most Admire and Applaud.

"MISERABLE PEACE PEOPLE"

Speaker, in a Pessimistic Mood, Says Ethical Culturists Need Common Sense.

William T. Stead, the London editor, and Baron d'Estournelles de Constant, the French Senator, spoke yesterday at the regular Sunday morning meeting held under the auspices of the Society for Ethical Culture, in Carnegie Hall, on "The Peace Movement."

Mr. Stead so framed his speech that when he had finished President Adler of the society took occasion to say soothingly to the audience, which almost filled the big hall, that it sometimes does an organization as well as a person good to be chastised. The London editor had said that there were always plenty of brains in ethical societies, but precious little heart. Such organizations were like peace congresses, he added, in their astounding lack of anything practical in their work. He hoped the society under whose auspices he was speaking was an exception to this rule.

President Adler had told the audience that the speaker's request that signs of disapprobation be allowed had been acceded to, and that they could say right out when they did not like what he should tell them. No one so exercised this privilege. It is a rule with the Society for Ethical Culture that signs of approval are to be cut out.

A Pessimistic London Editor.

"A lot of you ethical folks will get together," Mr. Stead said bitingly, "and you will express admirable sentiments, but you will never do a single thing to carry them out. In this ethical societies are again like peace meetings. What we want now to carry out our plans is common sense.

"Oh, my friends," went on Mr. Stead wearily, "if you had nttended as many peace conferences as I have you would know how sick I am.

"As for fighting men, give me a fighting man every time for common sense. What we want is action, and let us look to fighting men for instruction in this. Let us hold a council of war and decide what to do and then do it. Declaiming pretty copybook truisms is no substitute for effective action.

"O, you miserable peace people, you remind me of the lover who passionately declaimed that he would do anything—swim the Hellespont, dash through fire, and I know not what else—at her simple bidding. 'Oh, I don't want you to do any of these things,' she answered, 'but I do want you to shave your beard.' That was too much. He was a dyed-in-the-wool peace man.

"The soldier husband leaves his wife at the call of arms. The boy takes leave of his home, neither of them counting the cost so long as he can serve his country. What do you peace people do? You attend a few meetings—when the weather is fine—and subscribe 10 cents. I was down at Washington the other dny. Everywhere were stone men on horses, and those who hadn't horses had swords and guns and so on. They were all soldiers or sailors. The nation delights to honor those who do things."

Wants a Practical Peace Conference.

Mr. Stead said he hoped the first American peace conference would be as practical as a council of war held in a General's tent before a battle. He pointed out Baron d'Estournelles as an example of a practical peace worker. He attributed the entente cordiale established within the last half dozen years between England and France tu the work of the Baron, who had engineered a visit of over 400 French deputies and others prominent in the Government of France to England. Tho visit was returned by the Englishmen. And that piece of actual accomplishment did more good than the Baron could have done if he had gone home and written about entente cordiales until he was blue in the face.

Mr. Stead he had come from Pittsburg yesterday morning with an idea actually picked up there. He admitted that this was wonderful, but put forth the idea. He advocated that the college men and women of America be called upon for 50 cents each to defray the expenses of a pilgrimage to start from this country and to end at tho coming Hague conference, the pilgrimage to be recruited from European countries through which the pioneer pilgrims should pass.

"America should start this pilgrimage," he went on. "You should send twelve persons of National or international reputation. It will do no good to send people who are not known—people who can well afford to lose the time.

A Bit of English Sarcasm.

"There is some doubt in Europe as to some of your American institutions, but there is none as to the sterling good of your colleges and universities. They are going up. I talked with four college Presidents nt Pittsburg who assured me that their boys were good for half a dollar each for the pilgrimage. I know the others could be depended on.

"Let your twelve stop in England first. There they will be welcomed, and recruits will join them. Let the growing band go through the capitals of Southern Europe to St. Petersburg, ending up at The Hague with a mighty band of workers who would show the rulers of nations that the people are stirred. That's what makes them sit up and take notice—when the people are stirred."

In a brief address introducing the speakers Dr. Felix Adler said that it was hoped and believed that the unofficial peace gathering beginning last night in New York would have its effect on the official gathering at The Hague. Baron de Constant began talking in French, but delivered more than half of his address in English. He advocated the formation of local peace organizations as an absolutely necessary prerequisite to a successful national or international organization.

Mrs. Anna Garlin Spencer, Vice President of the American Peace Society, said that it was the distinctive duty of the United States to take the initiative against militarism. She thought that possibly some of the representatives from the older countries who would be at The Hague might be so hampered that they could not talk freely on this subject, but no restrictions would be put on the American representatives.

STEAD CRITICISES CHURCHES.

Wants Them to Work Harder for Universal Peace.

At a peace meeting in the Broadway Tabernacle, Broadway and Fifty-sixth Street, yesterday afternoon, William T. Stead criticised churches and churchmen for not laboring for peace in the world. He put his arraignment in very strong language, which caused much whispering among his audience.

"I am not going to say one word against war and warriors this afternoon," said Mr. Stead. "But I want to tell you the organization that controls war is much stronger than the organization of the Church of Christ ever was. What do you suppose would happen to the majority of us religious people if we were subjected to the discipline and punishment which Generals nnd Admirals have found necessary to employ to get efficiency? We would be taken out and shot.

"Any General or Admiral who loses battle after battle is court-martialed. I would like to ask what would happen to churches and religious organizations if they were put under martial law. This would be the result: You can fool, or you think you can fool, God Almighty, but you can't fool a court-martial. What would be the excuse offered by church organizations for their failure to live up to their contract? They would say that they were so busy bringing the kingdom of heaven to earth that they had no time to attend to other things."

Mr. Stead made this statement after Dr. Joseph Silverman of the Temple Emanu-El had delivered a warm address on the savagery of modern warfare, which was based on a prophecy of Isaiah. Turning to Dr. Silverman, Mr. Stead continued:

"I wish to express to you my approbation of your talk. I wish to commend the wurk of your race. If we would read a little more of the Prophet Isaiah and less of the Thaw trial—"

Almost every pair of hands in the auditorium clapped here, and the applause was prolonged.

"We might make a little more effort to do something practical," continued Mr. Stead, "and not something to arouse sentiment, which looks well in type."

Dr. Silverman's address was a strong attack on our conceit about our civilization. He said in part:

"What betokens this great culture and civilization? Where has been our great progress? Is it not true that every scientific invention is made for war? Are not our accomplishments in art and science destructive as well as constructive? Progress lifts its head toward heaven and has a canker worm in its base. Every new invention makes the death-dealing machinery more and more destructive. The ancients went forth to battle with simple weapons. We men of modern civilization go forth and employ electricity and chemistry for our fighting. Where are we superior to the savage? There is not less, but more, brutality and savagery now than formerly.

"Why do we have war? Because the people want war. They like the glory and the aggrandizement in war. They like it because it is a business, although the most nefarious business of our modern civilization. Shall we still be content to behold the awful spectacle of war? We are face to face with a crisis. The question simply is: Shall we have perpetual war or perpetual peace? It is for you to choose."

The Brill Booklet is just off the press

Pretty late in the season? It was not written six months ago—a hit-or-miss guess as to what would be in vogue now.

Its style information is most recent and authoritative.

It will guide you in selection so that you can secure clothes of utmost correctness, service and value.

It contains a definite exposition of the merits of Brill clothes—worth your knowing.

It names six foremost tailoring institutions that tailor Brill clothes and tells wherein the six excel.

It marks for identification four Brill-directed tailoring organizations and characterizes their productions.

It tells "what is strictly proper to wear."

Best of all, it illustrates faithfully the exclusive Brill models widely designed by press and fashion authorities as "New York's Coming Styles."

SHOT TWO POLICEMEN; 1 DEAD, OTHER DYING

Italian's Deadly Work When Brought to Bay After Shooting a Man.

FOUGHT ON HOUSE STEPS

Salvatore Governale Put Bullets Into Patrolmen Sechler and Selleck Following Pursuit.

While endeavoring to capture two fugitive Italians, one of whom had shot another Italian, Patrolman George M. Sechler of the Mercer Street Station was shot and mortally wounded by Salvatore Governale, one of the fugitives, yesterday afternoon in Thompson Street, where Salvatore had been brought to bay. Salvatore, who is an ironworker and lived at 25 Cornelia Street, had but a moment before put a bullet into the body of Patrolman Alfred Selleck, Sechler's partner, who was also engaged in the pursuit. Sechler died in St. Vincent's Hospital at 10:10 o'clock last night, and Selleck cannot live.

Both policemen were detailed to plain clothes duty in the Mercer Street Station under Capt. Myles O'Reilly.

Acording to the story as the police relate it, Salvatore and John Governale, brothers, recently over from Palermo, Italy, had gone into a public comfort station in Washington Square Park, about 100 feet from the Garibaldi Status. As the Governales came out two young American Italians entered, one brushing roughly against John Governale. John turned on the young fellow with a remark that brought forth severe blows, when the Governale brothers ran out of the comfort station and Salvatore took up a position on the lawn, about fifteen paces from the comfort station, facing it. He held his right hand at his back trousers' pocket.

When Charles Vincenico and Paul Vortano, the two young American Italians, came out, Salvatore fired three shots at Vincenico in rapid succession. One shot struck Vincenico near the groin, the other of two shots which took effect struck Vencenico full in the groin. Vincenico fell, and the Governale brothers ran. They went in the direction of Thompson Street.

Crowd in a Panic.

When the firing began panic seized the several hundred men, women, and children in the park, and the majority of them fled in many directions. Crossing the park at the time was Detective Sergeant John J. Fogarty. Uniformed Patrolman Thomas Ryan was also near by. Fogarty and Ryan went in pursuit of the two escaping brothers, Fogarty shouting to Ryan directions for heading the brothers off at a point 200 feet away.

Standing in Third Street, near Sullivan, when the three shots were fired, were Patrolmen Sellick and Seckler, in plain clothes, doing special duty. They heard the shots fired, and ran around into Thompson Street to get to the park more quickly than by way of Sullivan Street. As they entered Thompson Street they saw the two Governale brothers running toward them, followed by Fogarty, whom they knew, and also by Ryan.

Shot When Brought to Bay.

To the Governale brothers is was apparent they would be taken prisoners unless they acted quickly. Sellick and Seckler were ten paces away when the brothers ran up the steps and tried to get into the six-story apartment house at 230 and 232 Thompson Street. The street door was closed, and held fast with a snap lock. Salvatore turned at bay, and seeing Selleck, who is a big six-footer, looming up over him, held up his revolver, which contained but two remaining shots in its five chambers, and pulled the trigger. The bullet penetrated Sellick's left breast very near the heart, and he fell unconscious where he had been standing on the stone porch.

Sechler followed Sellick, and was about to grapple with Salvatore Governale when the latter let go at Sechler with the remaining shot, and the bullet entered Sechler's abdomen.

When Sechler was shot he did not lose his head. The detective, thoroughly enraged at the fate of his partner lying on the steps near by, battered Salvatore Governale furiously about the head and face with a billy he carried, and which he then held in his right hand. Ten seconds later Fogarty dropped on Vovernale, after Sechler had taken away the Italian's revolver, and the hands of the Central office man closed around the bull-like neck of the Italian with such force that in no time the Italian dropped, half insensible, to his knees alongside Sellick.

The Murderer's Brother Escapes.

Sellick writhed about on the stone stoop and rolled down on to the sidewalk, where he lay like a dead man. Sechler, seeing Fogarty had Governale, dropped insensible across his partner's body. Patrolman Ryan came up, and a quick search failed to disclose the whereabouts of the brother of the captured man. Fogarty had handcuffed his prisoner, who pleaded for mercy, and, followed by a mob of several hundred persons, marched Salvatore Governale to the Mercer Street station, charged temporarily with felonious assault.

Ryan ordered a dozen or more citizens standing around to aid him in carrying the two policemen to neighboring drug stores. Sellick was carried into a drug store at Third and Thompson Streets, and Sechler was token to a drug store at West Broadway and Third Street. Calls were sent through Police Headquarters for ambulances from St. Vincent's Hospital. In another drug store at West Broadway the police—by this time there were nine or ten on the scene—found the injured Vincenzo.

Ambulances carried the two policemen and Vincenico to the hospital. Sergeant Cooney, on the desk in the Mercer Street Station, allowed Detective Sergeant Fogarty to take the arrested man to the hospital, there to be identified by his victims. Two policemen accompanied Fogarty. At the hospital Sellick, Sechler, and Vincenico looked at Governale, and said he was the man who had shot them. The five-chambered 38-calibre revolver was taken possession of by the police.

Sechler was suffering indescribable agony, and when he recovered consciousness he was put on the operating table in the hospital. His first question, on being told his chance for recovery was one in a thousand, was:

Dying Man Wanted Wife and Baby.

"Can't you send for my wife and the baby?"

Fogarty said Sechler had a daughter five weeks old in his Brooklyn home, and Police Headquarters was notified to have the precincts in which the two men lived send the relatives of the injured men to the hospital.

Second Deputy Police Commissioner Bugher was at Police Headquarters, and had the Brooklyn police notify Mrs. Sechler that the Commissioner's automobile would be waiting for her and the baby at the New York end of the Brooklyn Bridge. The woman was hurried to the hospital by the Commissioner.

When the doctors took Sechler off the operating table Sellick was put under the knife. The doctors held out small hope for either of the two policemen. The wife got to the hospital and remained with her baby in her arms till her husband died.

Coroner Harburger was notified of the shooting, and he went to the hospital, where he obtained ante-mortem statements from the three men. Deputy Assistant District Attorney Manley got to the station house a little later, and got statements from Joseph Rossi, who lives on the second floor of the apartment house Governale tried to enter, and Abraham Levy, 15, a schoolboy, of 105 West Third Street, who, the police say, was an eye witness to the shooting, among other witnesses.

From the statements of Vincenico, Eellick, Sechler, and Detective Sergeant Fogarty, the police got a comprehensive story of the shooting.

the question that my husband could have shot himself. He must have gotten out of bed a little while before I heard that yell. I don't know, however, because I was not aroused. It was nothing unusual for him to get up so. He had asthma and often would get up during the night and go to the sitting room where he would get more air. But he always used to open the window from the top because he was afraid of catching cold. The window was open from the bottom when I reached the room. He would not have raised it so."

No Signs of Burglar's Visit.

There were no marks on the wood to indicate that an intruder had used a jimmy in raising the window. The lock was not broken. Nor were there any scars on the wooden fence which a thief would have had to scale and stand upon to reach the bottom of the fire escape. The front door was still locked, as Christine says she left it upon returning from the theatre with her brother. And, moreover, the fence was so weak that the top board fell off yesterday afternoon when one of the sons climbed upon it to test the wood.

Threo revolvers were found by the police in the top drawer of the bureau, a few feet from the spot where Mr. Schanbacher must have stood when shot. Two of these were 22 calibre weapons, which had been used only for Fourth of July celebrations, and were made for blank cartridges. The other was an "English Bulldog" revolver, in which were four exploded cartridges and one blank. There was dust in the barrels. It, too, was of a smaller calibre than the weapon used to kill Mr. Schanbacher. A 38-calibre bullet was found imbedded at the base of his spine when Dr. T. D. Lehane, physician for Coroner Dooley, made a post-mortem late yesterday afternoon. He found that the ball had entered the abdomen and taken a downward course, just as it would if Mr. Schanbacher had been aroused by the appearance of an intruder, had raised from the couch, and started to spring upon his assailant.

There were no powder marks upon Mr. Schanbacher's night clothing, nor around the wound. The hospital report which was handed to Dr. Lehane was made out by Dr. Reed, the ambulance surgeon, and was to the effect that Schanbacher had been shot by an unknown man while in the act of robbing the Schanbacher home. This was gathered from the statements of the family directly after the shooting. The man was too weak to make a further statement when placed upon the operating table, where he died at 10 o'clock in the morning.

The Couple Quarreled at Times.

Mrs. Schanbacher was her husband's second wife. She was a Mrs. Mary Henninger, who was housekeeper for Mr. Schanbacher when his first wife died, about five years ago. He married her a few months later. She is stepmother to all the children except Freda, who is her daughter by a former husband.

Neighbors say there were quarrels between Mr. Schanbacher and his second wife at times, and that frequently the cause of the domestic bickerings was the children. But there is no feeling between the Schanbacher children and their stepsister Freda. A frequent visitor at the Schanbacher home is Jack Heinrich, proprietor of the Tunnel saloon, at Forty-second Street and Third Avenue. Mr. Schanbacher spent much of his time there chatting with his friend, the proprietor. They were interested in several business deals. Mr. Schanbacher told him all his secrets, although he had but few.

It was through his friend Heinrich that Mr. Schanbacher became a member of the Knights and Ladies of Honor, a beneficiary society, which pays to the heirs of its members $1,000. This was the only insurance that was carried by the real estate dealer. One day in the Summer of 1905 Mr. Schanbacher made a will, leaving his entire estate to his wife and children. But he never signed it, and after a while it was lost. About two weeks ago a friend of the family asked him why he did not draw up a will, and he replied "Time enough." He was a man of powerful physique, and was the heaviest man in that section of the city. He weighed about 250 pounds, and his girth was just 58 inches. In spite of his weight and age, however, Mr. Schanbacher was remarkably active and could acquit himself well in a fight. This was known to a few unruly tenants who had felt the power of his good right arm.

Testing the Wife's Story.

Inspector Walsh and Capt. Lantry of the East Fifty-first Street Station worked hard on the case yesterday, assisted by half a dozen detectives. After questioning every member of the Schanbacher family they made a thorough inspection of the premises, and Inspector Walsh performed a series of experiments in an effort to prove the reliability of the stories the family told of the sounds that had come from the dining room at the time of the shooting. While Mrs. Schanbacher stood in her bedroom with the door ajar, just as she says it was when she heard the shot, the Inspector told Detective Conroy to place himself in the position of a man trying to escape through the window. The detective did so, making a slight noise in scrambling through the narrow casing. On the outside his foot hit against some tin pails.

"Did you hear anything?" asked the Inspector. Mrs. Schanbacher admitted that she did.

"And you heard no sound of a man escaping last night after the pistol shot?" he asked.

"No, I didn't, but I was so scared and excited that I might not have noticed it."

Then the Inspector asked Conroy to make a quiet "get away." This he did, and no sound could be heard in the adjoining room.

While these experiments were going on a canary was singing clearly in its cage above the couch where Mr. Schanbacher had evidently reclined just before the shooting. The bird was the only cheerful creature in the room. Some of the children were crying. The widow was composed, but was evidently laboring under a great strain. There was a pet dog in the Schanbacher flat on Saturday night, but it slept in the boy's room, at the front of the house. It did not bark until after the policemen arrived, ten minutes after Mrs. Schanbacher says she heard the cry and the pistol shot.

The Dog Didn't Bark.

The Inspector laid especial emphasis on this part of his investigation and questioned each of the children about the dog. None of them had heard it bark. The dog is usually wakeful, and makes a noise when it hears an unusual sound. But if the children were not disturbed until their mother screamed it is unlikely that the dog would have heard the sounds from the rear room. A tailor who lives next door, at 309 East Forty-fourth Street, told the Inspector that he heard the sound of a man falling in the room adjoining his. He did not hear the pistol shot. His room is separated only by a thin brick wall from the room in which Mr. Schanbacher was shot.

Detective Marion of the East Fifty-first Street Station was born in the same block in which the Schanbachers live, and he knew the real estate dealer well. He was at work on the case yesterday, and said that Schanbacher was not the kind of man to take his own life. Detectives Tobin and Cummings and several Central Office men were also on the case, and every one of them agreed that the case is one of the most baffling they have ever tried to unravel.

There has been an epidemic of sneak thief "jobs" in that part of the city recently, but several of the offenders have been captured and sent up for long terms. The police are wondering if this is the work of one of the gang who is still at large.

BAR DOGS FROM HOSPITALS.

One Scared President Brannan and He Orders Them Sent Away.

At Bellevue Hospital last night orders were received by Supt. Armstrong from Dr. John W. Brannan, President of the Board of Trustees of Bellevue and Allied Hospitals, to have all dogs which have been pets in the institution barred. This order affects also the Harlem, Fordham, Hudson Street, and Gouverneur Hospitals.

It is thought that the order is due to an experience of Dr. Brannan at Gouverneur Hospita last week. While making his weekly visit to the institution, a pet Newfoundland dog jumped on him, frightening him greatly. Dr. Brannan, it is understood, is of the opinion that the dog was not in a playful mood when he sprang at him.

At Bellevue Hospital there are four pet dogs, a Boston bull and three Dalmatian hounds, all fine animals. They were sent away to-day.

when the negotiations suddenly began to lag and there was grave danger that they would be broken off altogether. It seemed as if the influence of President Roosevelt was about to fill. Count Witte and Baron Rosen had received definite instructions from St. Petersburg to withdraw from the conference on the following Tuesday. At this critical juncture the President addressed Emperor William II. by cable, invoking his aid to bring about a satisfactory result of the peace negotiations. The German Emperor put himself in touch with the Czar, and the satisfactory result was then accomplished in Portsmouth on Aug. 28.

"Such is the share which Emperor William had in the peace of Portsmouth between Russia and Japan. He has, indeed, played a much greater part and contributed more to the cause of peace than has hitherto been known. This means no detraction from the great merits of President Roosevelt, who has, indeed, himself openly and expressly borne witness to the co-operation of the Emperor.

"Since the day of Manila and its subsequent unfriendly sentiment of the American people against Germany a mighty change has taken place. The distrust has disappeared. A good start has been made for a better mutual understanding. Relations have become friendly. To further strengthen the bonds of friendship and to show how unfounded was ths former distrust and to prove that President and Emperor joined hands in promoting the work of peace these revelations about 'ths secret history of Manila,' and the share of the German Emperor in the bringing about of the peace at Portsmouth are printed. The world's peace cannot rest upon a stronger bulwark than the friendly union of the German and the American Nations."

SHERMAN'S VIEWS ON SPAIN.

Suggestion That He Might Have Caused Germany's Erroneous Idea.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Much interest has been manifested in Washington, in diplomatic and official circles, in the curious story about Germany's attitude toward the United States during the war with Spain, which was printed in THE NEW YORK TIMES this morning, and in which ex-Ambassador Andrew D. White denied that he had made, as had been intimated, any representations at Berlin which could have induced the German attitude.

There are only two men in Washington in important places, who were connected with the Administration during the war with Spain, Justice Day of the Supreme Court, who was then Assistant Secretary of State and afterward Secretary, and Alvey A. Adee, who was then, as he is now, Second Assistant Secretary of State.

Justice Day declined emphatically to discuss the story in any manner. He says simply that it would be as improper for his to discuss any diplomatic occurrence of that time now, as it would have been for him to talk about it then. Mr. Adee supports Ambassador White's denial by saying that no such incident occurred within his recollection, and that there was no record in the department to bear out the report that Mr. White had made such representations to the Foreign Office in Berlin.

President Doesn't Know.

These additions to Mr. White's denial are further supported at the White House. There is the best authority for saying that the President knows nothing whatever of any such transaction as is alleged to have taken place in Berlin. So far as his research into the official records of the war with Spain is concerned, it has led to no trace of any such event, and no word has come to him by word of mouth from any person who might have known of it if it had occurred.

These substantiations of the denial of Mr. White only increase the perplexity here as to how such a report could have originated. No one believes that any man could or would invent that sort of story out of thin air. There must have been some foundation, and it is generally accepted here that the person who knows what that foundation is has imperfectly communicated his knowledge, and that what he did reveal has been misinterpreted.

An interesting and ingenious theory of what may have happened in the early part of 1898 has been advanced by a man who was in a position then to know a great deal of what was taking place on the inside of the diplomatic circle in Washington. He recalls the fact that John Sherman then was Secretary of State, and that Mr. Sherman's state of health had already begun to give anxiety to his friends. It was not long after Mr. Sherman became Secretary of State that he appeared one evening at a dinner to which he had not been invited, and left unexplained entirely his absence from the place to which he had been asked.

Sherman Not in Sympathy.

Mr. Sherman was not in sympathy with the state of public excitement which forced the demand on Spain for the evacuation of Cuba and brought about the war. He was opposed to severe measures with Spain, and strongly desired to see some means of accommodation devised by which Spain could retain her possessions in the western hemisphere and war be avoided. He even went so far as to approach the diplomatic representative here of one of the powers friendly to Spain and propose a measure which he declared would amply satisfy the United States and prevent any conflict.

It is understood that this proposal was for autonomy in Cuba. Spain was at that time perfectly willing to grant autonomy, and this proposal of Mr. Sherman was received by the man to whom it was made with the utmost surprise and pleasure. Understanding Mr. Sherman's physical condition, however, the diplomat waited to act on the suggestion he had received until he could confirm it by consultation with other representatives of the McKinley administration. He had such a consultation immediately, and was at once informed that this Government was not prepared to accept such a settlement and that Mr. Sherman's proposal did not have the sanction of President McKinley.

Would Partition Cuba.

At another time Mr. Sherman had approached the diplomatic representatives here of another European Power and had deliberately proposed a partition of China, concluding his statement of the case by saying:

"Doesn't your Government want something there? What would you like?"

Recalling these evidences of Mr. Sherman's condition in the early part of 1898, the man above referred to has suggested that it may have been Mr. Srerman himself who made such representations to Germany, if they were made, acting on his own authority, as he had in other cases cited. How he might have proceeded in making such representations without the matter coming to the knowledge of Mr. Whits is not clear. It is suggested that Mr. Sherman might possibly have communicated directly with Dr. Von Holleben, then German Ambassador here, and now acting President of a Colonial Society, a semi-official organization in Berlin, and a member of the Prussian House of Lords. But it is regarded as extremely unlikely that even if Mr. Sherman did such a thing, and Dr. Von Holleben reported it immediately to his government, the matter could have gone far without the knowledge of Mr. White. In any event, it is pointed out, if such a thing had occurred, it would have almost certainly led to correspondence between the German and American Governments, which would now be matter of record, and as such, probably within the knowledge of the President.

SAYS NURSE IS ABDUCTOR.

T. Wistar Brown Hears from Missing Children—Warrant for Mrs. Maxwell.

Special to The New York Times.

OCEAN CITY, N. J., April 14.—Mrs. Susan B. Maxwell, a Germantown nurse, who cared for the six children of E. Wiswealthy resident of Ocean City, N. J., was on trial for cruelty last December, has been formally charged with having kidnapped three of the Brown children. A warrant for her arrest was taken last night to Gov. Stokes, by Constable Clarkson of Ocean City.

Mr. Brown was deeply affected when he heard from his missing children tonight at his home at Ocean City. He received the last of five special delivery letters, which are supposed to have come from his kidnapped children and their alleged abductor.

A report that the Brown children were on their way to relatives in England gained circulation in Ocean City shortly after the receipt of the special delivery letters. Together with this report it was also suggested that the "kidnapper" might have acted with friendly intentions, to get the children on of the jurisdiction of the Cape May County Court before a guardian could be named.

SEVENTH DOCTOR STRICKEN.

Bellevue Staff Physician, Dr. H. T. Day, Suffering from Scarlet Fever.

Suffering from scarlet fever, Dr. Homer T. Day of the First Medical Staff of Bellevue Hospital was removed to the Minturn Hospital at the foot of East Twenty-sixth Street last night. Although the physician's condition was said to be serious, it is thought that he will recover.

Dr. Day's illness makes the seventh contagious disease case among physicians who have been removed from Bellevue Hospital in two months. The other physicians were suffering from diphtheria.

But Woman's Protest Brings Sons of Benjamin to Order.

Tho seventeenth annual convention of the United States Grand Lodge of the Sons of eBnjamin started with a fight at the New Star Casino, Park Avenue and 107th Street, yesterday. The trouble came when Grand Master Rosenberg ordered a rollcall of the delegates and one of the members proposed that the women delegates be allowed seats.

M. A. Elias opposd the proposal, but soon retired under a storm of protest. All tho 180 delegates present jumped to the floor and expressed their views all at once. A woman's protest finally restored order. The resolution to seat the woman delegates was then passed.

Mr. Elias, it was learned afterward, objected in order to avoid a precedent contrary to the by-laws. It is a beneficient order, and each lodge is allowed one delegats to the convention for every 100 members. When tho wives are admitted to the lodge, 100 women are represented by one male delegate.

The women formed auxiliary organizations and demanded recognition in the convention. Mr. Elias contended that in this manner they got doubls representation.

To Wind Up a Building Association.

Application for a receiver for the State Mutual Association of Camden, N. J., will be made before Vice Chancellor Leaning in Camden to-morrow, the petitioner being Patrick Fitzgerald of Morestown, N. J., who has a claim of over $1,000 against the concern. Other claims aggregate $15,000. The Mutual is ths last but one of the State or National building and loan associations, which were in existence ten years ago. All of the others have gone into the hands of receivers, and in some cases the officers went to prison because of fraud.

Trunks, Bags and Traveler's Requisites

Whether he will it or not, a man's handiwork reflects his characteristics. We can detect national traits in our trunk stock.

The versatile Frenchman builds his trunk with elaborate covering which makes for art and appearance.

The thrifty German builds a stocky trunk of lighter weight, to save carrying charges under foreign systems.

The sturdy Englishman fashions his trunk of solid leather, bulwarked with copper rivets and saddler's thread—intended for hard usage.

The crafty Yankee "borrows" what is best in all of these and supplements it with further improvements of his own.

All may be found in our cosmopolitan collection at prices that begin with the certainty of good service, and end with the limit of luxury.

OUTLAW GORDON DIES IN PRISON

Jamaican Desperado Who Terrorized Costa Rica Shot from Ambush.

TAKEN WOUNDED TO LIMON

Left Without Medical Attendance in an Unlighted Pen—Had Just Killed Three Soldiers.

Arthur Stringer, the novelist, who has just returned to New York after a two months' visit in Central America, brings the news that Joseph Gordon, the Jamaican half-caste outlaw who won for himself in the tropics a reputation equal to that of Tracey in the United States, and who for some months had been terrorizing Costa Rica, was captured and killed on March 30.

"I was knocking about the eastern end of Costa Rica," said Mr. Stringer, yesterday, "when this man Gordon was trying to shoot up the republic. In fact, I was one of a party of eight which left Limon with a yard engine and an observation car in search of him, after Gordon had shot down two railway employes and telephoned his dramatic challenge in to Mr. Mullens, the General Manager of the railway. He had been daringly active for weeks. When he got hungry he rifled a United Fruit Company's commissariat. When he found himself getting cornered he dropped back into the thick growth of the banana plantations and bobbed up at some new point. When he was interfered with he simply shot down his man.

"This sort of thing had continued until the natives, who are unusually quiet and law-abiding, were in a state of ridiculous terror. A detachment of colored troops that had been sent out in a banana car bolted back to the coast on foot. The man had become a sort of myth. He had all the eastern half of that nation terrorized.

"On the same morning that our special went up into his stamping ground a handcar came down from the hills carrying three bodies, those of three soldiers shot by Gordon. The handcar had to be lifted off the rails to let us pass. It was a gruesome enough sight, and things began to look interesting as we got further up-country. Half an hour later, however, we were told that Gordon had been shot from ambush by one of the Costa Rican regulars.

"He was taken to Limon, wounded by a shot through the lungs. There is no capital punishment in Costa Rica. It is against the Constitution. Spanish-American justice has its own peculiar ways of working. The second day after Gordon was shot I obtained an official permit from the Governor to visit the prisoner. In doing so I found this proud gentleman issuing tickets of admission to a select few hundred of his friends, very much as you would hand out cards to a charity bazaar.

"With a Capt. Gibson, an ex-naval officer, and a Dr. Gebhardt, I went to the jail with my permit. There we were kept waiting for an hour and a half. Then we were let into the room where the prisoner lay. We were told, with much formality and many regrets, that in the meantime the honorable prisoner had unfortunately died. This we found to be true. He had died in agony, in a filthy, unlighted pen, with his soiled and mud-stained clothing still on, and nothing but a dirty blanket thrown over him. In other words, he had been held there for two days, without medical attendance, and, of course, without any hope or intention that he should ever recover.

"When Dr. Gebhardt asked if he might examine the wound, covered with its beautiful septic bandages, there was more ceremonial and courtly regret, and the blanket was put back and we were put out. Before daybreak the next morning, the morning of Easter Sunday, Gordon was buried."

MEXICAN BANDIT SLAIN.

Chavez, Cornered, Gave Battle—Died Pierced by Eight Bullets.

Special to The New York Times.

GUADALAJARA, Mexico, April 14.—Enrique Chavez, the most notorious bandit in Mexico, has just met a tragic death near Paschotetan. He fell only after having been pierced by eight bullets.

During the last five years Chavez has systematically terrorized the whole country north of the State of Jalisco. State troops have been on his trail practically all the time, but his system of lookouts and the mountain rastnesses of the country served to prevent his capture.

The bandit chief was alone when he was killed, having been separated from the other members of the band. When ten rurales surrounded him and he saw that further flight was useless, he dismounted, got behind his horse, and gave battle. The troopers circled about him, firing as they rode. In the fight he emptied three saddles and one of the wounded men died later.

Chavez was reputed to be entirely without pity for man, woman, or child. He was only thirty-one years old.

MOROCCO DEFIES FRANCE.

Gives Contract to Germans in Violation of Algeciras Agreement.

PARIS, April 14.—The correspondent at Tangier of The Temps says the Moroccan Foreign Board has awarded a contract for a public drainage system at Tangier and a sea embankment to a German firm whose bid was $180,000.

This has been done in spite of the fact that treating directly with a private firm in the matter of a public utility is in violation of the Algeciras agreement.

MELILLA, Morocco, April 14.—A dispatch received here says that the rebellious leader Roghi has released the son of Gen. Delbrell, Governor of the Spanish fortress of Alhucemas, who was recently captured and beaten at Devasse.

Notes of Foreign Affairs.

TEHERAN, April 14.—The Minister of the Interior, Madjd el Mulk, has resigned.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 14.—Russia is experimenting with the time system used in Italy, by which the hours of the day are numbered consecutively from one to twenty-four, instead of in two periods of twelve hours. The Minister of Railroads has directed that the Summer time tables of the railroads to Moscow be printed in the new system. Roman numerals will be used to designate the hours from midnight to noon, and Arabic those from noon to midnight.

ROME, April 14.—Although it is likely that Foreign Minister Tittoni and Minister of Marine Mirabello, who are returning from Greece with King Victor Emmanuel, will meet King Edward at Gaeta, where the British and Italian monarchs are to greet each other next Thursday, it is semi-officially announced that the meeting will have no political significance.

PORTO RICANS GREET TAFT.

Secretary Reviews the Insular Regiment and Holds a Reception.

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, April 14.—Secretary of War Taft and his party arrived at noon to-day on board the Government yacht Mayflower. Gov. Beekman Winthrop and the Secretary of Porto Rico, Regis Post, who is about to succeed Mr. Winthrop, went aboard to greet the Secretary. The yacht was taken to the naval station landing, where it was met by the naval officers here.

Mr. Taft was escorted by a battalion of marines to the city entrance, where Lieut. Col. Bailey of the Porto Rican Regiment and his staff awaited him. Under escort of the regiment the Secretary, who was in a carriage with Gov. Winthrop, was driven to the palace, where, from the balcony, he reviewed the troops. After the review an informal reception was held and prominent citizens and journalists called on the Secretary.

Mr. Taft is the sixth Cabinet officer to visit the island since it was occupied by the Americans, Messrs. Alger, Payne, Moody, Root, and Metcalf preceding him.

The announcement that the Mayflower had been sighted was the signal for the gathering of hundreds of persons, and soon the streets surrounding the naval station were filled.

Among Porto Ricans Secretary Taft is the best-known public man in the United States except President Roosevelt. Being Sunday, the reception was unostentatious, but cordial. At the time of the march from the naval station to the palace the congregations of the various churches were coming out, and the people were able to see the distinguished visitor.

Secretary Taft spent the afternoon quietly.

LEOPOLD ANGERS BELGIANS.

Grave Political Crisis—Dissolution of Parliament Expected.

BRUSSELS, April 14.—King Leopold's unprecedented action in withdrawing by royal decree the Government bill concerning the hours of labor in the mines has aroused the greatest indignation in all parties. The situation is aggravated by the fact that the decree was countersigned by Ministers who had officially resigned, and therefore possessed no authority before Parliament.

The Government under the law is entitled to withdraw a bill presented in both houses until the Senate adopts it, but in not announcing the decree until after its resignation, and when it had been demonstrated that the measure had only thirty-two supporters, the Ministry is considered guilty of political sharp practice.

The situation is very grave, and dissolution of Parliament appears to be inevitable.

POPE WILL BLAME FRANCE.

Allocution to Refer to Conflict—Bishop for Ruthenian Americans.

ROME, April 14.—In his allocution at to-morrow's Consistory Pope Pius will devote an important passage to the conflict between France and the Vatican. It will be in protest against the conditions the new law has made for the Church and the methods the French Government has adopted all through the controversy, especially with regard to the seizure of the documents in the Papal Nunciature and their publication.

The Vatican denies that it intends to publish a White Book in answer to the publication of the documents of Mgr. Montagnini.

The Congregation of the Propaganda has decided to grant the claim of the Ruthenian Catholics in the United States for the appointment of a Bishop, and has named Stephen Setere Ertynsky, who is a member of the Ruthenian Order of Basilians, as Titular Bishop of Daulis, (Greece,) with the mission to assist the Ruthenian Catholics throughout the United States. His nomination will be announced at to-morrow's Consistory.

It is expected that the concession will revive the claims of the Poles in America, who for years have desired their own Bishop, but whose requests have been denied.

BILLS OPPOSED BY CITY CLUB.

Catalogue Issued Giving Objections to Pending Measures.

The City Club proposes to oppose the enactment of several bills now before the State Legislature, and yesterday it issued a catalogue of these proposed laws, with the reason for its opposition tot each. There are twenty-eight measures which the club declares to be bad or defective.

Five of these bills are in the form of amendments to the tenement house law, and relieve builders of many exactions now in the statute. All of them have been introduced by Assemblyman Sheridan of the Bronx. One clothes the Tenement House Commissioner with great discretionary power, permittin ghim to use his own judgment as to the proportion of a lot to be occupied by a building. The building lines are now rigidly fixed by law.

Another bill opposed by the City Club amends the election law so that the name of a candidate for office shall not be printed in more than one column nor appear as the candidate of more than one party. It is clear that this would prevent the fusion of parties on desirable candidates, and practically forbid the unanimous nomination of the judiciary. It would also prohibit an independent party from indorsing candidates of any of the regular parties.

The Three Platoon bill, now before the Legislature, is opposed because the Police Commissioner has it in his power to either institute the system or reject it under the present law. The City Club declares that the three platoon system is an absolute failure.

HARD ON PORCELAINMAKERS.

Holding Up of Consignments Here Stops Work at Limoges.

LIMOGES, France, April 14.—Work in the porcelain industry at this place is almost at a standstill, and several hundred men are out of employment, because of the holding up of consignments by the United States customs officers at New York as the result of a dispute. There are now from 300 to 400 cases of porcelain, exported by the Haviland, Martin, and Guerin companies, lying at New York.

When the manufacturers were asked as to the affair they declared that it resulted from a report of a United States Treasury agent to the effect that the goods were being sold cheaper in the United States than in Europe. They have furnished the real facts to the United States Consul at Limoges and appealed from the examiners to the Board of Appraisers. Meanwhile there is a deadlock over the dispute, and it is feared additional workmen will be turned off pending a settlement.

Van Vechten Olcott and Supreme Court Justice Charles W. Dayton.

HONDURAN ENVOYS AND CONSULS GO

Nicaraguan Officials Here and in Other Countries to Act for Both States.

POLICY OF RETRENCHMENT

New Government Saving Money—American Engineer Says Zelaya Is a Much Misunderstood Man.

Following the cessation of hostilities in Central America, announcement is made that the Honduran authorities have appointed all Nicaraguan Consuls, Consuls General, Chargés d'Affaires, and Ministers both in this country and abroad to represent Honduras. The policy of the new Government of Honduras is to retrench, and this is stated to be the main reason for merging the consulates, &c., of both countries.

Plo Bolands, Consul General of Nicaragua in this city, will hereafter serve in a dual capacity for his country and Honduras, Dr. Salvador Cordova, for many years Consul General for Honduras at this port, having resigned. The Honduran Consular Office will hereafter be in the Coffee Exchange Building, 66 Beaver Street, in the same rooms now occupied by the Nicaraguan Consul General.

James Deitrick, a railroad and mining engineer, who recently returned from Central America, where he represented large interests of New York capitalists in Honduras and Nicaragua, and who is regarded as being very close to the Nicaragua Government, said in an interview last night:

"President Zelaya of Nicaragua is a much misunderstood man. He spent ten years in New York, Paris and London, and made a study of the United States, French, and British Governments, returning home well equipped to handle Nicaraguan affairs. In 1893 he was elected Chief Executive, which office he has held ever since, having been re-elected twice. His present term does not expire for five years.

"In 1894 President Zelaya was forced into war with Honduras after the Hondurans had selected an able and honest man, Policarpo Bonilla, as President. He is no relative of Manuel Bonilla, the lately deposed President of Honduras. President Zelaya took the Nicaraguan Army out of Honduras and retired from that Republic without demanding a dollar or an acre of ground. In the present case he has not as yet intimated his intention, but he has, as before, invited the citizens of Honduras to elect by voto a suitable native of the country as its President.

"When Gen. Zelaya became President of Nicaragua there were no means of transportation from ocean to ocean. It was not long, however, before he had constructed over 200 miles of railroad and made it possible for freight and passengers to be sent across the Republic. He built wharves, opened up ports, erected warehouses, machine shops, etc., and obtained the coöperation of his people in opening the rich old gold mines which had been lying dormant for two centuries. He cultivated Americans and got them to bring money into the country. He was at times imposed upon by scheming foreigners who preferred to have a claim against the country rather than carry out their agreements. He made many enemies by enforcing the laws and crushing revolutionary tendencies.

"All the talk about President Zelaya wishing to form a federation of the five Central American republics is moonshine. He has for six years tried to leave the Presidential chair and bring his children to the United States to educate them. I myself, as well as other foreigners in Nicaragua, with his countrymen, have kept him in office, much against his will, because he is the best-equipped man to cope with conditions in the country. I can state, however, that under no conditions will he accept the Presidency again."

KILLED WHILE SKYLARKING.

Boy Crushed to Death by Victoria Hotel Freight Elevator.

By being caught in a freight elevator near the fifth floor of the Victoria Hotel early last night while he was skylarking, Joseph Morrissey, a 16-year-old messenger, living at 405 West Thirty-ninth Street, was killed by the heavy machinery lifting his body several feet in the air and then dropping it down the shaft to the basement.

The elevator boy, Joseph K. Jalladian, 19 years old, of 133 East Twenty-seventh Street, was locked up on a technical charge of homicide in the West Thirtieth Street Station.

Jalladian and Andrew Beckor, an employe of the hotel, both said that the boy's death was due wholly to his own action, and that they used every effort to stop the car.

NO FEDERAL PLUMS FOR SOUTHERN MEN

Republicans Complaining of Neglect of Them by Mr. Roosevelt.

MAY INFLUENCE CANVASS

John W. Yerkes Was the Last Southerner in an Important Office in Washington.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—Southern Republicans, white and black, are complaining afresh about neglect of them by the Roosevelt Administration. The resignation of John W. Yerkes of Kentucky as Commissioner of Internal Revenue, takes from the Southern States their last representative in the executive departments in Washington. It makes plainer than ever, the Southern Republicans assert, the fact that President Roosevelt has done less for the South than any Republican Administration.

The Lincoln Administration had James S. Speed of Kentucky for Attorney General, and he was continued in office by Andrew Johnson.

The Grant Administration had Amos T. Akerman of Georgia for Attorney General, John A. J. Cresswell of Maryland for Postmaster General, and Benjamin H. Bristow of Kentucky for Secretary of the Treasury.

The Hayes Administration had David M. Key of Tennessee for Postmaster General, and when he was appointed to the Federal bench he was succeeded by Horace Maynard, also of Tennessee.

The Garfield Administration had William H. Hunt of Louisiana as Secretary of the Navy.

The same political protestants point to the composition of the Roosevelt Cabinet as fairly illustrative of an injustice to other States. The nine Cabinet positions are given to six States, to wit:

New York, three—Elihu Root, Secretary of State; George B. Cortelyou, Secretary of the Treasury; Oscar S. Straus, Secretary of Commerce and Labor. Ohio, two—William H. Taft, Secretary of War, and James R. Garfield, Secretary of the Interior, the other four being from the States of Massachusetts, Maryland, Iowa, and California.

Not only are the Southern States without a Cabinet officer, it is indignantly remarked by Southern Republicans of both races, but there is not a Southerner, white or black, who holds office by choice of President Roosevelt in any of the departments in Washington.

Mr. Yerkes, when he resigned, was the sole representative of all the States south of the Potomac and Ohio Rivers under Mr. Roosevelt, and Yerkes was originally appointed by President McKinley.

Judson W. Lyon of Georgia, who was appointed Register of the Treasury by President McKinley, although he desired to continue in office, was displaced by President Roosevelt for William T. Vernon, a Kansas negro.

Southern negroes are not pleased by the appointment of Ralph W. Tyler, colored, of Ohio, to the important Presidential office of Auditor for the Navy Department. There are 9,000,000 negroes in the South who are unrepresented in any of the departments in Washington, while less than a million negroes in all of the Northern States have two important offices.

REDSKIN COMMUTERS A CIVILIZED TYPE

Four of Buffalo Bill's Sioux Chieftains Show the Influences of Travel.

DROP FOREIGN ACCENT

John Bull Bear Talks on the Traction Situation—Notes the Gilsey House Has Changed Hands Again.

The last complement of Indians for Buffalo Bill's Wild West show, which opens in the Madison Square Garden next week, passed through town yesterday on their way to Bridgeport, Conn., where the outfit is assembling. There were a hundred Sioux warriors, fifteen squaws, and as many pappooses. They came from the Pine Ridge and Rosebud agencies, in South Dakota, where they had been chosen by Scout Bill McCune.

They first appeared on the public view early last evening in the Erie station, in Jersey City, where, alighting from a train they sprinted for a ferryboat. A number of commuters hastening in to "sacred concerts" were likewise engaged.

"The Indian is rapidly becoming civilized," panted a commuter who was running beside Iron Tail and William Sitting Bull, the principal chiefs.

On the way over the Indians divided naturally into groups, the principal chiefs being with Rocky Bear. Four of those in the outfit have become fast friends. They were with the showing during its four years' European trip. When they first returned to these shores they showed slight traces of foreign accent. This, however, has been abandoned and they are now citizens of the world.

"I believe, after a casual survey of Europe," said Young-Man-Not-Afraid-of-a-Thirst, one of the globe trotters, "that the highest ideal of civilization finds its individual embodiment in that man who speaks each language as though he were a native. You see, my English is without fault, my French is better, but I've forgotten my Indian."

"I quite agree with you," said Standing Bill, another of the four, so named because he sympathetically forgives the European fad of letting bills stand, "but each time I return to my native land I see anew the errors of our boasted American civilization. We are too commercial over here. We give up too much of our minds toward the seeking of material things. Art we leave to Europe. All things are on a commercial basis. If a man fails in business, we call him a 'failure,' when in true character and right living he may be anything but a failure."

John Bull-Bear, another of the world citizens, who occasionally takes a flier in Wall Street, announced that he had something to say on the traction situation.

"I have made a careful comparative study of the modes of traction abroad," he said, "especially with such as have to do with the transportation of persons within a great city. I should strongly advise the investing public to invest in the London underground in preference to our own Subway. Over there the cars are fireproofed by a liberal use of asbestos, while here even the steel cars would burn inside. But I will say that our tunnel excavators are showing rare resource in their recent work."

While Young-Man-Not-Afraid-of-a-Thirst and Standing Bill were arguing warmly as to the proper length of time a truffled grouse should be cooked, the boat was made fast to her slip.

Prodded by the Scouts, the Sioux were urged off the deck. On the shore at Twenty-third Street two large sight-seeing automobiles labelled "Seeing New York" were in waiting. The four, with other Indians, mounted together into one of them and the two machines went east through Twenty-third Street.

All of the Sioux except the cosmopolitan four, had never left their reservations before. So they put the auto to the use for which they were originally intended.

The sight of the Pennsylvania series of excavations moved Standing Bill to comment.

"Why, four years ago," said he, "I had the tip that the Pennsylvania was going to buy all of that property, and I was invited to go into a syndicate which should buy it and sell it to the Pennsylvania people in turn, but I didn't believe it. Besides, I was pretty deep in Swamphurst and Lonesomehurst properties. I have just dropped a few, from the looks of things."

"Never mind," said Young-Man-Not-Afraid-of-a-Thirst with biting irony. "This Spring you can buy one of the Harriman railway properties cheap and develop it."

In Broadway the altered appearance of the Gilsey House struck John Bull-Bear.

"By Jove, the Gilsey House has changed hands again," he said.

At the Grand Central Station the Sioux were late and were hurried to a train. Youn-Man-Not-Afraid-of-a-Thirst was the first to discover that there was no buffet car attached to the train. He already knew there are no "Last Chance" signs in New York.

"It is a beastly oversight," he complained. "Why, I haven't had a thing to eat since morning except a caviar sandwich."

DIES AFTER A FIGHT.

A man supposed to be Le Roy Lawrence, or Frank Lawrence, from letters found in his pocket, was found dead in a room in the Garfield Lodging House, 48 New Bowery, yesterday afternoon, about 5:30 o'clock. He had registered as J. Jones.

According to the proprietor of the lodging house, Dominick Milano, two men, who registered as J. Jones and Frnnk Jones, came to the house about 1 o'clock yesterday morning. They were assigned to a room on the second floor. About 3 o'clock yesterday afternoon the sound of a fight came from the room. The proprietor heard a man's voice crying: "Let me out. The man is killing me..! The man is crazy!"

In the room, beside the two cots that the men had slept on, was a table and ten new cots that had been set up on end until they should be wanted. When the proprietor got the door open he found one of the lodgers belaboring the other man with the leg of a table that he had wrenched off. The man who was being attacked got out of the room as soon as he could. Then the door was closed, and the other man was left in the room.

At 5 o'clock the proprietor went to see how he was getting on. He found him dead on the floor. Policemen Finnegan, Quick, and Moran, of the Oak Street station were notified. Dr. Leslie, from the Hudson Street Hospital, said that the man had been dead several hours.

The police found a $5 bill on the floor of the room, and on a chair beside the bed, a half-ounce bottle which is supposed to have contained cocaine. On the bed was found a book, the title of which was "Paid With Death."

From letters and postal cards found in the clothing of the dead man he is thought to be Le Roy Lawrence, an attendant in the Morris Plains, N. J., insane asylum. The letters were addressed in that name to the New Jersey State Hospital, Morris Plains, N. J.

One of the letters was signed "Sister Sue," and another "Loving Cousin." One of the envelopes in the pocket was addressed to Sir Percy Sanderson, British Consul, State Street, New York. This envelope had no enclosure.

Coroner Harburger ordered that the body be removed to the morgue, where an autopsy will be held. According to the proprietor of the lodging house, the man who disappeared told him that the dead man was a cocaine fiend.

ROOSEVELT TO CHILDREN.

Asks Them in a Message to Plant Trees on Arbor Day.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—President Roosevelt to-day made public a message to children on the significance of Arbor Day. It follows:

"To the School Children of the United States:

"Arbor Day (which means simply 'tree day') is now observed in every State in our Union—and mainly in the schools. At various times from January to December, but chiefly in this month of April, you give a day, or part of a day, to special exercises, and perhaps to actual tree planting, in recognition of the importance of trees to us as a Nation and of what they yield in adornment, comfort, and useful products to the communities in which you live.

"It is well that you should celebrate your Arbor Day thoughtfully, for within your lifetime the Nation's need of trees will become serious. We of an older generation can get along with what we have, though with growing hardship; but in your full manhood and womanhood you will want what nature once so bountifully supplied and man so thoughtlessly destroyed; and because of that want you will reproach us, not for what we have used, but for what we have wasted.

"For the Nation, as for the man or woman and the boy or girl, the road to success is the right use of what we have and the improvement of present opportunity. If you neglect to prepare yourselves now for the duties and responsibilities which will fall upon you later, if you do not learn the things which you will need to know when your school days are over, you will suffer the consequences. So any nation which in its youth lives only for the day, reaps without sowing, and consumes without husbanding, must expect the penalty of the prodigal, whose labor could with difficulty find him the bare means of life.

"A people without children would face a hopeless future; a country without trees is almost as hopeless; forests which are so used that they cannot renew themselves would soon vanish, and with them all their benefits. A true forest is not merely a storehouse full of wood, but, as it were, a factory of wood, and at the same time a reservoir of water. When you help to preserve our forests or to plant new ones, you are acting the part of good citizens. The value of forestry deserves, therefore, to be taught in the schools, which aim to make good citizens of you. If your Arbor Day exercises help you to realize what benefits each one of you receives from the forests, and how by your assistance these benefits may continue, they will serve a good end.

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

TO BUILD NEW 14-INCH GUNS.

One of Three Coast Defense Rifles to be of the "Wire-Wound" Type.

Three great 14-inch defense guns, which represent a new departure in coast ordnance, are to be built by the War Department. These great guns, expected to be as powerful—with the exception of the 16-inch guns—as any ever constructed, are to take the place of the 12-inch guns, and are constructed on the advice of Gen. Crozier, the Chief of Ordnance, who recommended the substitution.

Of the three guns to be built, two will be manufactured on the "built-up" and the other on the "wire-wound" syatem. Only one wire-wound gun is to be built, for the reason that that type of gun has not been so thoroughly tested as has the "built-up" type, but the military authorities are still enthusiastically in favor of the wire-wound principle. In the opinion of many of the foremost of American ordnance experts, the decision to build one of the three 14-inch rifles of the wire-wound type marks one of the most important epochs in the history of American ordnance, and it is declared that this move forecasts the eventual abandonment of the "built-up" type of heavy ordnance.

It is also reported that the testing of the two 6-inch wire-wound guns at Sandy Hook, which has been going on for a year and a half, has been discontinued. One of these guns is what is known as the Brown design, while the other is the design of Gen. Crozier. Both guns have been fired ninety-eight times, and both have eroded to about the same extent. As a result of this erosion, due to large charges used in obtaining high velocities, the guns have lost their accuracy in propelling the projectile used.

An extensive report on the merits of the guns will be formulated by Major Gen. John P. Story, the former Chief of Artillery; Prof. P. R. Alger, Assistant Professor of Mathematics at the United States Naval Academy; Capt. Alston Hamilton of the Artillery Corps, and a naval ordnance officer yet to be selected. Not until this report is made to the War Department will the standing of the guns be known.

FALCONIO OPENS CATHEDRAL.

Charleston's New Edifice Dedicated—A Notable Company Present.

CHARLESTON, S. C., April 14.—The new Cathedral of St. John the Baptist, erected on the site of the former Cathedral of St. John and St. Finbar, in this city, was consecrated to-day with elaborate ceremonies. Cardinal Gibbons, Mgr. Diomede Falconio, the Apostolic Delegate, and a hundred Archbishops, Bishops, Monsignors, and clergy, representing the Catholic Church in America, participated.

The consecration ceremonies, which began at an early hour, were conducted by the Apostolic Delegate. The Pontifical mass at 10:20 was celebrated by the Cardinal and the Pontifical vespers by the Right Rev. Henry P. Northrop, Bishop of Charleston.

Immense audiences attended all services. The dedication marked the silver jubilee of Bishop Northrop, under whose episcopate the cathedral has been built. The building is of the purest gothic type, built of brownstone, at a cost of $200,000. It is free from debt.

CAN'T FIND NURSES ENOUGH.

Manhattan Eye and Ear Hospital May Also Have to Enlarge Its New Home.

The Manhattan Eye, Ear, and Throat Hospital, at 210 Sixty-fourth Street, according to some of the nurses employed there, is finding it difficult to procure a sufficient number of nurses. The new building has only been open for the reception of patients since last October and already the trustees are considering the adsability of adding three additional stories to it to make it possible to care for all the patients who apply for treatment.

Miss MacKenzie, who was made Supervising Nurse when the hospital was transferred to its new building, resigned several weeks ago as a result of the resignation of her assistant, Miss Carter. She found that the work was more than she could do alone.

Reports that the nurses were complaining because of the distance between the hospital and the lodgings provided for them were denied by the nurses, who said that their treatment was considerate, and that there was no ground for complaint.

Those who have had bitter experience with "systematisers" will find it decidedly to their advantage to consult

It's the Only Way, He Says, to Solve Army Liquor Problem—Pay of Privates Also Too Low.

Major Gen. James F. Wade, U. S. A., for several years past in command of the Division of the Atlantic, with headquarters on Governors Island, was retired from active service yesterday after forty-six years' service. Major Gen. Frederick D. Grant succeeded him, and is now in command of the division, and will remain so until it is abolished on June 30 next, on which date the army will be grouped entirely by departments.

Gen. Grant will then assume command of the new Department of the East, which he will retain until the arrival in this country a few months hence of Major Gen. Leonard Wood, who has been designated for the command, which will then be the premier assignment in the gift of the War Department.

Gen. Wade talked yesterday of his forty-six years in the army. He expects to make his home in Jefferson, Ohio, the little city where he was born and from which he was mustered into the service as a Lieutenant of the Sixth Regular Cavalry in May, 1861.

"There are only a very few of the civil war veterans left in the service," said Gen. Wade, "and to-day there is not a single officer in the army who held a commission when I came into it away back in the sixties. In a little over three years the last officer who saw service in the civil war will have been retired from the service, and the younger generation of officers will be in command."

"How do you think these officers compare with the old timers who are leaving the service?" Gen. Wade was asked.

"Well, these officers," answered Gen. Wade, "have not had the active war experience that fell to the lot of us older fellows, but taken all in all they are as fine a set of men as have officered our army at any time in our history."

"What about compulsory military service in this country? Are you one of the officers who think it would be a good thing for the United States?"

"No, I am on the other side. In my opinion, it is not feasible. Our people don't want it, for it is contrary to the spirit of our Government and the ideas of our citizens."

"How about the enlisted men? Do you consider them as a body equal to the soldiers of the past?"

"No, I hardly think that I do, for the men are not staying in the service long enough at the present time. The principal reason for this is, of course, the great prosperity of the country, and men who might prove good soldiers prefer to stay outside the army and make more money. I believe that the service should be made more attractive, and that the pay of the enlisted men should be increased. That would go a long way toward keeping desirable men in the service."

Than Gen. Wade there is probably no officer in the service who is more firm in his advocacy of the post canteen. He has commanded posts in the days of the sutler, the post trader, and the canteen, and he is thoroughly familiar with the present conditions in the army, which have resulted from the abolishment of the post exchange or canteen, and he is thoroughly convinced that the canteen is the only sensible solution of the liquor problem.

"It was a great mistake when Congress abolished the canteen," said Gen. Wade, "for under the old system the men were much better off in every way. The young recruits were better protected, for they were not brought into contact with the low places that always find a place to do business in easy access of military posts. When the canteen was lawful these young men were kept in camp under good influences. The liquor sold in the canteens was also of a better quality, and it was dispensed under the watchful eyes of careful officers."

Gen. Wade is a son of the famous Senator "Ben" Wade of Ohio, who represented the Buckeye State in the Senate in the civil war. In addition to his civil war record, Gen. Wade has also participated in the Indian campaigns, and was the officer selected to command the camp at Tampa, Fla., in the Spanish-American war. It is said by many of his friends that he has not received the treatment that was his by right at the hands of the War Department in recent years.

Gen. Wade was the ranking Brigadier General of the Army, and in the ordinary course of events should have been the officer to succeed Gen. Miles as Lieutenant General in command of the army. Instead, he saw nine of his subordinates promoted to Major Generalships over his head. Gen. Wade has one son, Capt. John P. Wade of the Second Cavalry. Gen. Wade has been in command of the Atlantic Division since December, 1904, when he succeeded Lieut. Gen. H. C. Corbin.

PLATINUM DROPS IN PRICE.

Fall of $4 an Ounce, Due to Financial Conditions in Europe.

Platinum, which bounded up in price several times last year and kept on the upward movement the first three months of this year, began two weeks ago a turn the other way, and since then has fallen $4 an ounce, going down from $38, the top mark, to $34. Refiners say that there is a likelihood of a further decline.

People who buy diamond jewelry, photographs, dental and electric supplies, will be benefited by the fall in the price of platinum. The manufacturers in these lines, who had been worrying over the reports of the scarcity of the metal and the unusual high prices, are breathing easier. It was said several months ago that the Russian government, which controls the mines in the Ural Mountains, where most of the platinum is found, was restricting the output.

In the Maiden Lane jewelry district the cheaper platinum comes as a great relief. S. Cohn, of Belais & Cohn, of 17 Gold Street, when asked the reason for the drop in the price of platinum, said that financial conditions in Europe were responsible, he believed. He said that European holders of the metal who were keeping it in stock had pledged it as collateral security on loans, and these loans were recently called. This obliged some men who had a lot of platinum on hand to put it on the market, and the lower prices followed.

The platinum imported into the United States last year amounted to $3,601,021, or 75 per cent. over the valuation of the year before.

AUTOMOBILES.

Columbia

AUTOMOBILE NEWS.

Columbia Gasoline Cars are built of the best materials in the world under the most advanced methods and processes yet discovered.

Columbia Crankshafts, for example, are cut from a solid slab of Columbia Special Chrome Nickel Steel, costing 24 cents a pound, as against 4 cents for machine steel used in many cars.

Rigid tests have proved that Columbia Crankshafts are able to withstand a strain of twenty tons and yet not produce a permanent "set."

The Columbia's selective type of sliding gear Transmission—Gears cut from toughest steel—I-beam Front Axle—and the new Double Carburetor providing a mixture for slow, and another for high speed—all are features in keeping with the Columbia policy of sparing no expense to bring each part to perfection.

No $3000 car has ever been built in America or Europe which can compare in speed, endurance and hill-climbing ability with the Columbia Mark XLVIII.

Every one who sees it says it is the smartest 24-28 horse power machine on the market this year.

Remember the price is $3000.

The Limousine is $4200. Both the touring and the closed cars carry five persons comfortably.

CARTER HANDICAP TO BE RUN TO-DAY

$10,000 Race Is Feature of the Opening of New York Turf Season.

NINETEEN HORSES TO START

De Mund the Popular Favorite for Big Stakes to be Decided at Aqueduct Track This Afternoon.

With nineteen horses named to run for the chief event of the day, the $10,000 Carter Handicap, the metropolitan racing year will open this afternoon at the Aqueduct track of the Queens County Jockey Club. For the occasion horsemen have assembled from all quarters of the United States, and to these the entrance of a new turf season will mark an era. For the general public the beginning of turf sport, after an intermission of five months, will take on the character of a holiday, and basing estimates on the increased popularity of the sport last season the officials of the Queens County Jockey Club anticipate a record breaking patronage for the afternoon.

Preparations for the reception of a crowd of 20,000 have been made, and with fair weather there seems every promise that the expectations of the track managers will be realized. The first day of racing will be on a course that horsemen regard as a model of its kind, the Aqueduct track having been improved to the point that it now is second in the size of the regular circular course to Belmont Park, the greatest race course in America, while the equipment has been increased to the point that with two stands the accommodations will be ample for even such a crowd as the officials of the club expect for the inauguration of the season.

The prospects are that the great race of the day, the Carter Handicap, will be run on a dry and fast course, and in every promise the contest stands out as the best that ever has been run for the stakes. The nineteen horses named to run include more notable horses than ever lined up at the barrier for any other Carter Handicap, with Roseben, champion sprinter of the American turf and winner of the same fixture a year ago, and De Mund, the star two-year-old of last Spring, as the chief of the number. Eleven will go to the post seasoned by racing at the Winter tracks or at the Washington Spring meeting, all being horses that have showed winning form recently.

The seasoned horses are Oxford, Glorifier, Pretension, Juggler, Don Diego, Okenite, Orbicular, Colonel Jack, Tilling, Marster, Malacca, and Ampedo, gathered for the race from California, Louisiana, and Arkansas Winter races and from the Benning meeting at Washington.

The horses that will go out for their first public trial of the season in the Carter are Roseben, Brookdale Nymph, Heaslip, Rye, De Mund, and Avaunteer. All of these have been hampered to a great extent by the bad weather, which has made training backward on the New York tracks through all the Spring, though Brookdale Nymph received the greater part of her preparation in the South at Harry Payne Whitney's South Carolina training quarters, and has been at work on her home training ground for only a short time.

Roseben has held the place of popular favorite for the contest until within the last few days, his training having been conducted with the special purpose of fitting him for the Carter Handicap, in the hope of winning the big stake for the second time. The task set for him by the handicapper is a prodigious one, as, winner of the Carter with 129 pounds last Spring, he is the top weight, with 135 pounds, this season, but Owner D. C. Johnson made his plans for a second Carter victory with race confidence, and until late last week declared that Roseben positively would start for the race.

A shade of doubt has come up, though, as Jockey J. Martin had been engaged to ride the horse months ago, and when the License Committee of The Jockey Club last week declined to grant his application for a jockey's license Roseben was left without a rider. Since The Jockey Club officials acted on Martin's case Roseben's owner has made every effort to secure a report on the jockey's standing at the New Orleans Winter tracks which would clear the doubts of the License Committee as to charges under which Martin rests. It was stated last night that there still is a possibility that The Jockey Club may grant Martin a license to-day in time for the boy to ride. Mr. Johnson also stated that if Martin should not be available he still would start Roseben should he by any chance find any other rider whom he regarded as capable, but that he would not risk the horse in the race with any other than a first-class rider. Because of the question of his rider, Roseben, the Winter favorite for the race, thus is a doubtful starter at the eleventh hour. This complication has helped to strengthen the confidence of the partisans of De Mund, which has gained steadily in public favor as his training progressed at Washington, and in the estimates of the betting men yesterday De Mund was the favorite for the race, with the two Winter-track horses Glorifier and Tieling, coupled as James H. McCormick's entry, the next choices, and Roseben third in the betting.

The official list of horses announced to start for the Carter Handicap, the weights to be carried, the jockeys engaged to ride, and the betting prices quoted last night follow:

The Carter Handicap of $10,000, for three-year-olds and upward, weights announced March 21; seven furlongs. To be run as the fourth race.

"HAL" CHASE JOINS GRIFFITH'S TEAM

Californian Appears at Washington in Good Shape, Ready to Begin Play.

DELAYED BY LATE TRAINS

Possible That Yankees May Be Weakened To-day by Punishment of Elberfeld's Escapade.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—"Hal" Chase, the crack young first baseman of the New York American League team, reported to Manager Griffith here to-day and took a weight off the mind of the Yankee's leader. He explained the long delayed appearance by stating that late trains had compelled him to miss connection twice, losing two days in transit from California.

Chase declares he is in superb condition and ready to resume his place at first base at once. He has been playing steadily in the Winter season in California, and declares he was never in better shape than at present. Griffith expects to place him on the bag to-morrow.

There is some concern expressed by Griffith over the Elberfeld escapade of yesterday.

Two games were played by clubs yesterday. The game scheduled between the Pittsburg and Cincinnati Clubs in the latter city had to be postponed on account of wet grounds. In the American League, by their victory over the St. Louis Cardinals yesterday, the champion White Sox jumped into undisputed possession of second place in the race, while the Cardinals drop down seventh. The Chicagoes had an easy victory, winning by a score of 6 to 2.

In the only game played in the National League between the St. Louis Browns and the Cubs, the Chicago outfit was also successful, winning by a score of 2 to 0.

Athletics Win Easily.

The Philadelphia Athletics defeated the Newark Eastern League team at Wiedenmayer's Park, Newark, yesterday by a score of 12 to 2. More than 4,000 people witnessed the contest, and, despite the cold and one-sided result, the crowd stayed until the last inning. The feature of the game was the home runs of Oldsing and Lord in the third inning, which resulted in the Athletics piling up six runs. The score:

WARNING TO BALLOONISTS.

Altitude Contests at Norfolk Dangerous to Pilots.

A valuable suggestion has been made by A. L. Rotch, Director of the Blue Hill Observatory, near Boston, to the aeronautical committee in charge of the balloon competitions at the Jamestown Exposition calling attention to the fact that the contests for altitude are liable to result in disaster to the pilots of the balloons from the fact that westerly winds are likely to be encountered when the balloons reach a height of about a mile. As Norfolk is situated so close to the ocean, a westerly wind would speedily drive the balloons out to sea. The committee has already considered this possibility, has practically decided that the contests for altitude will be limited to small pilot balloons, which will be equipped with proper instruments for measuring the height attained by the small balloons.

Entries have been received for the first balloon contest on May 4 at Norfolk for a special cup from Alan R. Hawley, A. N. Chandler, President of the Aero Club of Philadelphia, and Capt. T. T. Loveiace. Mr. Chandler will use his balloon Initial and Mr. Hawley will use the Aero Club's balloon Orient.

Kennel Club Show Judges.

The first annual show of the Westchester Kennel Club will be held on Saturday, June 1, at Howard Willets's Gedney farm estate at White Plains, composed of the leading residents and dog owners of Westchester County. The Department of Agriculture, through the State Veterinarian, has given permission for the Show Committee to issue tags to the exhibitors, which allow them to bring their dogs into and remove them from the county during the progress of the show. This was made necessary by the quarantining of Westchester County by the State authorities for supposed rabies.

Beals and Irving Wright Return.

Beals C. Wright and Irving Wright, the former National tennis champion and present Canadian champion, arrived here yesterday from Southampton on the American liner St. Louis. They have played tennis on the Riviera, competing in big annual tournaments at Nice and elsewhere. Both appeared to be in good health. The ex-National champion declared he felt no ill effects from his accident which last year incapacitated him just before the Davis International Cup matches in England, and was playing in practically as good form as ever.

Automobile Notes of Interest.

In addition to the projected tour to the Jamestown Exhibition at Norfolk, Va., by the Automobile Club of America in the Fall, plans have just been perfected by the Automobile Club of Maryland to hold a member's run from Baltimore to Norfolk.

The annual meeting of the New Jersey Automobile and Motor Club will be held in the Newark clubhouse on May 6. Angus Sinclair has been nominated for the Presidency to succeed Joseph H. Wood, and Louis T. Wiss has been nominated for the Vice Presidency. Joseph H. Wood, W. F. Kimber, and W. C. Crosby have been named for the Board of Trustees.

IT costs us thousands of yards of cloth every season to be able to guarantee thoroughly shrunken goods. This is because we do not rely on manufacturers' shrinking. Every yard we buy is put through the cold water process. This makes our suits require more cloth, but they satisfy the men who wear them.

BIG AUTO TOURING YEAR.

Club Committees Busy Mapping Out Routes for Runs.

Never has automobile touring been so popular as it is to-day. The busiest committees in the leading automobile clubs are the Runs and Tours Committees, while the Touring Board of the American Automobile Association, in addition to its labors in conducting the annual Glidden Cup contest, is doing a great deal of quiet but very practical work in mapping out new routes, securing reliable data in conjunction with the Good Roads Committee on the condition of the highways in the popular touring districts of the country.

Chairman Frank B. Hower has just sent requests to a number of clubs in the East and West advising them to make this signboard work one of the special features of the year. In New York, throughout New England, and in Ohio, most of the main roads are well marked, but many sections of New Jersey and Pennsylvania are still sadly lacking in this respect.

More members of the Automobile Club of America are making arrangements for long tours in Europe this season than ever before, and the inquiries for good touring trips and routes in this country far exceed the number received up to this time last year.

The Touring Bureau of the Automobile Club of America has been entirely reorganized within the last year, and it possesses the most complete collection of material on automobile routes in the Eastern States in this country. Besides its elaborate maps, which are especially drawn for automobile purposes, the club has provided 64 touring cars, each one designating a separate route. These include 18 routes in New York, 31 in New England, and 35 in New Jersey and Pennsylvania. Twelve new routes are being compiled and these cards will be issued by June 1.

J. D. Maxwell, Vice President of the Maxwell-Briscoe Motor Company, will leave to-night for Newcastle, Ind., for the purpose of inspecting the work on the new machine shop and power plant in process of construction at that place. The plans of the new works have been prepared with the idea of establishing at Newcastle the finest automobile plant in the world.

Australian Swims in Fast Time.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., April 14.—David Billington, the professional swimmer, to-day swam three-quarters of a mile in 17 minutes 36 2-5 seconds, said to create a new world's record.

In the absence of information of the conditions attending the trial of Billington, the record said to have been established cannot be accepted. If swam indoors, the tank must be of greater length than sixty feet to stand as a record, neither would an outdoor record with the tide be accepted. The best American record was 18:34, by M. F. Handy of Chicago, in a sixty-foot tank. This Daniels broke on Feb. 25 at the Interior Baths in this city, covering the distance in 17:45 1-5.

West End Church Athletic Meet.

The young athletes of the gymnasium of the West End Presbyterian Church, One Hundred and Fifth Street and Amsterdam Avenue, held their annual competition in the church gymnasium on Saturday night. The winners were as follows:

First Division.—Won by Frank Blauville; Harry P. B. MacHarg second, Charles Livingston third.

Second Division.—Won by Merrill Come; Francis Rich second; Harold Craig and Allen Horton tied for third place, and they both received medals.

WORKOUTS ON SPEEDWAY.

Miss Giulia Morosini Leads Drivers with Togo and Glorious.

The return of Miss Guilia Morosini to the Speedway after the closed seasons furnished quite the feature of the drive's doings yesterday, and her appearance was the signal for a gratifying reception from the crowd that lined both sides of the drive near the finish of the half-mile stretch. Miss Morosini drove her high-stepping pair, Togo and Glorious, with her father seated beside her. She was dressed in dark blue with hat to match, while the harnes sand carriage were of the same color. Miss Morosini is the only woman member of the Road Drivers' Association, and is a regular visitor to the Speedway every Sunday morning during the season. She will drive her spike team in the annual parade and horse show of the Road Drivers' opening day, May 4.

The heavy condition of the Speedway prevented any brushing, but about a score of horsemen were out in the morning. With few exceptions no attempt was made at speeding, the drivers contenting themselves with jogging their horses. Glaus Bobling drove his new pair, Kingmond, 2:09, and A. J. D., 2:09¼. The latter was purchased from F. G. Schmidt last week. The two horses are alike both in appearance and gait, and the new horse took kindly to the pole. George H. Huber drove his Pandit team, Frankie Pandit and Nigger Pandit. There were two other new teams out.

E. J. La Place drove Frank Wilson, 2:08¾. A. E. Ferrine was behind Alice Carr, 2:09¼. Christopher Hackett sent his roan pacer Blue Jay, 2:23¾, down the drive several times. Joseph F. Gibbons made a good showing with Bessie G. James H. Campbell's black pacer Susie G., 2:14½, figured among the workers. William J. Clark made an excellent impression with his new bay trotter Banker. Dr. Chase, 2:06¾, driven by Charles Welland, showed a nice turn of speed. Dr. Story drove Josephine Harrold, 2:13¾, and Thomss G. Hinds was in the wagon behind Kitty L., 2:10¾. W. J. Scott drove Regland. Helpenhausen jogged his chestnut pacer Lemon Girl, and M. Bruckhelmer drove Larabee Rose, 2:14.

SCHOOLBOY'S PRACTICE ROW.

Candidates for Harlem Regatta Crews Show Promising Form.

Schoolboys have taken to rowing the scientific boats on the Harlem River in no doubtful manner, and the sport promises to become popular at the high schools of the city. With the support of the Board of Education and the Public Schools Athletic League, there is every indication of rowing being made a permanent institution. Reports from the clubhouses where the boys are training for the eight-oared shell race at the Memorial Day regatta are very encouraging.

All the boys were tried in boats last week for the first time, and the result was quite encouraging. Capt. John E. Nagle of the Harlem Rowing Club is coaching about seventy boys from the De Witt Clinton High School anad the High School of Commerce. The boys are rowing in barges. The average attendance daily at the Harlem Rowing Club is about fifty, and Capt. Nagle says the enthusiasm is growing.

The Morris High School boys of the Bronx, to the number of thirty-two, selected mainly because of their physique and proficiency in studies, are in charge of Coach E. J. Giannini of the New York Athletic Club at Travers Island. The boys received their first rowing instruction on the water last Saturday, and were confined to elementary work. Barges were used, and the young candidates showed the usual aptitude of the average schoolboy. It is settled that the ultimate outcome will be a strong eight for the schoolboys' race of the Harlem regatta.

The Lone Star Boat Clubhouse is a busy place every afternoon, where the young students from the College of the City of New York are being put through their rowing races by H. Peckwell, one of the coaches at the colls, and a former Dauntless Rowing Club oarsman. Thirty-five names are on the candidate's list, and the boys will make the clubhouse their headquarters for the regatta.

LONG AND SHORT HAUL.

The Inter-State Commerce Commission is about to take up a matter having closer relation to the public welfare than the railway topics which recently have monopolized attention, and yet it is to be feared that the new topics will not receive a proportionate amount of attention, for there is nothing personal or scandalous about them. Many will follow closely the intricacies of a Wall Street "deal" who will tire quickly of a revival of the long and short haul controversy. Yet it is plain, and was from the beginning, that the Harriman matter led nowhere beyond his personal affairs. Whatever his offenses, and whatever their punishment, there is nothing in either suitable for modifying the principles upon which railway rates should be based. Having wasted months upon these piquant revelations, the commission now turns its attention to a humdrum matter concerning every shipper and carrier of everything. We are upon the eve of a new departure in ratemaking if in the Spokane case the commission which now possesses the ratemaking power gives effect to views which it entertained before those powers were given to it.

Spokane's grievance is that the railways make their rates from the East to Spokane by adding to the rates to Portland the local rate from Portland to Seattle. Seattle is unable to see why the goods cannot simply be dropped off at Spokane, without going on 400 miles more to Portland and being charged for the haul back again. Spokane is also unable to see why the rate should be the same from Chicago to Spokane as from New York to Spokane, since the distance from Chicago is 1,000 miles less. They think the shorter haul should get a lower rate, and they could do a great deal more business if they could get a reduction.

While taking a sympathetic view of Spokane's plaint, there is something else to think of—to wit, the rest of the United States, including Spokane's competitors. It is necessary to consider what would be the effect of granting Spokane's prayer for deliverance from conditions which seem oppressive and irrational when stated as above. Yet the rates are made by the railways exactly as the rates were made before the railways existed. From New York the original route was by ocean to Portland, and necessarily the additional distance to any interior point was charged for in the mixed land and water rate. The sum of these rates is the present rates, although it is true that the roads overland run through Spokane to Portland. Ought the rates to be lowered on that account?

The result would be that the railways would have to abandon the Pacific Coast business. They could not possibly do all their business at the Portland rate, and if the rates to Portland and Spokane were equal there would be little to go by rail from Portland to Spokane. Therefore, from Spokane to Portland the railways would have to haul empty cars, and the cost of this empty haul would be added necessarily to the return trip, for it is the round trip which makes the rate, not the rate in either direction separately. The coast ports cannot afford to have higher rates quoted upon all their native products—lumber, shingles, live stock—in order that Spokane can enjoy a reduction. Moreover, the East cannot afford to pay for coast products what would be required if railway rates were to pay by distance, as Spokane contends. Lumber, which is now hauled to Eastern pointe at 50 cents for 2,000 miles, could not come at all on the distance schedule, and would come only sparingly and at higher rates to consumers if the railways were compelled to haul empty cars beyond Spokane to get loads at ocean ports.

The subject so bristles with difficulties that there is a respectable body of opinion to the effect that it is uneconomic that railways should seek to equalize or distribute coste ae between competing markets. The cheaper route should get the business, they argue, and the railways are not entitled to any business in competition with water routes at the cost of raising rates to interior points. The most authoritative declaration to that effect was by the Inter-State Commerce Commission in the case of Denver dry goods jobbers, who objected—like the Spokane complainants—to a rate of $2.24, against $1.50 to San Francisco, the longer haul, of course, including the shorter. The commission thought the subtraction of 1,400 miles over the mountains ought not to add to the rate. Nor ought it, stated thus. It is the partial statement of the case which begs the question. There is some reason to believe that the commission has revised its opinions. If not, and if its ratemaking powers are sustained by the courts, we are upon the eve of a revolution in the railway business.

OUR ENVOYS TO THE HAGUE.

Nothing, apparently, could be better than our selection of delegates to the Peace Conference at The Hague. One cannot be much astray in attributing the selection in the main to the judgment of the Secretary of State. While it is quite true that Mr. STEAD's proposal of a "peace pilgrimage" has been received with vociferous applause at Pittsburg, and even conceivable that, as a disinterested and unselfish "lobby" at The Hague, such a pilgrims' procession might be very useful, in a cause otherwiee established to be both sentimentally deeirable and practically feasible, the procession of pilgrims would naturally not be of the same material of which one would build an official National delegation of representatives of international "weight and instance."

And suoh a delegation has without question been announced from Washington. It is a delegation of Americans who are either practically or theoretically, and in some cases both practically and theoretically, "charged with knowledge" of the ways of conducting international business. We suppose it would be generally agreed that Mr. CHOATE and Gen. PORTER are the foremost, if we except President ANDREW D. WHITE, of the diplomatists of the United States who are eligible to this mission as being no longer on the active list of the Diplomatic Service. The ex-President of the American Bar Aesociation is by that fact "indicated" as an eligible delegate to The Hague. The Judge Advocate General of the United States Army, in that capacity and as a former professor at West Point of law, which at West Point necessarily means so largely international law; the President of the Naval War College, the Solicitor of the Department of State—all these, one may say, are ex-officio eligible. They will have this advantage over any possible delegation of amateurs that they individually know what tbu customs and usages of international law are, that tbey have what has lately and happily been called the "legal instinct," and that among them they have knowledge of every subject of which the conference is likely to treat. We may be perfectly sure that the American delegation will not in any event become negligible in the deliberations of the conference. We may be fairly sure that they will carry, on disputed points, a weight in favor of peace and progress corresponding to the position of their country among the nations of the earth.

STANDARD OIL REBATES.

The Standard Oil Company in the Chicago cases has been found guilty of accepting rebates under an indictment covering 1,463 separate offenses. If the minimum fine is imposed, the company will have to pay about a million and a half dollars; if the maximnm fine of $20,000 for each offense is imposed, it will have to pay nearly $30,000,000—a penalty both punitivo and exemplary. In either case, the company's officers can blame no one but themselves. Seeking to obtain an unfair advantage over its competitors, the Standard Oil Company shipped oil from Whiting, Ind., to St. Louis over the Chicago & Alton at 6 cents a hundrod pounds, the regular published rate being 18 cents. It violated the Elkins law, of which it must have had full knowledge. It was a mean kind of crime, secret, underhanded, and contemptible. The people of the country are resolved that the giving and acceptance of secret rebates shall stop. The conviction of the Standard Oil Company will help on the reform.

From one part of Judge LANDIS's charge, however, we think there will be general dissent on the part of shippers. The Judge charged the jury that the defendant was bound to have knowledge of the lawful rate; it was its duty "diligently to endeavor in good faith to get from the Chicago & Alton Railway Company the lawful rate by applying to one of the railroad company's officials"; it was "presumed to have known that the railway company would be guilty of a misdemeanor if it gave the defendant a rate on inter-State traffic" other than the rate published and filed with the Commission. It seems to us this puts the shipper to no end of trouble. In a bargain of that sort the buyer is usually content with asking a price, and if he is willing to pay it, the transaction goes through. To compel him to inquire into the details of the business of the other party to the bargain, to consult its books and files, and to inform himself if the price of what he wants to buy has been made known to a Federal commission in Washington, seems to put upon him duties that would not only obstruct business but would seem in some degree to make him the guardian of public morals.

Much more sensible was that part of the Judge's charge in which he said that the Standard Oil Company, having a department which dealt with freight rates, "it apparently would have been necessary for the head of this department to be familiar with the tariff in question." Of course the head of the department knew that the six-cent rate from Whiting to St. Louis was far below the published and regular rate. That constituted guilty knowledge. The acceptance of a six-cent rate or of the rebate which left the cost of the service only 6 cents, was a violation of law for which a substantial fine will be a fit punishment.

M. STOLYPIN'S BLUNDERS.

It has to be owned that M. STOLYPIN is not fulfilling the promise of the beginning of his Premiership. The opportunity of mediating between the old and the new Russia, and of conducting peacefully the inevitable transformation, might suffice to fill the measure of any statesman's ambition. And at first it seemed that M. STOLYPIN was a statesman capable of seizing it. Rumor attributed to him the entirely unprecedented boldness of avowing himself not the humble eervant but the wise friend of the autocracy, and of delivering to it an "ultimatum" as the condition on which alone he would consent to hold power. And many of his reforms are admittedly excellent, and promise to fulfill the pledges of the Czar's manifesto of October, 1905.

But of late M. STOLYPIN, like hie predecessors, has seemed to be "subdued to what he works in." His treatment of the Duma has been sometimes in the new spirit, but sometimes in the old. The horrible and evidently Reactionary murder of the editor of a leading Liberal newspaper has been "deprecated" hy the Monarchists, but not effectively prosecuted by the Government, which would so surely have prosecuted the like murder of an official. Worse than that, the Premier's treatment of the question of "field courts-martial" has been that of a Reactionary. The London Times a fortnight ago pointed out, very justly, that M. STOLYPIN had blundered in his treatment of the Duma. And now Mr. STEPHEN BONSAL, in his dispatch to THE SUNDAY NEW YORK TIMES—and Associated Press dispatches confirm his view—shows the impression that is made upon modern men by the Premier's refusal to admit to the meeting of the Duma expert witnesses desired and needed by the Duma for the intelligent discussion of the budget. M. STOLYPIN announces his intention to exclude them by force. By declining to continue a discussion on the subject witb a Premier who avows his main and indeed only argument to be force, M. GOLOVIN has vindicated the dignity of the Duma and put the Premier in a very unenviable light before tbe impartial world.

SOBERING UP.

That Mr. ROOSEVELT's recent activities have rather outrun those of some of bis most earnest followers seems to be indicated by the note of caution struck by Judge GROSSCUP in his Cooper Union address before the Voters' Festival the other evening. The proceedings illustrate the danger of starting such brushfires as Mr. ROOSEVELT's. What Mr. CLEVELAND calls "denunciations of conditions" elicited, we are told, volcanoes of applause, hut there were scant signs of approval of the "declaration of principles" which Mr. CLEVELAND postulated as the basis of wholesome reform. Nevertheless, it is a good sign tbat Judge GROSSCUP, even under such stimulus to extravagance, felt the need of balancing hie views as carefully as Mr. ROOSEVELT himself. For example, he said:

> In many Stats Legislatures bills have been introduced regulating local railroad mattere, and in some Legislatures euch bills have been passed. With a few exceptions these bills are not ths result of inquiry into the cost of service; are not founded on considerations of place or circumstance; are not founded on any judgment other than tbe general judgment of the legislators that the thing done is a popular thing to do.

Tbat hae been said before, but hardly so frankly by any one in such sympathy with the agitation as Judge GROSSCUP. Taken with Mr. ROOSEVELT's declaration of adherence to his original position—which signifies at least abandonment of intention to advance along a path which has suddenly developed obstacles—it may be regarded as a sign of the arrival of sober second thought, happily before excessive damage has been done this time.

PICTURES AND CONNOISSEURSHIP.

It appears that whereas the collections of bric-à-brac and "studio properties" left by the late STANFORD WHITE brought their full value at public auction, the sale of the pictures collected by the same connoisseur has been a disappointment. Many, if not most, of the canvases brought less than they cost the collector.

This is a strange result. It is almost an axiom that a collection made by a competent collector who brings zeal, knowledge, and personal inveetigation to the collection will always fetch more than its cost, and is a good investment. Of course fashions change in painting, perhaps more rapidly than in other arts. And in this case the acquisition of bric-à-brac from the collection of STANFORD WHITE had a "souvenir" value which does not attach to paintings. In fact, nohody cares whence a picture comes, so long as it is certain that it originally came from the pencil of the artist whoae name is eigned to it, and so long ae it is recognized ae a "good example." The personal equation of the collector counts for much more in the price of "objects."

But there is more than that in it. The American interest in pictorial art is not relatively holding its own. In the last generation a successful American who wished to show that he knew what to do with his good fortune, and who laid no claim to "altruism," was really forced to have a "gallery." The Aspinwall gallery, the Belmont gallery, the Blodgett gallery, the John Taylor Johnston gallery, the Lenox gallery, the Roberts gallery, the Stewart gallery, the Stuart gallery, and the rest, were the glories of New York, the things upon which New Yorkers relied against the scoff of the foreigner that there was nothing to see in New York. In proportion to the size and wealth of the city there are probably not so many collectors in 1907 as there were in 1877, or, for that matter, in 1867. Taking into account the amount of money available in New York for sumptuous and ornamental purposes there is no comparison at all.

SUNDAY'S TIMES.

THE TIMES feels like sharing with its readers congratulations on its issue of yesterday.

Its local news yesterday was of notable value, and rivaled even the Special Cable News Section, which put New Yorkers electrically in touch with topics that are at the moment agitating Londoners, Parisians, Romans, Russians, and Berliners. The extraordinary and perhaps unique revelations of a Thaw juror by a very exceptional juror, who knows how to record his impressions both by pencil and by pen, dealt with precisely tbe most "actual" of local topics, more than a local topic, for all over the world there is a lively curiosity to know what this country can do with a "plutocratic" culprit who is arraigned for a capital offenee. And from his single experience, a layman's experience, Mr. BREARLEY is enabled to make suggestions for the reform of our jurisprudence, a jurisprudence which has incurred the wondering pity, so nearly akin to contempt, of European and even of British commentators. These suggestions simply cannot be ignored when our jurists come to consider the reform of our code of criminal procedure.

Very remarkable, too, was the symposium of the distinguished visitors whom Mr. CARNEGIE has been enabled to assemble for the dedication of the Carnegie Institute at Pittsburg, and for the informal and unofficial Peace Conference here in New York. These visitors, experts in their several kinds, flatter us with the assurnnce in particular lines and epecialties which Speaker CANNON expressed in general, that "this country is a great success." And they tell us of our success in science and art as well as in a material prosperity elsewhere and before undreamed of. How can any American inexpert in astronomy fail to be patriotically gratified by such a tribute as Sir ROBERT BALL pays to American astronomy and American astronomers, or any American inexpert in architecture by such a tribute as Herr VON IHNE paye to American architecture? Or how can any American city dweller fail to be admonished and instructed, by the deliverance of Sir ROBERT CRANSTON, the former Provost of Edinburgh, against allowing himself to be deluded into countenancing that particular variety of extravagance and waste, tending inevitably to plunder and corruption, which calls itself "municipal ownership," but which in fact is political operation of public utilities.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Sacrificed Fame to His Work.

Mr. MOBERLY BELL probably revealed the secret of Lord CROMER's marvelous success as the administrator, or, rather, as the maker, of modern Egypt when he emphasized the fact that the man consciously undertook his task there as his life work, not as part of a "career," in which euccess would be a claim to other and higher positions. In other words, he saw Egypt as needing something he could do and not as a place that could do something for him.

That he was well paid in both money and fame is a fact that does not detract from the intrinelc unselfishness of his policy, and it is generally admitted that he earned more, not lese, of both money and fame than he received. Indeed, even now, the recognition of his genius and of his achievements is chiefly that of experts and specialists. To others he is little more than a name. For he has always been content to remain in the background, to occupy a nominally transient position, and to wear a title absurdly humble, of no obvious or necessary relevancy to the work he was doing.

Our troubles, dieappointments, and humiliatione since we assumed the duty of digging the Panama Canal have been chiefly or largely due to our failure to select or to develop a man of like or similar quality to be the executive head of the adventure. We have sent one good engineer after another to the Isthmus, but none of them as yet hae turned out to be exactly the right man—none of them has forgotten himself in the task.

The fault may not have been in the men, or perhaps their fatal defect wae lack of the quality Lord CROMER muet have had, that of "getting along" with distant superiors and persuading them to give him a free hand and to let him work out a consistent policy. That he repeatedly refused promotion, once to a Cabinet poeition, ebows that Egypt wae a sort of obseeaion to him, exactly as the Far North is to Commander PEARY. Both of them are in a way and a measure incomprehenaible to men built on other linea and with other ambitions.

Settlements and Settlements.

There le, of coiree, a sense, and an extremely important sense, in which it is true that "aettled conditions are necesaary for progress and development." Mr. H. H. ROGERS doubtless had that senee in mind when he used the words in the now famous interview with him which was printed in THE TIMES on Friday, but he should not be at all surprised that the President and many besides instantly saw—and mentioned—the fact that conditione, simply because tbey are settled, are by no means neceasarily good, and that often it le a most desirable thing thoroughly to unsettle, as a preliminary to its abolition or reform, a state of affairs which bae long existed and is still considered highly satisfactory to those who have profited and are profiting from it largely.

Of all the places about which human beings have any definite knowledge, the moon is the one where conditions long since most nearly approached a permanent settlement. An ultra-conservative ghost might well be happy there, for he would have abeolutely no changes of any kind to fear, at least until the final diesolution of the solar eystem, and with confidence he could expect whole eons to be exactly what whole eons have been. The moon, however, ie not notable for progress and development, and its comparatively early arrival at the state of peace toward which ite more or less distracted mother-planet is moving, if the astronomore are to be believed, can hardly be viewed as a happy fate—except, possibly, by persons vastly more peeeimistic than Mr. ROGERE has ever given any signs of being.

But one does not have to go as far away as the moon to find settled conditione that bave been or will be the better for unsettling. The conditions of the meat business, for instance, were recently unsettled, much to their improvement; ae much can be said for the insurance business, and it will soon be safe, one can at least hope, to say the same thing of the business of governing Russia, the New York Police Department, and the Congo Free State. In thess, as in a thousand similar cases, including the tariff and the adjustment of railway rates, there are, it must be admitted, fierce differencee of opinion as to whether the established conditions need changing or not. In every one of them there are howls of paln at the very thought of any unsettlement and sad prophecies of general ruin at even the suggestion of trying new methods, but the question in each caee is apt to have two sides. Changes are by no means inevitably for the better, but neither are they always for the worse, and unless one is very careful in defining what he means by "settled conditions," somebody will coms along and prove to him with cruel conclusiveness that without unsettled conditions progress and development are "by definition" impossible.

Murderers and Insurance.

We notice that the Illinois Appellate Court has just affirmed the decision of a lower court that a life insurance company need not pay to the heirs of a man who was executed for murder the money for which it would have been liable if he had died in some other way. The position taken was that such a paymeat would be against public policy.

The decision, while doubtless satisfactory to the company which thus escapes a loss, might, we should think, be viewed with some regret in insurance circles, for murderers, while American law remains what it is, ought to be pretty good riske, their chance of dying from anything else than old age or lack of exercise being but slight. In many cases, indeed, a man's "expectation" of life is actually increased when he commits a murder, for thereafter and immediately he abandons the highly irregular habits to which potential murderers are lamentably prone. They stop drinking strong waters, they refrain from late and indigestible suppers, and they avoid the many perils of daily companionship with folk of their own kind.

Everything considered—and much more along this line might be said—we fear that it was a mistake to fight the payment of the policy declared void by the Illinois court. Business is business, or so we have often been told, and it strikes us as good insurance business to encourage murderers to insure their lives just before they commit their crimes. Now and then, of course, a policy would have to be paid, but the death rate among murderers as a class is abnormally low and seems to be getting steadily lower.

OPPOSES HIGH SCHOOLS.

Thinks They Benefit the Few at the Expense of the Body of Taxpayers.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES's editorial article, April 11, on "Our Tophsavy School System" should commend itself to all observing and fair-minded readers. A good thing may sometimes run into a mere "fad." Our public school system is ons of the fairest products of our American life. It was developed in order to afford a sound elementary education to all children of every degree. All training beyond that was not contemplated in the common school. The later annex, the high school, is simply an ornamental feature. It has engrafted the academio grade on the public school idea, and taxpayers are now expected to furnish a costly preparatory course for admission to a college. It works unjustly in behalf of the well-to-do class, because only a comparatively small number of the poor can afford to keep their children in the high school. This fact was recently made very clear to me by a concrete example.

In a flourishing village where I was residing the high school class graduated numbered about eighteen. Their diplomas admitted all these to their State University. It really covered, as THE TIMES saye, what would be an equivalent to a collegiate course twenty-five yeara ago. Of those eighteen youths in that class, fifteen were children of comparatively wealthy parents. The father of two of the class was a bank President, one was a prosperous manufacturer, &c. In other words, 98 per cent. of those graduated and these sons and daughters of rich men, received a complete preparation for college at the public charge.

CONDEMNS THE ACADEMY

And Thanks Heaven It Has No Monopoly of American Art.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Taking into consideration the quality of the majority of the work ehown at this last Academy exhibition, one is not very much surprised to learn that thirty-three of our best and most original artiste failed of election.

But how can men grown old and gray and bald in the noble art of painting little pink-faced wax dolle in bootblack's attire; insipid pretty girle in yellow and blue gowns; portraits with eyelashes drawn and buttons and buttonhoies showing in fashion-plate etyle; landscapee with each individual leaf in evidence on the treea—how, I ask, can such men be expected to appreciate a Robert Henri, an Arthur B. Davies, or a George Suks?

Robert Henri, whose name was not included in the jury for reaaons which are painfully evident, struck the nail squarely on the head when he said: "I am afraid that a large part of the Academy is against all that is real and vital in American art."

One is almost ashamed of being an American, but let us take heart, for, thank heavens, American art le not confined to the Academy.

Abolishing Barbers' Tips.

By Order of the Paris Syndical Chamber of Master Hairdressers.

By a decision of the Syndical Chamber of the Master Hairdressers of Paris and of the Department of the Seine, in compliance with the wishes of the barbers' employes regarding the suppression of tips, these will be abolished on and after April 1, 1907, and the following will be in vogue:

Hair cut	1 fr.
Shave	50 cen.
Beard trim	50 cen.
Shampoo	1 fr. 50 cen.

Patrons are requested to abstain from April 1, 1907, onward from giving pourboires to the employes, as the latter's salaries will thereafter be paid entirely by the employers.

MISSED THEIR OPPORTUNITY.

Reader Thinks Jerome and Delmas Failed in Summing Up.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It hae always been recognized in literary and stage tragedy that the social or political poeition of the victim, and in general of the partiee concerned, is a potent factor in the prodduction of the tragic effect. It was 2,000 years after Aeschylus before a successful middle-claes tragedy was put on the stage. And even within the limits of this kind of tragio art we recognize the difference between the woea of a tragio hero from the alums and those of one to whom a fall from affluence and luxury means, according to the ordinary human instincts to whicb the etage eo etrongly appeals, a vastly more deplorable fate than any change of etate could mean to one already little to be envied.

Was it not a mistake, therefore, for Mr. Jerome to describe the crime through which our foremost architect loet his life at the hands of a young man of great wealth as a vulgar and cowardly Tenderloin murder? Cowardly it certainly was, but it was as far removed as possible from the ordinary killing in the Tenderloin. Such a killing is not usually reported to the Frencb and English papers by famous correspondente sent across the ocean for thet purpose. There must have been eoms quality in the crime itself, or in the character of the parties concerned, whicb gave it a unique interest.

It eeems to me that Mr. Jerome, no leas than Mr. Delmas, failed completely in the summing up of the case. The trial of Thaw waa the opportunity of a lifetime for a really great lawyer. I cannot help thinking how such an opportunity would have been utilized by an orator like Daniel Webster. It is not likely that his oration would have aeemed ponderous or elow even in these times of hurry and "strenuosity." He would have treated the evidence not only so ae to have made the moet of the case for the people or for the defendant, but also in such a way as to have produced a monument of oratorical power that would have found a permanent place in the world's literature. The schoolboye of New England would have been declaiming its peroration for the next fifty yeare.

The fault witb Mr. Delmas's summing up did not lie in his models, but in his complete misapprehenelon of his models. His speech would have been no lese grotesque and "out of date" in an age when the flowers of rhetoric were habitually woven into formal speechmaking than it wae last Monday and Tuesday.

Of course, it is a matter of indifference whether or not a lawyer misses his opportunity for a great speech so long as subetantial justice is done in the end, but one cannot avoid the reflection that on an occasion like this, justice often hangs on an adequate presentation of proofs and arguments, such as this case certainly did not receive.

LESSON FROM THAW TRIAL.

Great Wealth a Curse to Those Who Misuse It.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your splendid and extensive review and commenta on the Thaw jury disagreement in to-day's issue of THE TIMES are very timely and most commendable, to all of which I fully agree.

Apropos of the great trial just ended, allow me to say that money is a great blessing for those who possess and use it in a proper manner, but it is a great curse for those who have it in abundance and misuse it. Money is a great power and is king in certain circles of so-called society, and they who are fortunate, or rather unfortunate, enough to possess it in abundance may command and have every wish gratified.

Money talks. Money tells many strange and wonderful tales. Had it not been for the millions in the Thaw family the events which have shocked the whole country from its centre to circumference would never have happened, and without money in abundance the case of Tbaw would probably have been disposed of long ago with little expense, and he would either have been executed or be in prison for life. And had not Stanford White been comparatively a rich man, the horrible crimes chargsd against him would have been impossible. Moral: "Give me neither poverty nor riches"—only a competency for daily needs and deeds with contentment and honor.

Agrees with The Times.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Any unneceasary waste of words would only tend to diminish the intensity and force with which I would characterize my applause for every word of your editorial on the "Thaw Disagreement."

It is a great comfort to see that perversity, morbid sentimentalism, hypocrisy, a total absence of decency and justice as represented by a certain class of newspapers havs no place in the minds of high-class Americane, of which I regard THE TIMES as a worthy repreeentative.

A GERMAN WOMAN.

New York, April 13, 1907.

Advocates Scotch Jury System.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am etruck very forcibly, in reading the decision of the Thaw jury, with the contrast between the law of Scotland and that of England, on which, of course, those of this country are founded. It is another case of the worship of the Anglo-Saxon fetich. In the matter of jury the Scotch very sensibly abide by the will of the majority, making the jury fifteen, then we have a sensible verdict and no coercion neccasary on the part of the court. Whenever did twelve men really agree? If the history of any decision were really known, it would be seen that the majority simply coerced the minority into agreeing with them. When will we grow legally sensible?

Origin of the Cross Bun.

From The Leeds and Yorkshire Mercury.

The exact significance or origin of the cross bun is not too certain. A superstition regarding baked bread on Good Friday appears to have existed from an early period. Bread so baked was kept by a family all through the ensuing year, under the belief that a few gratings of it in water would prove a specific for any ailment.

A KISS.

"What is a kisa?" Heaven knowa! Not I!
And yet, with humble wit,
Now that you've asked me I will try
To give my view of it.

A friendly grimace, pleasing, quite;
A drooping of tbe eyes.
The thrilling of a moonlit night,
Or better, starry skies.

A rare Havana eacrificed—
A breath upon the lips;
The spirit of red wine enticed
To sparkle in long sips.

A contact either short or long;
A dozen thoughts or lese;
The question, Ie it right or wrong?
And then—just foolishness.

NEED TO EXPEDITE CRIMINAL TRIALS

But De Lancey Nicoll Believes Present Procedure Needs Little Simplification.

JURY SYSTEM WELL ROOTED

Ex-District Attorney Says We Will Have the Unanimous Jury Verdict for a Long Time Yet.

"Always after a long criminal trial, particularly when no verdict le reached, you hear talk about revising and eimplifying our criminal proceduro," said De Lancey Nicoll last night. "It never gets any further than talk."

Mr. Nicoll was District Attorney of New York from 1890 to 1893, and prosecuted the famous Jacob Sharp bribery case, to get a jury for which required eix weeke. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1894, at which many suggestions were made for the simplification of the present criminal procedure. He is regarded ae one of the authorities on criminal law in thie city.

"Tbis popular impatience which follows a long criminal trial that brings no verdict, and has to be done all over again, brings the usual crop of suggested remedies designed to expedite criminal trials," Mr. Nicoll observed last night at his home, 23 Eaet Thirty-ninth Street. "The attention of the reformers is turned toward the jury. Sometimes it is suggested that the opinion of a majority of the jurors should eerve as a verdict, instead of requiring unanimity of opinion, as we now have it.

"Well, I think we shall have twelve jurors for a long time yet, and I think it will be demanded that they all decide the same wey to constitute a verdict. That idea is so deeply implanted in our criminal jurisprudence that even a prisoner himself cannot waive the requirement.

"In France they have the majority rule in the jury box. In England they hold to the unanimous verdict of twelve men, but there the law is designed rather in the interest of the prosecution than in the interest of the accused. With us, since the beginning of the Nation, the law has been designed to throw around the accused every safeguard. It is shaped in the interest of the defendant, throwing the burden throughout on the prosecution.

"I don't believe our criminal procedure needs any simplification. It is the result of years of experience. Constitutional Conventions will not brook any tampering with our jury system. In 1894, when our last such convention was held, an earnest effort was made to incorporate the majority verdict rule in civil cases only. The convention wouldn't even stand for that.

"I do believe our criminal proceedure might sometimes oe oetter administered by the Judges. Trials often could be expedited by the Judges.

"Take the matter of experts: The Judge may limit the number on each side. He may also limit the number of witnesses who give simply corroborative testimony. He may limit the time of the speeches. By quick decisions on controverted points much time can be saved, and not infrequently I have known the court to sit at night and to begin a good deal earlier in the morning than it now does."

David McClure, who was quoted on Saturday night as saying that the testimony of allenists was not of much value now in courts of law, refused yesterday to go into the matter of criminal procedure generally. He thought it quite possible, however, that some simplification of the procedure might soon be made. Peter B. Olney thought there was a need of expediting trials.

Champe S. Andrews, counsel to the County Medical Society, has drawn from the articles of Juror Henry C. Brearley in THE TIMES, the inference that the system should be reformed. He said yesterday:

"Every conscientious lawyer at some time or other must have wished for the opportunity of sitting as a juror in court. If all lawyers could be required as a part of their training to act as jurors in a certain number of cases, their professional knowledge and wisdom would be increased even more than the skill of a physician is improved by an adequate post-graduate course.

"The study of the law is only part of a lawyer's training. He must study human nature as well. The human nature of jurlee can best be studied not by addressing them, but by being one of the jurors and observing the effect produced by the counsel who appear before them.

"The rule exempting lawyers from jury duty prevents them from acting as jurors, but Mr. Brearley's graphic account of the Thaw trial from the standpoint of a juror is a notable addition to the literature of great trials, as well as a remarkable achievement as a brilliant stroke of journalism. Its careful study by lawyers will do much to compensate them for the exclusion from the jury box.

"Much that Mr. Brearley suggests by way of comment is open to attack and debate, but I am sure many lawyers will find in his story many arguments in support of the theory that our present jury system is an anachronism and ill-adapted to the ends of justice. The lay mind by its lack of legal knowledge and its unfamiliarity with the technical language of the law many times fails to meet the mind of the Judge, who charges the law, even when done as skillfully and simply as by Justice Fitzgerald.

"It is as illogical to expect a lay mind to decide a legal question where facts and law are intermingled, as to expect a lay mind to decide a medical question where fact and theories are mingled.

"What we need is a jury of men with legal training. The Court of Special Sessions, with its three Judges passing on the law and the facts, is the nearest approach to an ideal condition that exists in this country."

BRYAN ON TAINTED MONEY.

Praises Colleges and Churches That Refuse to Accept It.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—William J. Bryan addressed nearly two thousand persons at the New National Theatre this afternoon. He spoke under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association, and took for his subject "The Prince of Peace." Mr. Bryan concluded with praise for the colleges and churches that have declined to accept money from wealthy men "who have gained their riches by dishonest methods."

"One of our rich men," he said, "has reached a point where he sometimes has difficulty to find people to take his money, and that I regard as the best evidence of the growth of a moral sentiment in this country. It means something when a great church pauses, hesitates, refuses to accept the money until it knows how it was made.

"I believe the time will come when churches and colleges will refuse to go into partnership in the spending of money immorally made. The influence of that public opinion will be a powerful factor in the restoring of righteousnees. These great institutions should say to a man: 'You did not make your money honestly; we will not share the odium with you.'"

Mr. Bryan left for New York to-nigbt to attend the Peace Conference.

FOR STATE LIFE INSURANCE.

Gov. Broward Recommends Its Adoption by Florida Legislature.

TLLAHASSEE, Fla., April 14.—Gov. Broward will to-morrow send a special message to the Legislature advocating State life insurance. He wil treat the matter exhaustively to demonetrate that the enterprise would be profitable to the people by showing that foreign insurance companies bave returned in lossee paid less than $5,000,000 and have received upward of $13,000,000 in premiums during the past thirteen yeare, and that the South alone paya Northern companies $50,000,000 per annum.

It will be suggested that the management be vested in a commisalon or a manager, which would eliminate high-salaried officers, and that the entire expense would be less than the salary of a Vice President or Board Chairman of one of the large companies now existing.

JAMES H. ECKELS DIES IN HIS SLEEP

Former Controller of the Currency Succumbs to Heart Disease at His Chicago Home.

HIS FAMILY NOW IN PARIS

Young Lawyer Appointed Controller by Cleveland Despite Opposition Proved Able Financier.

CHICAGO, April 14.—James H. Eckels, President of the Commercial National Bank and formerly Controller of the Currency, died at his home to-day of heart disease. The death of Mr. Eckels occurred apparently while he was asleep.

The fact that he was dead was discovered by his butler, Frank Evans, who entered Mr. Eckels's room to answer a telephone ring that had continued for some time. The butler called to Mr. Eckels, and, getting no response, sought to arouse the banker, only to find that he was dead. Dr. Frank S. Churchill was summoned and said that Mr. Eckels had been dead for several hours. It was ascertained later that the person who had tried to communicate with him by telephone was his brother, George A. Eckels.

Mrs. Eckels and her daughter Phoebe, 18 years old, are in Paris, where the latter is attending school. They have been abroad since last Fall, and planned to return to Chicago within a few weeks. They were communicated with by cable, and it is understood will sail from France for New York to-morrow.

The death of Mr. Eckels cams on the eve of a breakfast party which he had planned for a number of friends and relatives. Judge K. M. Landis of the Federal District Court, Mrs. Landis, Mr. and Mrs. E. M. Gary of New York, George M. Eckels, a brother, and his wife, and others wers to have been guests.

James A. Eckels of Princeton, Ill., father of James H. Eckels, died recently. At the time the son was a host of ex-President Grover Cleveland.

The funeral will be held Tuesday afternoon at the Fourth Presbyterian Church, after which the body will be placed in a vault until the return of Mrs. Eckels and daughter, when a private funeral will be held.

PRINCETON, N. J., April 14.—Ex-President Cleveland was deeply touched when he learned of the death of Mr. Eckels. He said:

"I was closely related to Mr. Eckels and his death comes to me with a peculiar shock. In important public work I learned to know how intelligently and industriously he devoted himself to duty, and in the intimacy of close friendship I learned to know and appreciate his many and attractive qualities of heart. Mr. Eckels illustrated the traits that make the best American citizenship."

James H. Eckels was one of the strong men of the second Cleveland Administration. He was often referred to as one of Mr. Cleveland's "personal discoveries," and, although no nomination of the President's was more strenuously opposed by leading men of both parties, his confidence in his nominee never wavered for an instant, and the nomination of Mr. Eckels to one of the most important posts in the financial department of the Government was eventually confirmed by the Senate. When Mr. Eckels retired from the office in the latter part of 1897 it was to accept the Presidency of the Commercial National Bank of Chicago, which office he assumed on the 1st day of January following.

Mr. Eckels was born in Princeton, Ill., Nov. 22, 1858, and was educated in the public schools of that city. He afterward studied law, and in 1883 was graduated from the Albany (N. Y.) Law School. He then returned to Illinois, and for the next ten years practiced his profession in Ottawa, that State. In 1893 he was brought suddenly into public notice by his appointment to be Controller of the Currency.

The appointment came as a great surprise to the Senators who had to confirm it, and Mr. Cleveland had to overcome a vast amount of opposition in order to get the nomination confermed. One of the strongest and most influential of the opponents of the Eckels nomination was the late Senator Vest of Missouri. Senator Vest went to the President and begged him to withdraw the nomination, declaring that in his opinion it could not be confirmed.

Among the Republican Senators two of the strongest opponents of Mr. Eckels's confirmation were Senator Sherman of Ohio and Senator Morrill of Vermont. They were particularly outspoken, and their contentions as to the inadvisability of the confirmation found a great deal of newspaper support throughout the country. But the President was not to be shaken in his view that Mr. Eckels was the right man for the place, and he told Senator Vest in plain terms that under no consideration would he withdraw the name of the young lawyer from Illinois.

While the contest between the President and the opposition Senators was at its height ex-Controller Lacey of Chicago in an interview warmly defended the President's choice. The opposition to Mr. Eckels was due principally to the fact that he was not a banker. A country lawyer, the opponents of the confirmation declared, was the last man in the world to be considered for such an important post as the one to which Mr. Eckels had been appointed. It was said that he had never even read the National Banking act. He was a country lawyer, and while he was a lifelong student of economic questions along academic lines, he had never paid much attention to the subject of banking.

Hardly had Mr. Eckels taken hold of his office than he was brought face to face with a banking crisis without parallel in the country's history. In the thirty years preceding the date of Mr. Eckels's induction into the office of Controller of the Currency only 212 banks had failed, yet the number of those institutions that failed in the first ten weeks of his administration numbered 165. The policy of previous Controllers had been against failed banks resuming business. The new Controller from Illinois did not look with favor on this policy. Wherever he found grounds to hope for satisfactory results he encouraged the banks and assisted them to resume business. He put 115 out of the 165 on their feet again, and, as it turned out, nearly every one of them continued in business to the satisfaction and profit of all concerned.

An instance of Mr. Eckels's judgment, which is often referred to by his admirers, was his letter to the embarrassed Denver (Col.) banks, assuring them of his every assistance and criticising the people in that city for withdrawing their deposits and crippling institutions in which they had had confidence for so many years. This stopped the runs on the banks, and a more settled situation was the result.

Mr. Eckels declared that the failures in most cases were not due to wildcat mismanagement. In cases, however, where the management was open to criticism he was just as outspoken on the other side, and he never healtated to take immediate steps to protect the depositors.

The friendship of Mr. Cleveland for Mr. Eckele began when the latter was a law student in Albany, where it was that he also formed the friendship of the late Daniel S. Lamont, another warm friend of Mr. Cleveland'a, who was destined to play an important part in the financial affairs of the Government. When Mr. Eckels went to Washington in 1893 to see Mr. Cleveland he had no idea that the President was to appoint him Controller of the Currency. One afternoon during that visit Mr. Eckels went to the White House with his friend Congressman Ben Cable of Illinois. On the way they were stopped by a newspaper reporter.

"Do you know a man named Eckels from Illinois?" asked the reporter of Mr. Cable.

"What is his first name?" asked Mr. Cable.

"James," answered the reporter. "Mr. Cleveland has just nominated him for Controller of the Currency."

"This is Mr. Eckels," responded Mr. Cable, pointing to his companion.

Mr. Eckels as Controller soon gained a wide reputation as a speaker and writer on financial subjects. His speech before the Clearing House Committee of New York, deliver at the Union League Club, in defense of the Cleveland Administration, won earnest praise, while his reports to Congress are considered among the best literature upon the banking subject ever written. The men who had opposed Mr. Eckels's nomination in after years saw their mistake, and most of them took pains to go to him and tell him that they had been wrong.

Obituary Notes.

The Rev. DEAN OLIVER OWEN, aged 65 years, rector of St. James's Episcopal Church of Clinton, N. Y., for twenty years, and of St. Mark's Church at Clark's Mills, died suddenly on Saturday night at his home in Clinton of heart trouble.

Dr. JAMES ADDISON QUARLES, for the past twenty-one years Professor of Moral Philosophy at Washington and Lee University, died at Lexington, Va., yesterday. He was 70 years old, and a native of Boonville, Mo. He had filled pastorates in Missouri, and was for ten years President of Elizabeth Aull Female Seminary at Lexington, Mo.

JAMES B. MURRAY, Past Exalted Ruler of Jersey City Lodge No. 211, B. P. O. E., and a prominent member of the Jersey City Council of the Knights of Columbus, died on Saturday in the City Hospital in Jersey City after a three months' illness of paralysis. He was 40 years old, and lived at 189 Grant Avenue. He leaves a wife. He owned a plumbing business and much real estate.

Mrs. LAURA SHERMAN TAYLOR, who was formerly a well-known resident of Brooklyn, died on Friday night at her home in Closter, N. J. She was the widow of the Rev. J. B. Taylor and a daughter of the late Judge Alpheus Sherman. Before the civil war Mrs. Taylor had many trying experiences in the Western border lands, where her husband established a number of mission stations. While they were living in Kansas their home was destroyed by a great prairie fire, and they returned East. Mrs. Taylor was 84 years old.

NOVELLI TO COME BACK.

Will Have Sixty New Plays and a Larger Company.

The Shuberts announced yesterday that, through his managers, Paradossi & Consigli, they have made another contract with Ermete Novelli, the Italian actor, who closed his American season at the Lyric Theatre on Saturday evening. By the terms of this new contract, Signor Novelli will return to America next November and will remain here for a period of fifteen weeks. The managers say that Signor Novelli's initial engagement, which covered a term of six weeks—two in Boston and four in New York—was in the nature of an experiment.

Signor Novelli and his wife, Olga Giannini, will sail for Europe on the Auguste Victoria on Thursday. They will make a brief visit to Paris before returning to their home, in Venice, where they will appear with their own company early in May. Signor Novelli's company, with properties and scenery, will sail on the Lombardia on Wednesday, April 17, for Genoa.

When Novelli returns to America next Autumn his tour will extend from New York to New Orleans; thence to the City of Mexico and the South American cities. Four weeks will be spent at the Lyric Theatre in New York, and the remainder of his time will be divided betwsen Boston, Philadelphia, Washington, Brooklyn, Pittsburg, Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago, St. Louis, and New Orleans.

On his next visit to the United States Novelli, who offered seventeen plays during his late engagement, will be under contract to present no lesa than sixty plays out of a répertoire which is said to number more than 100. Two of those to attract particular attention will be "Macbeth" and "Nero." He has already performed Signor Casso'a "Nero" in Italy and South America, but has never yet been seen in the rôle of Macbeth. When Signor Novelli returns again he will bring a much larger company and a complete equipment of scenery built to meet the American firs regulations.

COMEDY AT THE PLAYGOERS.

Play by Club's President Produced at Last Night's Meeting.

The fourth meeting of the Theatregoers' Club of America, which was held at 200 West Seventy-second Street last evening, was attended by 700 men and women. At the first meeting, on Washington's Birthday, only about two hundred were present.

As President Towne of the club explained last night, the purpose of the organization is to show the work of amateur playwrights for the amusement of the audience. Managers can in this way also see the works of playwrights intelligently presented without the expense of having them experimentally produced.

At last night's meeting a farce comedy written by Mr. Towne, was presented. It was: "Hy Wits Outwitted." The persons who took part in the piece were: Dr. Leroy R. Stoddard, Alexander Howell, Eugene S. Gehrung, Mrs. Le Roy Stoddard, Miss Anna McIntyre, Miss Glenna Bonhotol, and Miss Loraine Wright.

PARIS TO SEE NETHERSOLE.

Arrangements Made for a Four Weeks' Season in June.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, April 14.—Arrangements were made this afternoon by Miss Olga Nethersole by which she will play a season in English drama in Paris this year. She signed a contract with an agent of G. Astruc & Co. of Paris, who will obtain a theatre for her for four weeks beginning about June 1. Her entire company will accompany her, and her present répertoire will be presented.

Miss Nethersole arranged to play in Paris last year, but an unusual number of popular plays there prevented her from obtaining a theatre.

VOLPE ORCHESTRA CONCERT.

Two Tone Poems by Edward MacDowell Played in Carnegie Hall.

Practically the last symphony concert of the seaaon was given yesterday afternoon by the Volpe Orchestra in Carnegie Hall. It was the third concert given by thia orchestra of young professionals this Winter and was better attended than the other two. The feature of the programme was the inclusion of two tone poems by Edward MacDowell. The tone poems were "Hamlet" and "Ophelia," seldom played in New York, but nevertheless interesting and beautiful. Neither of these pieceea received fair treatment at the hands of the orchestra, which is not a finished organization, nor Mr. Volpe, but the conductor deeerves much credit for reintroducing this music to the public.

Henrietta Michelson, a pianist, who made her New York reappearance, played Beethoven's G major concerto, which was a grateful relief after a Winter of Rubinstein. This young woman's touch and manner indicated more of a talent for the Saint-Saëns school. The other orchestral aumbers were Beethoven's Second Symphony and Goldmark's Overture, "In the Springtime."

N. Y. University Show on April 26.

The New York University's Senior "show" will be produced at the Carnegie Lyceum, April 26. Everything is ready for the play but final rehearsal.

MARK TWAIN TELLS OF BEING AN ACTOR

He Sees His Own "The Prince and the Pauper," and Relates Story of 22 Years Ago.

STAGE SPEECH CUT SHORT

He Managed to Narrate, However, That Once He Played Miles Hendon —Sees Educational Alliance Show.

Samuel L. Clemens—"Mark Twain"—in his white suit, sat in the audience that witnessed yesterday afternoon the Educational Alliance's performance of the play made from hie book, "The Prince and the Pauper," in the theatre of the Alliance Building in East Broadway. Beside him was William Dean Howells, and nearby Daniel Frohman, and Miss Clemens. The rest of the audience, eome 800 in all, was composed largely of the ohildren of the neighborhood.

After the second act, the curtain was raised to disclose Mr. Clemens in his white suit. He made a speech in which he referred to his own playing of the role of Miles Hendon, and complimented the Alliance on its theatre. He was about to tell a story which he said had been told by his friend Kate Douglas Wiggin, when from the players, looking out at him from the wings and entrances to the set, applause came. Mr. Clemens looked about, puzzled for a moment, when a young woman, entering by the left upper entrance into full view of the audience, went quite close to him and began to talk to him in an undertone.

"I must apologize," said Mr. Clemens. Again the young woman said something in a tone not audible to those in front.

Anxious to Tell His Story.

"I only want to tell this story and then I'll stop," Mr. Clemens said to her.

After he had told a story about a negro who had got a marriage license with the wrong woman's name in it, and had then decided to marry that woman rather than pay two dollars for a new license "as there wasn't two dollars' difference between the two women," he left the stage and the curtain was lowered.

The speech that had been interrupted began in a vein of family reminiscence.

"I have not enjoyed a play so much, so heartily, and so thoroughly," said the author, "since I played Miles Hendon twenty-two years ago. I used to play in this piece with my children, who, twenty-two years ago, were little youngsters. One of my daughters was the Prince, and a neighbor's daughter was the Pauper, and the children of other neighbors played other parts. But we never gave such a performance as we have seen here today. It would have been beyond us.

"My late wife was the dramatist and stage manager. Our coachman was the stage manager, second in command. We used to play it in this simple way, and the one who used to bring in the crown on a cushion—he waa a little fellow then—is now a clergyman way up high—six or seven feet high—and growing higher all of the time. We played it well, but not as well as you see it here, for you see it by practically trained professionals.

Never Remembered His Part.

"I was especially interested in the scene which we have just had, for Miles Hendon was my part. I did it as well as a person could who never remembered his part. The children all knew their parts. They did not mind if I did not know mine. I could thread a needle nearly as well as the player did whom you saw to-day. The words of my part I could supply on the spot. The words of the song that Miles Hendon sang here I did not catch. But I was great in that song."

Then Mr. Clemens hummed a bit of doggerel that the reporter made out as this:

There was a woman in her town,
She loved her husband well,
But another man just twice as well.

"How le that?" demanded Mr. Clemens. Then resuming:

"It was so fresh and enjoyable to make up a new set of words each time that I played the part.

"If I had a thousand citizens in front of me I would like to give them information, but you children already know all that I have found out about the Educational Alliance. It's like a man living within thirty miles of Vesuvius and never knowing about the volcano. It's like living for a lifetime in Buffalo, eghteen miles from Niagara, and never going to the Falls. So I had lived in New York and knew nothing about the Educational Alliance.

"This theatre is a part of the work and furnishes pure and clean plays. This theatre is an influence. Everything in the world is accomplished by influences which train and educate. When you get to be seventy-one and a half, as I am, you may think that your education is over, but it isn't.

Theatres Public Educators.

"If we had forty theatres of this kind in this city of 4,000,000, how they would educate and elevate! We should have a body of educated theatregoers.

"It would make better citizens, honest citizens. One of the best gifts a millionaire could make would be a theatre here and a theatre there. It would make of you a real Republic and bring about an educational level."

Then Mr. Clemens went on to quote from a speech of Kate Douglas Wiggin, when he was interrupted.

In the cast of "The Prince and the Pauper," the performance of which Mr. Clemens watched closely and frequently applauded, there were three young women—scarcely more than girls—who ahone. Rhoda Rosenblum played Tom Canty, the pauper boy who by force of circumstances changes his station with Prince Edward, with a touch of ingenuousness that was spontaneous.

The small part of Nan Canty, Tom's sister, undertaken by Sara E. Novick, a girl with humorous natural methods, was heartily applauded, while Helen H. Schwarlz, as the Prince, sketched well the range of her rôle.

PRAISE REAL ESTATE NUMBER.

Brokers and Operators Commend The Times Supplement.

Real estate men, including brokers, professional operators, and property owners generally, warmly commended the sixteen-page supplement in yesterday's TIMES devoted to their interests.

The articles dealing with the various parts of the city and its suburbs, many of them written by ths leading real estate experts in the different sections, constituted a most comprehensive review of the conditions now prevailing in the metropolitan real estate field.

Among the special features the discussion of the Torrens system of titled registration commanded attention. The bill providing for the introduction of the Torrens system in this State has aroused more interest than sny other bit of recent legislation affecting real estate. The analysis of this bill by Walter Lindner, solicitor of the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, was the first clear exposition of its legal features, beside being the first hearing of the title company's side of the question, and for these reasons was widely read in real estate circles.

The pictorial features of the supplement emphasized the important phases of the current market, showing the remarkable series of recent transactions involving properties of great value as well as indicating the progress made on the various bridges and tunnels around Manhattan.

Robert E. Dowling's concise review of the present situation, "that real estate owners during the next year will probably fare as well as the holders of other securities, and perhaps better," wus very generally indorsed.

In an article containing a few suggestions for the New York real estate fraternity Felix Isman of Philadelphia took occasion to upset several old notions. Mr. Isman says that nobody can know the ultimate value of New York's choice spots, and that real estate values generally do not increase gradually, but suddenly.

OLD MELODIES REVIVED BY JEWS

Mrs. Schechter Starts a Movement for Congregational Singing.

HELP FROM IMMIGRANTS

They Remembered Tunes Forgotten by Jews Here and Are the Mainstay of the Scheme.

The musical talent in the Jewish colony on the lower east side was intrusted some time ago with the task of re-establishing congregational singing in the synagogues and of reintroducing into the services many of the beautiful old Hebrew melodies which had fallen into disuse. It was demonstrated in the auditorium of the Hebrew Educational Alliance in East Broadway last night that the trust was well placed, and that the reformation had an excellent chance of success.

The idea was conceived by Mrs. Schechter, wife of Prof. Solomon Schechter of the Hebrew Theological Seminary. Last night Mrs. Schechter told how she happened to take it up.

"While in Cambridge, England, where we come from, I often attended the services in the Presbyterian Church there," said Mrs. Schechter. "I noticed that the congregation took great interest in the services, principally because it participated in the singing. I was greatly impressed because in my own church the congregation took no part in the singing, all that being done by a professional cantor.

"Thousands of years ago the congregations in the synagogues participated in the singing. That was in the temples told about in the books of the prophets. The congregation then had a leader. But gradually the congregation dropped out of the singing and the leader became a soloist. Thus the cantor was evolved. Today he does practically all the singing in the services, although in some synagogues he may be assisted by a choir.

"When I came to America I learned that in many of the wealthiest congregations in New York operatic selections and hymns borrowed from other faiths were sung. I found, too, that most of the singing was in English. I discovered also that some of the choirs were made up of Christians. This impressed me. We have some fine old melodies in the Jewish faith, and I wondered why these were not used instead of operatic selections and borrowed hymns. The Portuguese Jews alone retained these melodies in their service.

"Upon inquiry I found that the wealthy temples were not using the melodies because they did not know about them or could not get copies of them. The fact that the congregations no longer took any part in the singing, and that the old melodies were no longer used, led me to institute a reformation for the correction of these conditions. I realized, however, that the reformation must go from the town synagogues to the uptown synagogues. In the synagogues downtown many of the cantors have come directly from Europe, where the old melodies are used, while those in the uptown synagogues know nothing about them. So we have begun here, and are working hard."

The society which was to undertake the reformation was organized uptown at first, but proved a failure there. Then the task was intrusted to the musical talent in the Jewish colony downtown. The Choral Society for Ancient Hebrew Melodies was organized, and Isaac Rosenblatt was made its musical director. Its members included the daughters and sons of the poor families in the neighborhood of the Educational Alliance. Many of these were immigrants, and had sung the melodies in Europe, so they took readily to the work. Every Sunday they met in the rooms of the Educational Alliance and studied the old melodies. The Downtown Cantors' Association, with Henry Ruisotto as Director, and the Children's Orchestra of the Educational Alliance, with Sam Franko as conductor, co-operated with the new society.

Last night these societies showed what they had accomplished. Many interested persons, fathers, mothers, and friends from the colony, crowded into the auditorium of the Educational Alliance to look and listen. Around the entrance stood many others, who begged for tickets of admission. From uptown came Jacob H. Schiff and Mrs. Schiff, Mr. and Mrs. Felix M. Warburg, and many others to look and listen. Rich and poor alike went away saying it was "great" or "excellent." The musical talent had vindicated itself.

First the Choral Society sang. The Seou Scheorim (Psalm 24) Naumburg was given, and the applause was liberal. Then the Odecha Ki Anisoni (Psalm 118) Traditional was given, and the applause was deafening. Then the Children's Orchestra played Pergolesi's Sonata. One boy player about 7 years old aroused the greatest interest. He handled his violin with the ease of an expert, and comments about his work were plentiful.

Then the Cantors' Association, in silk hats and frock coats, sang the Kol Nedra, and that was enthusiastically received. So it went on through the following programme:

Hashivenu, (replacing the scroll in the ark,) the Rev. S. Jacobson and Choral Society; violin solo, Largo by Handel, Miss Emily Gresser; Ledovid Boruch, (Psalm 144,) Choral Society; Adon Olam, Cantors' Association; Im Fruehling, (Grieg,) Children's Orchestra; Passover melodies; Ki Lo Noch and Echod Mi Yodea, Choral Society, and Yigdal, Choral Society.

ZEPILLI SAVES CONCERT.

Called Suddenly to Sing Mme. Russ's Part, She Does it Creditably.

Alice Zeppilli came to the rescue at the Manhattan Opera House yesterday and saved the Sunday night concert from disaster. Mme. Russ, who was to have sung the soprano rôle in the first part of Verdi's "Requiem," which formed half of the programme, suddenly became boarse, and, as no other soprano in the company knew the part, Mme. Zeppilli volunteered. She spent the morning with the score and Mr. Campanini, and acquitted herself with great credit in the evening. The "Recordare" was omitted in the representation on account of the short time the soprano had to learn her part. Mr. Altchevsky sang the tenor rôle, which Mr. Bassi had done at the first presentation of the mass here; Mme. de Cisneros repeated the exquisite contralto work which counts for so much in this score, and Mr. Arimondi sang the bass part.

After the intermission, Mr. Campanini conducted Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, a difficult work to attempt with ao new an orchestra, which has so little time to rehearse. Nevertheless, Mr. Campanini impressed the stamp of authority on his reading, as he always does. Frances Lee sang the "Inflammatus" from Rossini's "Stabat Mater" for Mme. Russ. The other artists on the programme were Mme. Gilibert and Messrs. Gilibert and Ancona.

CAMPANINI OPERA NIGHT.

Manhattan Programme for Friday Night Is Again Changed.

The programme for next Friday evening at the Manhattan Opera House, which has been called "Campanin night," has been changed again, and instead of a performance of "Rigoletto," a mixed programme, consisting of acts from several operas, will be given, in which most of the singers associated with the success of the Opera House will appear.

The programme includes Act I. of Verdi's "Trovatore," with Mmes. Russ and Severina and Messrs. Dalmores and Sévellhac; a duet from Act I. of Donizetti's "La Favorita," with Mme. Bressler-Giannoll and Mr. Altchevsky; a duet from "Don Pasquale," with Mme. Zeppilli and Mr. Gianoli-Galletti; Act IV. of "Rigoletto," with Mmes. Pinkert and de Cisneros and Messrs. Bonci, Ancona, and Mugnoz; the prologue to Boito's "Mephistofele," with Mr. Arimondi, and Act I. of "I Pagliacci," with Mme. Donalda and Messrs. Bassi, Samaroo, Sévellhac, and Venturini.

Victor Herbert Concert at Daly's.

Victor Herbert and his orchestra gave a concert in Daly's Theatre last evening which pleased a large audience. Ada Chambers, soprano, was the soloist, and she sang Delibes's "Arioso." Ronald's "Evening," and Herbert's "If love were what the rose is." The orchestra played several Herbert numbers, the overture to "Fledermaus," and other selections.

WAND OF SPRING TOUCHES THE PARK

Big Sunday Turnout Notes Emerald Signs of a Belated Season.

BOYS INVADE THE MEADOWS

A Snow-White Angora Kid Is a New Arrival at the Zoo—Crowds View Animals.

The flowers that bloom in the Spring were not to be seen in Central Park yesterday, but the populace took comfort from a few other visible signs of the belated season. In protected corners little thickets of bramble were covered with red berries and white blossoms. Trees showed a faint touch of green, just enough to set the robins and sparrows fluttering and piping with joy.

The birds and animals in the Zoo showed by their restlessness that they, too, knew that Winter was losing its clutch on the earth, and the largest throng of visitors of the year was out for an airing.

A red flag waving over the common warned small boys that the turf was still too soft for games, even should the Park ordinances allow them on Sunday. But many of the bolder spirits simply moved on to a stretch of meadow beyond the tennis courts, near the East Ninety-seventh Street entrance, and, hatless and coatless, played to their hearts' content.

The Zoo was the centre of attraction. Special policemen were detailed there to keep the fine of sightseers moving. The animals were unusually restless. The black leopards, usually to be seen asleep in a corner of their cages, were pacing up and down, purring loudly their satisfaction at the close of Winter.

A little snow-white Angora kid was a new arrival yesterday. In the pen set apart for the aoudads, or African mountain goats, twins a few days old were disporting themselves. They have already learned to climb the heap of stones in the pen. A tiny zebu calf and a tiny spotted axis deer are other additions of a week to the membership of the Zoo family.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION — THE MARKETS OF EUROPE

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION.

Decline in Prices the Response to Varied Developments.

Slowly declining prices on the Stock Exchange last week was the response which the security markets offered to the week's varied and somewhat conflicting developments. Most interesting of these was the reduction in the Bank of England's discount rate from 5 per cent. to 4½ per cent., a further decline in interest rates at this centre accompanied by a slight recession in foreign exchange rates, and the publication of a favorable Government crop report, all of which were of favorable import, while the unfavorable developments, some of them of minor importance, included the suggestion that the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul might abandon, at least temporarily, the construction of its Pacific Coast extension, a reduction in the price of copper on the local metal Exchange, a slight falling off in the average daily production of pig iron in March, and the appearance of the first of the season's crop "scares."

Inasmuch as monetary stringency growing out of excessive demands upon the capital of the country has come to be regarded as one of the fundamental causes of the disturbances through which the security market has recently passed, it would appear that the further easing of interest rates this past week might reasonably have been expected to have outweighed other developments of this week and to be reflected in the stock market by firmness, if not by actual strength. The contrary, however, was the case, and, coincidentally with sagging prices, the volume of transactions declined to the lowest level in several weeks. Too much significance ought not, perhaps, be attached to day to day movements in a market in which the operations were so largely of a professional character as those of last week, but it cannot be doubted that in many quarters the belief is held that the present ease in money in New York reflects temporary conditions at this centre, and cannot safely be taken as proof that the markets have reached the beginning of a period of sustained ease in money. The continuance of business on an enormous scale, despite such recessions as have occurred in certain limited circles is in itself a warning against the entertainment of hopes that money may be expected to continue indefinitely at the rates which are now quoted in this market.

The rapid expansion in loans during the past three weeks and more particularly the increase of nearly $37,000,000 in loans reported last week has brought the loan account to the highest level within a year. The significance of this fact is best realized when considered in connection with the recent decline in stock market values. A period of liquidation in the stock market had been hoped for in some quarters as a means of reducing the very large volume of loans shown by the New York City banks. The market has passed through such a period of liquidation or at all events of declining prices, yet the loan account is larger to-day than it was before the decline began. This is another fact that lessens the feeling of security that otherwise might be predicated on the present ease in the New York money market.

While the reduction in the English Bank rate may be taken as an indication of a general movement toward lower interest rates, it must be recalled that the recession in rates here which followed the large influx of cash resulting from the various relief measures adopted by the Secretary of the Treasury carried rates in New York considerably below what might be considered a normal level, in view of monetary conditions abroad. The large increase in the cash holdings of the banks here and the coincident decline of time money from above 6 per cent. to 4¼ per cent., while the English Bank rate still stood at 5 per cent., so altered the relations of this market to those abroad that from the gold-import point the foreign exchange market advanced rapidly almost to the gold-export point. Had the English Bank rate been maintained at 5 per cent. it seemed to be only a question of a short time when this market, which two weeks ago engaged a large amount of gold in London, would be exporting gold to that city. The equilibrium between this and the foreign markets was to a considerable extent restored by the reduction in the English rate, but that the reduction did no more than this is indicated by the fact that the establishment of the new rate was reflected by only a very slight decline in sterling exchange rates in New York.

It was inevitable that the publication of the Government's crop report on Thursday last should be followed by the first predictions of the season that the crops were suffering severe damage. Such reports appear almost as regularly as the crop reports themselves and usually, as was the case this past week, have reference to supposed damage to the crop between the date of publication of the report and the first of the month as of which date the reports are compiled. In the absence of any clear proof, however, that the crops have suffered material impairment there is no reason why last Thursday's report should not be accepted as one of great promise. Estimates of the probable yield of Winter wheat this year based on the acreage of 31,665,000 reported in December and on the 89.9 condition reported by the Government as of April 1, indicate a Winter wheat crop this year of 493,974,000 bushels. While this is 10,500,000 bushels under the indicated yield in December last it is more than 20,000,000 bushels in excess of the indicated yield in April, 1906, and is slightly in excess of the actual crop of last year, which amounted to 492,388,000 bushels. These figures are most favorable. On one hand, as is shown by last year's experience, improvement may take place between this date and the harvesting of the crop, and on the other hand, last year's results were so good that some little falling off in this year's crop would not be in any sense disastrous.

Admissions by representatives of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul that the road was considering the postponement of work on its Pacific Coast extension were sufficiently specific this past week to prepare the financial community for a possible announcement that the construction of its 1,500 miles of new road for the building of which the St. Paul stockholders have already provided $75,000,000 will be allowed to go over until some indefinite time in the future. President Earling of the St. Paul was quoted during the week as attributing the desire of the management to postpone the construction of the new line to the antagonistic legislation enacted by many of the Western State Legislatures. It was recalled that when the Erie Railroad announced the temporary abandonment of most of its improvement work in New York State the probability of the enactment of the Public Utilities bill was pointed to as the reason for this move on the part of the Erie management. In both cases it would appear that pending legislation was rather an excuse for than the explanation of the attitude of the railroad management. In the Erie's case the abandonment of the work can fairly be said to have been due simply to lack of funds, while the desire of the St. Paul management to put off the work on its extension to the Pacific Coast is probably prompted chiefly by the belief that changes now in progress in economic conditions will enable the road a little later to do the work at less cost. The problem, however, is one which is many sided, and in the absence of more definite information than has yet been had the most generally accepted view is likely to be that the St. Paul is too far committed to the Pacific Coast undertaking and has invested too much money in the venture to postpone its completion advantageously. A sale of the St. Paul's Pacific Coast extension to some other road or roads coincidentally with a readjustment of the relations with the railroads of the Northwest has been suggested, but thus far there is no official information that the adoption of such a course is in contemplation.

The prospect of a reorganization of the Union Pacific Executive Committee with the purpose of dividing the responsibilities which the Union Pacific Directors have allowed President E. H. Harriman to assume individually holds promise of the early recognition on the part of the management of the property of the need of conforming its methods more closely to standards which have the support of public approval. Mr. Harriman himself has characterized the proposal as a good one, but the public will look elsewhere than to Mr. Harriman for initiative in a movement which must needs deprive him of a large part of his personal power in Union Pacific affairs, substituting for it the rule of a committee which in fact as well as in name would be subject directly to the full Board of Directors and ultimately to the stockholders of the road as a whole.

LONDON DISCOUNT LOWER.

Market Confident That the Bank Rate Will Soon Be 4 Per Cent.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

LONDON, April 14.—The Times in its financial supplement to-morrow will say:

"Discount rates have come down to 3½ per cent., so that the market is evidently very confident that the Bank rate will shortly be 4 per cent. It seems likely enough, but after that it would take a bold prophet to see his way clearly. With a Bank rate of 4 per cent., 3½ per cent. seems quite low enough for the market, for the slightest tremor would soon send the outside rate up toward the official level. For nothing must be allowed to interfere with the Bank's task of making itself strong, and amply strong, while the present conditions last.

"After all, all that has happened is that New York exchange has gone up and time money is now plentifully offered in the United States. This is a very important improvement in the position, so important that it makes on the surface all the difference between apprehension and confidence. But it does not determine what shall happen in the future.

"A huge lump has been knocked off the aggregate value of American securities. There is a $2,000,000,000 reduction in their market value, some say, and this has very appreciably lightened the burden to be borne by the international monetary fabric. Nevertheless, behind all this lie the facts that trade shows little sign of slackening, and that American railroads are still hungry for money if only they dared open their mouths. If they are encouraged they will open them again as widely as ever."

LITTLE BUSINESS IN BERLIN.

No Confidence That the Improvement Is More Than Temporary.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

BERLIN, April 14.—The slight improvement in the tone of the Boerse manifested last week was due to the betterment of the conditions of the international money market. Business, however, was not more active.

There was a marked disinclination apparent in all departments to engage in transactions of any kind. The professional speculators and general public were so badly hurt in the March panic that they were not prepared to take on new commitments.

Moreover there apparently was no confidence that the improvement of the Boerse would be more than temporary. The industrial situation was viewed with anxiety. It was apprehended that unfavorable factors in the German financial status would sooner or later cause a reaction. Thus the industrial stock market was so affected that no branch was able to obtain attention for long. The market for American stocks was lifeless.

The Imperial Bank's status continues to be very unsatisfactory, so there is no talk of an immediate reduction in the 6 per cent. rate. No definite decision has been made as to how the financial requirements of the German Empire will be met. They are generally behind. However, a 4 per cent. loan of 300,000,000 marks will be issued.

RIO TINTOS FALL IN PARIS.

A General Decline Follows — South Africans Weaker.

LONDON TIMES—NEW YORK TIMES.
Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

PARIS, April 14.—The improvement in the monetary situation abroad, while creating a favorable impression here, has not stimulated much activity in trading, which remains dull and somewhat heavy.

The further decline in copper which was cabled from New York on Thursday was reflected in Rio Tintos, which broke sharply. This seemed to unsettle everything, and a general decline followed.

French rentes gave way a quarter of a point and foreign Government stocks lost a portion of their recent advance. Spanish railroads yielded on the higher rate of exchange in Madrid. Bank shares were steady. South African gold mines were weaker, especially the De Beers issues.

APRIL CROP REPORT.

Promise of a Winter Wheat Crop as Large as That in 1906—Record in Other Years.

Predictions of serious damage to the Winter wheat crop followed closely upon the publication of the April crop report of the Department of Agriculture. Were these predictions to be accepted at their face value it would appear that more damage had been done to the crop between April 1 and April 10 than had been suffered between the December and the April Government reports. The cereal markets showed firmness and prices rose on these rumors, but the extent of the advance in wheat indicated clearly that the market was inclined to ignore most of these rumors. Proof of this was found in the fact that a report on Saturday that one-third of the Kansas wheat crop had been destroyed was accompanied by an advance of only half a cent in the Chicago price of wheat, and even this gain was lost in the later trading.

The April crop report itself was highly favorable. While it showed an indicated crop of about 10,000,000 bushels smaller than the yield indicated in December, the promise was still for a crop as large as the actual yield last year. Compared with the showing in April, 1906, the indicated yield this month is larger by over 20,000,000 bushels, and, as was shown in the April report, improvement sometimes occurs after this date.

Interest attaches to a comparison of the December and April indications, with the actual yield as shown in the subsequent reports of the Government. The table below shows the actual yield of Winter wheat in each of the past six years, compared with the yields indicated by the December and April reports:

	December Indication. Bushels.	April Indication. Bushels.	Actual Yield. Bushels.
1907	503,475,000	493,974,000	.....
1906	495,188,000	473,249,000	492,888,000
1905	448,000,000	479,787,000	424,400,000
1904	492,800,000	423,000,000	332,935,000
1903	671,269,000	589,411,000	380,867,000
1902	457,890,000	*341,498,000	411,788,000
1901	484,512,000	437,258,000	458,834,000

*May report.

While these figures indicate a wide variation between the April estimated yield and the actual crops they afford no ground for argument that the final returns may be counted upon to make a less favorable showing than the estimates based on the April reports.

STEEL TRADE POSITION.

Large Purchase of Pig Iron at $21 at Pittsburg—Mills Still Crowded with Orders.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 14.—The sale on Thursday last of 192,000 tons of pig iron at $21 a ton for delivery in the second quarter is one of the most important transactions that has taken place in the iron market for some time. This was a reduction of $1 a ton from the level at which the previous large sales had been made, but the view is expressed here that transactions on such a large scale are likely to have absorbed the available supply of free pig iron, and that smaller consumers who have been holding off for lower prices can hardly expect to fill their needs on the same advantageous terms. Thus, though the decline which they have been looking for has actually occurred, it is thought that it will do the small consumers relatively little good, since the larger consumers have bought so freely at the lower price that the quotation is likely to be again advanced.

For some days a price of $21 had been made on second half iron, but the smaller buyers thought the price would go still lower. The closing of the big contracts, however, at the rate of $21 would tend to show that there is little hope now for a lower rate. It is not unreasonable to expect that the rate of $22 which was told the buyers some time ago will prevail for second half iron, now that the larger orders have been disposed of.

Activity continues in the iron and steel business. The mills are more than filled. The steel bar mills report that they have their orders booked for eight months ahead, and they will make no promises to deliver any new orders before the expiration of that time. The iron bar people say they will not attempt anything under four months, as they are so crowded with orders that they cannot hope to catch up before that time. A heavy tonnage in rails was booked during the week by the Carnegie Company. It is rumored that the books for 1908 will be opened May 1

BOSTON COPPER GOSSIP.

Many Companies Preparing to Increase Output—Copper Market Still Strong.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, April 14.—No change is to be recorded in the copper situation. The market for the metal continues strong, while that for shares is soft, dominated by Wall Street's influence. News from the camps is scarce, every one being busy and shipments being steady.

Never in the history of the Calumet and Hecla smelting plant has the production been so large as at present, and no copper is being stored.

The reported sale of the Phenix stamp mill to the Keweenaw Company is denied by the latter.

From the lake comes news that the Atlantic shaft is now down about thirty feet on the Baltic lode. Work on the No. 2 shaft at Allouez is progressing so rapidly that it is thought that within a year the mine's production will be doubled.

Great activity is reported from the Mass Consolidated and the Winona mines. The former expects to double production as soon as the Keweenaw Bay stamp mill is completed, which will be within a week or so.

Exceptionally good showing is reported from Isle Royale's new No. 6 shaft, and No. 5 shaft is also opening better ground. No. 4 shaft is soon to be opened on the same lode with the others. The first shipment of copper has been made by the Lake Copper Company from its mine in Ontonagon County, formerly the Belt mine.

East Butte's annual report shows earnings of about $30,000 per month and cash in treasury $1,060,000.

Old Dominion has made a contract with the American Metal Company for the sale of its copper on terms said to be more advantageous than those of the present contract, which will expire in August.

President Abercrombie of Majestic, sent word to Boston last week that more ore is in sight than ever before, and that shipments will soon be doubled. They are now at the rate of 500 tons per month.

Monthly earnings of the New England & Clifton Company, of which E. Rollins Morse is President, are said to be about $25,000.

The management of the Daly-West Company sends word of a strike of high-grade ore on the 1,500-foot level, the extent of which is yet to be ascertained. At least two and one-half feet of shipping ore shows in the face.

The Cactus mine is making a first-class showing this month. The high-grade ore, it is said, will pay all the expenses for the month.

COPPER DISCREPANCIES.

Notwithstanding the protests of the big copper-selling companies that there has been no shading in the prices of copper metal, which is held at 26¼ cents per pound for electrolytic and 25¼ cents per pound for lake by the United Metals Selling Company, which markets the output of the Amalgamated Copper Company and a number of the large Lake Superior mines, and at 26 cents by the Calumet and Hecla interests, it is possible to buy the metal at the lower prices quoted by the New York Metal Exchange. A canvass of the largest wholesale metal dealers who have membership in the much-criticised Metal Exchange last week showed that these concerns are entirely willing to back up the asked prices with real metal if buyers should appear. These quotations at the close of the market on Friday were:

	Friday. Bid.	Asked.
Lake	24.00	25.00
Electrolytic	23.50	24.50
Castings	22.50	23.00

By which it will be seen that it is possible to buy lake copper in considerable quantity—nothing less than 100,000 pounds counts as a wholesale order—at from three-quarters of a cent to 1 cent per pound less than is quoted by the big sellers. The Metal Exchange dealers admit, however, that there have been no sales since the marked decline in prices began about ten days ago. This state of affairs is partly to be explained by the fact that the leading consumers have already supplied their wants up to the 1st of July, and by the extension of the same feeling of uncertainty which has prevailed in the stock market for the past few weeks to the metal market, which has an important speculative side.

One of the large metal dealers on the New York Metal Exchange makes the following explanation of the situation:

"Some of the principal producers and selling agencies being well sold ahead for two or three months, are quoting unchanged prices—i. e., for lake, from 25¼c to 26c, and for electrolytic a price of 25¼c, delivered, thirty days, which is on a parity of 25c cash, free on board, New York. There is no wholesale business done by these selling agencies at present, just as there is little, if any, important business done just now by any other concern. The quotations on the New York Metal Exchange may or may not fairly represent the present market, which is hard to quote owing to the absence of buyers. The asking prices represent, however, the quotations at which reasonably large quantities of copper can be purchased in this market, while the list price is supposed to give an indication of the present attitude of buyers whose bids are far away from sellers' asking price.

"Whether the quotations given by some of the large selling companies will have to be changed later on is an open question, and it will depend on the attitude of the consuming trade whether a lower level of prices is necessary to perfect large sales."

Another element in the metal market which cannot be overlooked is the decline in copper in London. At the low price of £91 15s. per ton for standard copper in the London market, it was possible to buy this low grade of metal, which is little better than furnace material, pay all charges of transportation, and refine it into the castings grade and sell it in this market at a handsome profit. The entire operation of trans-shipping and refining is a matter of about ten weeks' time, and it is a fact that that a larger number of the copper warrants which have been pressed for sale in London recently have been purchased by New York metal dealers, who are counting on getting their profits before the prices here go much lower. Even at Friday's closing price in London of £95 15s., it is possible to buy the metal for refining in New York at a considerable profit at the ruling prices.

While there has been severe criticism of the Metal Exchange quotations in some quarters as fictitious, it will be recalled that in 1901, just before the break in copper came, a somewhat similar situation prevailed here and in London in respect to the divergence of quotations on the Exchanges and among the big selling companies. The leading producers had been holding copper at 17 cents per pound for months, in the face of continual recessions on the New York Metal Exchange and in the London market. In the end it was the big selling companies that had to readjust prices.

TOLD ROUND THE TICKER.

J. V. McNEAL, Treasurer of the Baltimore & Ohio Railroad Company, was discussing the money stringency a few days ago and drawing attention to the immense amount of our capital that is lost to business through the practice of hoarding, especially among the working class of foreigners and the agricultural population. He told of a workman who was killed by a locomotive near Ashland on a few weeks ago, who, as he was dragged along on the pilot, scattered some $5,500 over a mile of roadbed. With similar cases constantly coming into the police reports, in these prosperous times, of workingmen found dead or hurt with large sums in cash about them, Mr. McNeal thinks it is easy to understand that out of the $890,000,000 in gold coined in this country during the last ten years, the National banks and the Treasury hold but a little more than one-third as much as the pockets of the people. Mr. McNeal is an advocate of a system of savings banks similar to the postal banks of the Continent.

E. S. MENDELS, one of the old guard of Curb brokers, who is the proctor, in fact, as well as the dean by courtesy, of the outside market, has added to the rules which the traders in the Broad Street inclosure accept by common consent for their government, the requirement that all of the stocks traded in must be registered at his office. Here a record will be filed, giving as complete data as are obtainable of the property represented by the stock, the location of its transfer agent, etc. While no censorship is exercised over the securities registered, this move is a concession to the growing sentiment that some measure of relief is needed from the conditions that have allowed swindlers to use the Curb as a means of establishing "quotations" on which to sell their fake wares.

DAVID WILLCOX, who retired last week from the Presidency of the Delaware & Hudson Company, is one of the few railroad Presidents who came to the executive headship of a large system through the law. The anthracite roads found themselves in a legally embarrassing position early in the movement which has lately centred in the Inter-State Commerce Commission's examination of the Harriman lines, and it was, perhaps, for this reason that Mr. Willcox was chosen. He has always been the spokesman, not only for his own road, but practically for the entire anthracite industry.

S. V. WHITE, whose recent retirement from the Produce Exchange a few days ago brought out reminiscences of his long career as a market operator, has a greater claim to fame than his friends recollected in their stories of "Deacon" White's days on 'Change. It will be news to many of the newer generation in the Street that Mr. White is a member of the Supreme Court bar, and has served a term in Congress.

DR. I. DE V. WARNER of Bridgeport, one of the Directors of the New York, New Haven & Hartford Railroad, is fond on occasion of enlivening the recesses in the deliberations of the New Haven Board by some humorous story suggested, directly or remotely, by the business in hand. It is said that at one of the recent sessions of the board, at which the acquisition by the New Haven Railroad of the Boston & Philadelphia Steamship Company was under discussion, Dr. Warner told this story, prompted by a discussion of the advantage of having a direct steamship connection with Philadelphia:

A Bostonian and Philadelphian who fell together on a railroad trip passed part of the time consumed by the journey in discussing the relative merits of their two cities. The Bostonian had been holding his point against the Philadelphian, when the latter, as if in a last effort to make a point in favor of his birthplace, remarked:

"Well, any way, Boston isn't laid out as well as Philadelphia."

Without a moment's hesitation, the Bostonian replied:

"Perhaps it will be by the time it is dead as long."

STOCKHOLDERS INCREASE.

Many Names Added to Lists of Shareholders in St. Paul and Other Roads.

Many new names have been added to the list of stockholders of railroad and other corporations as a result of the buying of stock by investors during the recent decline in prices. Figures obtained last week furnish some concrete examples of this sort of buying. An officer of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul stated the other day that there are now 400 more stockholders in that road than there were in December, not counting any increase in the holders of stock represented by the warrants for the new common and preferred stock that was offered to shareholders in December last. The St. Paul now has about 6,000 stockholders.

Within the past week the Missouri, Kansas & Texas has added to its list of stockholders 205 names, to which there have been credited all told 4,900 shares of stock, an average of a little over eighteen shares apiece. Buying of stock in this way is nearly always one of the results of break in prices such as occurred last month. On the other hand, it frequently happens in the case of prolonged periods of liquidation due to depression in business that the list of stockholders in railroad and other corporation contracts as smaller holders sell out to raise funds, the stock they sell passing, for the most part, into the hands of larger holders.

COMPETITION IN GERMAN IRON

Increased Output Disrupts German Trust Which Will Dissolve in June.

The enormous increase in the output of pig iron in Germany last year is finding its a natural sequence in a split in the Siegen Pig Iron Syndicate, which has controlled the German supply of spiegeleisen. In 1906 the pig iron output of Germany was 12,478,000 tons, an advance of nearly 1,500,000 tons over the production of the previous year. This gain of 13.5 per cent. compares with our own increase of only 10 per cent. in output in a year, which has never been equaled for the activity of the furnaces in this country, and brings the German production of the raw material up to nearly one-half of our own output of 25,307,191 tons.

While little has yet been heard of a slowing up in the industrial activity in the empire, which last year was competing with our manufacturers for the surplus iron of England, it is evident that the increase in spiegeleisen production has been too rapid for the manufacturers to absorb. It would seem from the meagre accounts that have come to this country of the quarrel which is to result in the dissolution of the syndicate in June that the greater part of the increased production is to be credited to one concern alone. Thus the Gelaweider Eisenwerke has greatly enlarged its capacity, and demands the allotment of about one-half of the German consumption as its share of the market. The split is the result of the refusal of the other syndicate members to concede this proportion. The natural result expected from the disruption of the German spiegeleisen trust is lower prices for that commodity in the near future.

RAILROADS OWNED BY PUBLIC.

There are fifty-five railroads reported by the Interstate Commerce Commission as having more than 1,000 stockholders. Of these roads, the Pennsylvania has about 44,000 stockholders, the Atchison 18,000, the Union Pacific 15,000, the New Haven 11,000, and the New York Central 10,000. The total number of stockholders of the fifty-five roads is about 350,000. It would thus appear that the railroads are owned quite largely by the public.

CIRCULATION REDUCED.

The Aldrich bill, approved March 4, 1907, has resulted in reducing the outstanding circulation of National banks secured by bonds during March to the extent of $2,104,310, or from $549,737,373 to $547,633,063.

Commerce with American Countries.

The Bureau of Statistics of Commerce and Labor reports that during the fiscal year 1906 the foreign commerce of the United States aggregated $2,970,000,000. Of this sum the trade with American countries amounted to $759,000,000, or 26 per cent. of the total. Of the exports, valued at $1,744,000,000, $383,000,000, or 22 per cent., went to American countries, while of the imports, valued at $1,227,000,000, $376,000,000, or 31 per cent., came from American countries.

In the preparation of securities a perfect organization for the highest grade of work is a matter of years.

In our case, more than a hundred.

It has been a gradual growth in one direction—toward the best. Dexterity doesn't come from occasional endeavor, but from repetition.

The danger of trusting the ordinary printer with fine work is the risk of expecting him to prove skillful in what he does but seldom.

Foreign Travel

The Guaranty Trust Company issues travellers' letters of credit and travellers' cheques available in all parts of the world. A special telegraphic code for the use of travellers is provided. The London Office, conveniently situated near the Bank of England, receives and forwards travelers' mail and is thoroughly equipped to transact any business of the Company.

The Guaranty Trust Company's enormous business in foreign exchange and commercial credits—nearly one thousand million dollars in 1906—has made its name thoroughly familiar in Great Britain and on the Continent and should recommend its letters of credit to intending travellers.

The Guaranty Trust Company desires to increase the volume of its traveller's credits and invites correspondence upon the subject.

RETRENCHMENT BY RAILROADS

Extent to Which Improvement Work Will Be Postponed May Exceed $400,000,000.

NEW ST. PAUL LINE MAY WAIT

Lines West of Chicago Have Put Off Expenditures Totaling $180,000,000.

The railroads running west from Chicago, as a result of the retrenchment policy adopted by the great railroad systems, will spend this year $150,000,000 to $180,000,000 less than they had planned to spend, according to the President of one of the most important of these lines, who was in this city last week. These figures give some idea of the extent to which the railroads' policy of going slow is likely to affect both the labor market and the earnings of the industrial concerns that supply most of the material used in the construction and the improvement of railroads.

Reports from the West make it clear that already there has been a marked falling off in the demand for labor by the railroads and that the wages offered for railroad building work have fallen off. Men as well qualified to speak on the subject as President James J. Hill of the Great Northern have placed themselves on record as predicting that many men will be thrown out of employment during the next twelve months, and the prediction seems to be coming true already. So far there has been little sign of any falling off in business outside of this retrenchment by the railroads, but it cannot be doubted that such retrenchment in itself will have important effect upon the business of the country.

To what extent this retrenchment is likely to be carried is problematical. This past week brought the suggestion that the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul, which already has postponed any further improvement work on its present line, was likely to abandon, temporarily at least, the construction of its Pacific Coast extension. If the St. Paul decides on this step, the aggregate of the work postponed by the roads running west from Chicago would have to be increased by at least $75,000,000. This added to the estimate already referred to would make a total of $250,000,000 of new work that has been or may be postponed on the lines west of Chicago. While the Eastern lines may not have put off an equally large amount of work, they are known to have decided to postpone many expenditures that were in contemplation, and in the aggregate these must represent a huge sum. The Pennsylvania Railroad alone will spend many millions less this year than it would have spent had its retrenchment policy not been decided upon, and the smaller roads in the East will add largely to the total work postponed. The Erie has put off work that was to have cost $12,000,000 or more, and the New Haven and many other lines, without announcing the amount of work that they have postponed, have publicly stated that no new work would be undertaken this year that could advantageously be put off.

It is not extravagant, therefore, to estimate that the retrenchment policy of the railroads will cause a shrinkage this year of not less than $350,000,000 to $400,000,000 in expenditures for improvements even if the St. Paul extension is not abandoned. The postponement of work by the railroads on such a scale as this means much to many industries as well as to a large body of laborers. It is true that the steel companies and the railroad equipment companies, up to the present have not felt the effects of this retrenchment, but they are bound to feel it in the near future.

The railroads have decided upon retrenchment, not because of any present falling off in business, but because it became well-nigh impossible to obtain further capital except at prohibitive rates. This fact, coupled with discontent at the enactment of anti-railroad laws by many Legislatures, lies at the bottom of the present policy of the railroads in this matter of improvements. It thus happens that the railroads are beginning to cut down expenses, although they are still taxed to this utmost to meet the demands of traffic. Owing to this pressure of traffic it has been supposed that orders for new equipment already placed by the railroads would be left undisturbed. Within the past few days, however, it has been rumored that some large orders for railroad equipment have been canceled, and while these reports have met with denials, they seem to gain some confirmation from the statement made last week by the head of one of the large railroad systems that he had been offered a large amount of equipment previously ordered by another road. Another indication that there has been some let-up in the activity of the car manufacturing companies is found in the statement made by an official of the Great Northern that cars ordered by that road are to be delivered six weeks ahead of the time originally set by the manufacturer.

In addition to the retrenchment represented by the postponement of improvement work, many of the railroads are said to have in contemplation further curtailment of expenses, to be brought about by the withdrawal of a certain number of trains and by the running of others at reduced speed. So far, however, the movements in this direction has been confined principally to predictions which have been prompted, apparently, by a desire to impress upon communities in various sections of the country that the rate-regulation laws passed by the States will result in much inconvenience to the public. It still remains to be seen how far the railroads will undertake to inconvenience the public in retaliation of reduction in passenger rates. If past experience may be taken as a guide, most railroads will look to increased business for offsets to reduced rates, rather than to a reduction in train service.

A NEW RAILROAD OFFICIAL.

Several Western railroads, including the Burlington, have employed officials to travel over their lines and the roads of competitors to see how the public is treated. They buy their tickets at the stations, travel in day coaches, see how the train is handled, and note how station agents and other railroad officials handle the people.

PENNSYLVANIA'S MILEAGE.

The Pennsylvania now operates 10,977 miles of line, and has 23,109 miles of track. It operates 4.88 per cent. of the total mileage, and 7.2 per cent. of the total trackage of the country. During the last six years, the Pennsylvania increased the length of its lines 359 miles, building 3,631 miles of track, 1,803 miles of which is in sidings and 1,409 miles built to relieve congested points. It now has a four-track line almost the entire distance between New York and Pittsburg. The system's lines pase through fourteen States, but the following nine States contain the major part:

Pennsylvania, 4,048 miles; Ohio, 1,829 miles; Indiana, 1,495 miles; New York, 814 miles; New Jersey, 766 miles; Illinois, 635 miles; Maryland, 548 miles; Michigan, 433 miles, and Delaware, 273 miles.

PUBLIC NOTICES.

NEW YORK SUPREME COURT.
Third Judicial District,
Ulster County.
ASHOKAN RESERVOIR.
Section No. 4.

NOTICE OF APPLICATION FOR THE APPOINTMENT OF COMMISSIONERS OF APPRAISAL.

Public notice is hereby given that it is the intention of the Corporation Counsel of the City of New York to make application to the Supreme Court of the State of New York for the appointment of Commissioners of Appraisal under Chapter 724 of the Laws of 1905, as amended. Such application will be made at a Special Term of the Supreme Court to be held in and for the Third Judicial District, AT THE COURT HOUSE, IN THE CITY OF KINGSTON, ULSTER COUNTY, N. Y., ON MAY 15TH, 1907, AT 10 O'CLOCK in the forenoon of that day, or as soon thereafter as counsel can be heard. The object of such application is to obtain an order of the court appointing three disinterested and competent freeholders, one of whom shall reside in the County of New York, and at least one of whom shall reside in the county where the real estate hereinafter described is situated, to act as Commissioners of Appraisal under said act, and discharge all the duties conferred by the said law and the acts amendatory thereof, upon such Commissioners of Appraisal, for the purpose of providing an additional supply of pure and wholesome water for the City of New York.

The real estate to be acquired herein is situated in the Town of Olive, and is to be acquired in fee for the purpose of furnishing an additional supply of pure and wholesome water to the City of New York.

The following is a statement of the boundaries of the lands to be acquired herein, with a reference to the date and place of filing of the map.

All the parcels herein described are to be acquired in foe and are colored pink on the map hereinafter referred to.

All those certain pieces or parcels of real estate situated in the Town of Olive, County of Ulster, and State of New York, known on a map entitled "Reservoir Department, Section No. 4. Board of Water Supply of the City of New York. Map of real estate, situated in the Town of Olive, County of Ulster, and State of New York, to be acquired by The City of New York under the provisions of Chapter 724 of the Laws of 1905, as amended, for the construction of Ashokan Reservoir and appurtenances, in the vicinity of Olive City and Brodbead," which map was filed in the office of the County Clerk of the County of Ulster, at Kingston, New York, on the 4th day of March, 1907, and is bounded and described as follows:

Beginning at the junction of the centre lines of the Tongore and Samsonville Roads, said point being the southeast corner of parcel No. 145, and running thence along the centre line of the said Samsonville Road and the southerly line of said parcel No. 145, S. 67° 18' W. 165.4 feet to the southeast corner of parcel No. 146; EX-SEC. SHAW'S OPINIONS.

Deposits of Custom Receipts No Relief to Market—Panic Not Unmixed Evil—Comments on Socialism and Democracy.

Leslie M. Shaw, who recently resigned as Secretary of the Treasury to become President of the Carnegie Trust Company of New York City, has given to THE TIMES his views on the Aldrich law, the recent panic, and Socialistic tendencies in the folowing statement:

That provision of the Aldrich law authorizing deposits of customs receipts in the National banks is of no real help to the money market.

More than sufficient internal revenue receipts have always been available for such purposes. During the past five years the total internal revenue receipts amounted to $750,000,000—a much greater sum than was necessary for the banks, as the deposits have not averaged over $100,000,000 in many years.

Formerly, internal revenue and customs receipts were comuined in the Treasury. But beginning with Secretary Shaw's administration, the two were kept separate. By paying the Government expenses out of customs, the internal revenue receipts were always available in toto for the banks. Under the old plan former Secretaries usually had available only the daily receipts derived from internal revenues, averaging $500,000, so that it would have taken them forty days to have furnished the $20,000,000 which Secretary Shaw brought in one day to the relief of the market.

The combination of customs revenue and internal revenue receipts under the Aldrich law is simply a return to old methods. The only improvement is that under its provisions the Secretary of the Treasury does not need to make any distinction between customs receipts and internal revenue. But the cup was already full. The internal revenue receipts alone have been more than sufficient to meet the needs of the banks. Speaking of the recent panic ex-Secretary Shaw said:

"The recent panic—the first since 1901—was not an unmixed evil. We have had a little more freight than the roads could satisfactorily handle, a few more orders than the factories could fill, a little more labor than laborers, somewhat more commerce than money, and this has continued until everybody has become more or less independent, while living expenses have advanced very materially. Living expenses are never cheap, except in periods of industrial stagnation. Therefore, we may well dread another period of cheap living. There is a reasonable limit, however, to all good things, and that limit has been a little more than reached. A slight curtailment all along the line will do us good.

"Our only danger is from unwarranted alarm. We have been running at a breakneck pace until everybody is well-nigh out of breath. If we can now slacken and nobody lie down in the road, it would be well with us.

"There is a great difference between a panic and industrial stagnation. It is an error to speak of the panic of 1893 to 1897. The panic was in 1893. The conflagration which followed the panic was of long duration; meantime commerce sat on the sidewalk and the Fire Department disbanded. That experience is not now to be repeated. Conditions are entirely different. Every dollar of our currency is now admittedly worth 25.3 grains of gold, is exchangeable therefore, and passes everywhere unchallenged. Revolutionary financial legislation is advocated by no one, and reactionary revenue reform is not threatened. Our prosperity rests on a surer foundation than stock market quotations. It rests in our faith, and our faith is anchored in the promises of God, that,

"'While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and Summer and Winter, and day and night shall not cease.'

"We are approaching seedtime. Let the crop be put in in great hope."

Concluding with the following comments on the undue haste which possesses us, he also gave his views on Socialism and democracy.

"But we are all in too much of a hurry. We read only headlines, and take no time for thought. The University of Virginia, with its unsurpassed landscape gardening, was planned by Thomas Jefferson in the quiet and leisurely atmosphere of his Virginia farm. The stately cathedrals of Europe are the expression of long, sober, and painstaking thinking. But we have no time either for art, religion, or statesmanship.

"The true statesman is he who studies and fulfills the needs of the people. This he can never do by conferences with financiers, or legislators, or newspaper men. He should cross the continent once a year, brush up against the farmer, the mechanic, take their hands in his, and learn their thoughts and needs—they for whom this Nation was founded and who are the producers of its wealth.

"Yet I cannot agree that the voice of the people is always the voice of God. If the majority had gained their wish in 1896, we would have adopted the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1. The Democratic Party set forth in that platform particulars of legislation which should have been left to representatives in Congress.

"So long as the Nation avoids the extreme doctrines of Socialism, with its consequent paternalism, and retains its representative Government, its foundations are grounded on a rock. The people are well represented by our legislative bodies, better than for many years.

"Extreme democracy is rule by the mob. A good example of popular government gone to seed was the town meeting of New England, at which all the people of a town came together once a year to pass laws for the public welfare. These meetings were mere burlesques of government.

"'At one meeting a committee of 'fence-viewers' was appointed, consisting of Hefty Parker, weight 400 pounds, Skinny Dinks, an outline of pure thought, and Nifty Shanks, who was possessed of legs of the stilt variety. The committee was instructed to see to it that all fences which were built in the town should be strong enough for Hefty Parker to sit on, tight enough to keep Skinny Dinks from crawling through, and too high for Nifty Shanks to straddle."

Missouri Pacific's New Equipment.

The equipment requirements of the Missouri Pacific Railway Company for the year have been covered by the sale to Tailer & Co. of $4,043,000 5 per cent. equipment trust bonds, which are due in ten annual installments, the last one maturing May 1, 1917. The par value of the bonds represents 90 per cent. of the cost of the equipment, which includes 50 freight locomotives, 3,000 coal cars, 750 ballast cars, and 750 stock cars.

SPRING RESORTS.

Atlantic City.

Marlborough-Blenheim
Atlantic City, N. J.
April

The ending of Lent this year coincides with the beginning of April, the gayest and most distinguished month in Atlantic City's famous Spring season. During this month more eminent visitors and "nice people" are to be found in the great hotels than in any other month of the year, and the absence of the Easter Sunday "INTERRUPTION" enables guests to completely enjoy all the attractions of climate and artificial entertainment of this festive season with entire satisfaction.

The hotels claims distinction for its location, its ample public space devoted to its guests, its high-class music and dancing throughout the year, but particularly attractive with solo singers at the week-ends during the Spring season and its ownership management.

All the four dining rooms (two American plan, with the excellent cooking heretofore so popular, and two a la carte, with separate kitchens and French cooks) have white service throughout, and in one of the American rooms, called the "American Palm Room," and in the a la carte rooms smoking is permitted. These rooms are particularly attractive. Ocean and suites with large rooms 34 by 20 feet and a private bath (supplied with both sea water and fresh water and with running ice water) is with every alternate room in the Marlborough and with every room in the Blenheim, which in construction is regarded as the most completely fire-proof hotel in the world. Golf privileges.

SPECIAL MASTER'S SALE.

IN THE CIRCUIT COURT OF THE UNITED STATES for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division.—UNITED STATES TRUST COMPANY OF NEW YORK and JOHN A. STEWART, as Trustees, complainants, against CHICAGO TERMINAL TRANSFER RAILROAD COMPANY and others, defendants.—In Equity, No. 28,130.

Notice is hereby given that under and in pursuance of a certain decree of the Circuit Court of the United States for the Northern District of Illinois, Eastern Division thereof, duly entered in the above-entitled cause on the 20th day of February, 1907, and in pursuance of a certain decree ancillary thereto duly entered in the Circuit Court of the United States for the District of Indiana on the 23d day of February, 1907, I, Henry W. Wales, the Special Master in Chancery named in said decrees, will sell to the highest bidder or bidders by public auction at the east main entrance on Fifth Avenue of the Grand Central Passenger Station, situated at the southwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Harrison Street, in the City of Chicago, County of Cook, State of Illinois, on the premises so to be sold, at 12 o'clock noon on Friday, the third day of May, 1907, all and singular the railroads, franchises, and property of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, said railroads, franchises, and property being described in said decrees as follows, namely:

All those certain railroads extending from a point at or near Harrison Street, in the City of Chicago, and between Fifth Avenue and the south branch of the Chicago River; thence southerly across said south branch of the Chicago River, between Taylor Street and Twelfth Street, in the City of Chicago; thence southeasterly and westerly across Stewart Avenue, near Meagher Street, in the City of Chicago; thence westerly to and across Western Avenue, in the City of Chicago, near Fourteenth Street; thence westerly and northerly across Washtenaw Avenue, in the City of Chicago, near West Taylor Street; thence westerly and northerly to Madison Street, in Section 13, Township 39 north, Range 12, east of the Third Principal Meridian, in the Village of Harlem, County of Cook, Illinois, with a branch railroad therefrom, leaving said last described railroad at a point near the intersection of Western Avenue and Fourteenth Street; thence south and southerly to the City of Blue Island, in said Cook County, and from a point known as Harvey Junction, on the Chicago and Calumet Terminal Division of said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad, to and through the City of Chicago Heights and to the east and west center line of Section 28, Township 35 north, Range 14, east of the Third Principal Meridian, Cook County, Illinois, including the Thornton spur so called, which last described railroad, or branch railroad, is known as the Chicago Central Division of said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad; also the Chicago and Southwestern Division of said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad, being a branch line of railroad leaving said first-mentioned railroad at a point near South Forty-sixth Avenue, in the City of Chicago; thence westerly and southerly to West Sixteenth Street, and thence westerly to Harlem Avenue, and thence northerly to a connection with said first-mentioned railroad, near Harlem Avenue, including the Race Track spur so called, together with the Interest of said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company in the Beach Street track, so called, being a railroad track owned jointly by said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, the Pennsylvania Company, and the Chicago and Calumet Railroad Company, and extending along Beach Street, in the City of Chicago, from a point near Twelfth Street to a point near Polk Street; together with all the right, title and interest of the said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company in the Chicago, Harlem and Batavia Railroad, so called, being a railroad which, at the time of the execution of said mortgage, extended from a point on said first described railroad near South Fortieth (or Crawford) Avenue; thence northerly to a point near the intersection of Randolph Street and South Fortieth Avenue, thence westerly to a point near Des Plaines Avenue, and thence southerly to the Concordia Cemetery, and thence easterly to Des Plaines Avenue; also the Chicago and Calumet Terminal Division of said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad, being a railroad extending from Pine Junction, on the line of the Lake Shore and Michigan Southern Railway, in Lake County, in the State of Indiana; thence west through the Cities of East Chicago and Hammond, in said Lake County, and thence westerly through the City of Blue Island, and thence westerly and northerly to a point near the channel or canal of the Sanitary District of Chicago, near McCook, in said Cook County, in the State of Illinois; also the tracks, leases and trackage rights from the Chicago Junction Railway Company, from said point near McCook to Franklin Park, in said Cook County, with a branch therefrom from the City of East Chicago, in said Lake County, in the State of Indiana, north and northeasterly to Whiting, in said Lake County; together with trackage rights or leasehold in the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad, from said Whiting to South Chicago, and certain other trackage rights from the Chicago, Rock Island and Pacific Railroad, in said South Chicago, and a leasehold interest in the Lyons and Chicago Railroad, so called being a railroad extending easterly from said Chicago and Calumet Terminal Division at a point near McCook to and into the Chicago Crushed Stone Company's property; together with the Mayfair Extension, so called, being a railroad extending from said Franklin Park northerly and easterly to Mayfair, in the City of Chicago, in said Cook County; also the Chicago and Northwestern Railway; together with all branches, spurs, industrial tracks, side tracks, team tracks and other appurtenant tracks along and upon each and every of said described railroads; together with all depot grounds, yards, ways, rights of way, interlocking plants, switches, tracks, bridges, viaducts, culverts, fences and other structures, station house, engine houses, car houses, freight houses, wood houses, elevators, warehouses, turntables, machinery and repair shops and their equipment, water tanks, turn tables, superstructures, erections, buildings and fixtures belonging to or connected with said lines of railway or the business thereof; together with all franchises, ordinances, licenses, permits, easements, leases, contracts and agreements belonging or pertaining to or connected with said lines of railway or the business thereof; together with all locomotives, tenders, cars and other rolling stock, equipment, supplies, machinery, tools and implements owned or acquired by said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, or by John N. Faithorn, the receiver heretofore appointed herein, and belonging, pertaining to or connected with said lines of railway or the business thereof; together with all properties, real, personal, or mixed, held in leasehold or in freehold, in law or in equity, by said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, including all choses in action, bills receivable and moneys owned, possessed or held by said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, or said receiver, and including the following described real estate, to wit:

Beginning at the intersection of the northerly right of way line of the Chicago Junction Railway Company and the north and south center line of said Section 3, thence north along the said center line of Section 3, 66 feet to a point, thence easterly and parallel with the said right of way line of the Chicago Junction Railway Company 855 feet more or less to a point in the southerly right of way line of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, thence southeasterly along said right of way line a distance of 273 feet more or less, to an intersection of said right of way line with the aforesaid right of way line of the Chicago Junction Railway Company, thence westerly along the last-mentioned line 613 feet to the point of beginning.

Also a strip of land 66 feet wide and 660 feet long, more or less, running in a northeast and west direction across the east half of the east half of the northwest quarter of Section 3, Township 38 north, Range 14, east of the Third Principal Meridian, said strip being partly in the north half and partly in the south half of the said east half of the east half of the northwest quarter of said Section 3, and being north of and adjoining the right of way of the Chicago Junction Railway Company; also a piece of land in the west half of the east half of the northwest quarter of Section 3, Township 38 north, Range 14, east of the Third Principal Meridian, said piece of land lying partly in the north half and partly in the south half of the said west half of the east half of the northwest quarter of Section 3, and described as follows:

Beginning at the intersection of the north and south center line of the east half of the west half of Section 3 with the northerly right of way line of the Chicago Junction Railway Company, thence westerly along said right of way line 405 feet more or less to the intersection of the said right of way line with the right of way line of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, thence northeasterly along the last mentioned line a distance of 825 feet more or less to a point 71.8 feet north of the said right of way line of the Chicago Junction Railway Company, thence easterly parallel with the said right of way line of the Chicago Junction Railway Company 80 feet to the said north and south center line of the east half of the west half of Section 3, thence south along said north and south center line 71.8 feet to the point of beginning, in Cook County, Illinois.

Also a strip of land 120 feet wide in the northwest fractional quarter of fractional Section 5, Township 38 north, Range 14, east of the Third Principal Meridian, north of the Indian Boundary Line, described as follows:

Beginning at a point where the south right of way line of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company intersects the west line of the said northwest fractional quarter of fractional Section 5, and extending thence east along said right of way line 1,104.98 feet more or less to a corner of land of the Illinois Brick Company, thence south 120 feet to a point, thence west parallel with the said right of way line 1,104.98 feet more or less to the said west line of the northwest fractional quarter of fractional Section 5, thence north along said line 120 feet to the place of beginning, in Cook County, Illinois.

Also an irregular piece of land in the northwest fractional quarter of fractional Section 5, Township 36 north, Range 14, east of the Third Principal Meridian, north of the Indian Boundary Line, said strip being described as follows:

Beginning at a point where the south right of way line of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company intersects the division line between the land of Henry Homeier and the land of the grantors, and extending thence east along said right of way line 1,868.51 feet more or less to a point which is 411.19 feet west of the intersection of the said right of way line with the said Indian Boundary Line, thence southwestward 844.8 feet to a point which is 120 feet south of said right of way line of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, thence west, parallel with the said right of way line, 1,023.11 feet more or less to the said division line between the lands of Henry Homeier and the lands of the grantors, thence north 120 feet to the place of beginning, situated in Cook County, Illinois.

Also a strip or tract of land 16 feet in uniform width, being all that part of the south three-fourths of the east half of the northeast quarter and of the north 40 acres of the southeast quarter, Section 12, Township 37 north, Range 13, east of the Third Principal Meridian, lying east of a line 355 feet east of and parallel with the east line of the present right of way of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, as the same runs through the said south three-fourths of the east half of the northeast quarter and the north 40 acres of the southeast quarter of said Section 12, in Cook County, Illinois.

Also the east 633 feet of the north 20 acres of the west 80 acres of the north 60 acres of the southeast quarter of Section 12, Township 37 north, Range 13, east of the Third Principal Meridian, (said 20 acres being the north half of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 12 aforesaid); also that part of the south five-eighths of the west half of the northeast quarter of Section 12, Township 37 north, Range 13, east of the Third Principal Meridian, lying between the west line of right of way of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company as the same extends through said south five-eighths of the west half of the northeast quarter of said Section 12, and a line drawn parallel with and 600 feet west of said west line of said right of way, Cook County, Illinois.

Also the property, railroad, and right of way between Fourteenth Street and Thirty-ninth Street in the City of Chicago, County of Cook, and State of Illinois, acquired by the defendant Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company from the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company in exchange for the railroad between the said points mentioned and described under the charter of the Chicago Central Railway Company, the title to which said last mentioned railroad has been transferred to and vested in the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company or the Chicago Junction Railway Company.

Also the north half of Lot 10 in School Trustees' Subdivision of Section 16, Township 40 north, Range 13, east of the Third Principal Meridian.

Also 10.41 acres, more or less, described as follows, to wit: The north 20 acres of the west 80 acres of the north 60 acres, excepting the east 633 feet thereof, formerly sold to the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, said 20 acres being the north half of the northwest quarter of the southeast quarter of Section 12, Township 37 north, Range 13, east of the Third Principal Meridian, Cook County, Illinois.

Also all that part of the northeast quarter of Section 12, Township 37 north, Range 13, east of the Third Principal Meridian, Cook County, Illinois, lying west of a line 600 feet distant west of and parallel with the west right of way line of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company and south of the south line of Harry H. Honore, Jr.'s, subdivision of part of said northeast quarter of said Section 12.

Also the following described real estate, to wit: Commencing at the northeast corner of the north half of the southwest quarter of Section 21, Township 35 north, Range 14, east of the Third Principal Meridian, thence running west to a stake 280 feet and 6 inches, thence running south 924 feet 8½ inches; thence running east 280 feet 6 inches, thence running north 924 feet 8½ inches to the place of beginning, containing 6 acres of land, situated in Cook County, Illinois.

Also Lot 10 in Block 76, and Lot 25 in Block 136, all in Chicago Heights, a subdivision in Township 35 north, Range 13, east of the Third Principal Meridian, Cook County, Illinois.

Also all the railway lines, premises, and real and personal property formerly belonging to the Bridgeport and South Chicago Railroad Company, and latterly to the Chicago and Northern Pacific Railroad Company, which property includes lands, docks, water rights and terminal facilities, and which was by said Bridgeport and South Chicago Railroad Company conveyed to the Chicago and Northern Pacific Railroad Company by deed dated the 11th day of March, 1890, and recorded in the Recorder's office of Cook County, in Book 3,135, beginning at Page 80, except such parts thereof as have been heretofore conveyed by said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company.

Also all of Blocks 88, 87, 86, 85, 77 and 76, in the School Section Addition to the City of Chicago.

Also Lots 1, 2, 15, and 16, in Block 2, in the Canal Addition to the City of Chicago, being a subdivision of the west fraction of the northeast quarter of Section 21, Township 39 north, Range 14, east of the Third Principal Meridian.

Also all those lands and premises lying in the northeast quarter of said Section 21, south of Twelfth Street, west of the Chicago River, east of the centre line of Dodge Street and north of the south line of Fourteenth Street projected, except Lots 9 and 10, and except that part of Lot 8 lying southeasterly of a line parallel to and 17 feet southerly from the northeasterly line of said Lot 8, and except that part of Lot 11 lying northwesterly of a line parallel with and 34 feet northerly from the southeasterly line of said Lot 11 in Block 4, in said Canal Addition to the City of Chicago, lying easterly of a line drawn from a point on the south line of said Lot 8, 214 feet west of the southeast corner of said Lot 8 to a point on the north line of Lot 11, 134 feet west of the northeast corner of said Lot 5.

Also that part of Block 14 in said Canal Addition extanding from the last above described premises southwesterly to Stewart Avenue, bounded on the north and west by the property of the Pittsburg, Fort Wayne and Chicago Railway Company, and on the southeast by the property of the Chicago and North Western Railway Company.

Also the south 300 acres of Section 19, and the east half of the northeast quarter of Section 30, Township 39 north, Range 13, east of the Third Principal Meridian, in Cook County, Illinois, known as "the Sturges tract," and any rights, by contract or otherwise, which the railroad company now has in or to the same.

Also a tract of land purchased by the said Chicago and Northern Pacific Railroad Company from Nelson Morris, containing 203.95 acres, being that part of the southwest quarter of Section 12, lying east of the right of way of the Chicago and Grand Trunk Railway Company, and the southeast quarter of said Section 12, except the north 40 acres thereof, all in Township 37 north, Range 13, east of the Third Principal Meridian.

Also all the right, title and interest of the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company in and to $5,000,000.00, or substantially $5,000,000.00, of the capital stock of the Chicago and Calumet Terminal Railway Company, and $6,000,000.00 of the first mortgage bonds of said Chicago and Calumet Terminal Railway Company, deposited with the complainant, the United States Trust Company of New York, for the benefit of the holders of the bonds issued under said mortgage of June 11, 1897.

Also 5,000 shares of $100.00 each, of the Hammond and Lake Michigan Railway Company, and 5,000 shares of $100.00 each, of the Calumet River Railway Company.

Also all other lots, pieces, or parcels of land acquired by said Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company, situated in said Cook County, in the State of Illinois, or said County of Lake, in the State of Indiana, not specifically described herein; excepting therefrom, and from all of the foregoing, all those certain lots, pieces and parcels of land, or any of them, described in and conveyed by a certain deed of conveyance dated as of the 26th day of October, 1898, and recorded in the Recorder's office of Cook County, Illinois, on the 14th day of March, 1905, in Book 8008 of Records, on Page 273, wherein the Chicago Title and Trust Company was and is the grantor and the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company was and is the grantee; and excepting also all those certain lots, pieces and parcels of land described in and conveyed by those two certain deeds from the Chicago Terminal Transfer Railroad Company to the Union Stock Yards and Transit Company, one dated June 1, 1898, and recorded in the Recorder's office of Cook County, Illinois, April 25, 1901, in Book 7855 of Records, at Page 263, as document No. 3092077, and the other dated June 1, 1898, and recorded in said Recorder's office April 23, 1901, in Book 7834

THOS. M. HENNEBERRY

Two Attractive Offerings.

$50,000 CASH

will buy a parcel that offers immediate opportunities for a quick profit. This parcel is situated on the west side and improvements now under way by the city will assure of a holding that will enhance its value on completion of the present work. It can be bought on very favorable terms, and by disposing of it at retail a good profit is assured. Will consider propositions to syndicate the transaction if agreeable. Particulars to principals only, on application.

$33,000 CASH

will buy a Madison Avenue Corner Apartment House which will return about 9% net annually on the above amount. The first mortgage has just been renewed for 3 years at 4½%. The second mortgage has 3 years to run at 5%, making the combined average rate of interest on both mortgages under 5%. This parcel should commend itself to investors who desire to buy where there is an assurance of an increase in the value of their holding. The vicinity of this property has a very bright future, and its location, together with the fact that it is a corner, makes it an attractive proposition.

I have other parcels in various locations, the particulars of which can be had on application.

If You Want to Buy or Sell Real Estate

in Manhattan Borough I believe you will find it to your interest to place your business in the hands of an office where your wants will receive consideration, where the particulars will be truthfully stated, and where the desire to make a satisfied client is paramount to that of making a commission resulting from misrepresentation.

By having the exclusive handling of your business, the Broker is not handicapped and is able to proceed on more intelligent lines and very often obtain better and quicker results than could be had otherwise.

I am asking for your business on the above lines and if you are interested I would be glad to hear from you.

The Foundation Stone of happiness is centered by the home, be it humble or grand. The more attractive the happier it will be. Compare a cramped, stuffy apartment to the freedom and healthfulness of a home among the trees and flowers, with sunshine and invigorating breezes. It is such a home as this, complete with all city conveniences and yet ONLY TWENTY MINUTES FROM NEW YORK, that we offer you for no more than the high class flat. A partial description of such a house is as follows:

Nine rooms, bath, steam heat, double hardwood floors on first floor. Hardwood trim throughout—Oak, first floor; Red Hazel on second and third floors. Cemented cellars. Decorations, fixtures, mantels, etc., selected to please the most critical.

All improvements in the street—Water, gas, sewer, cement sidewalks, curb and gutters; shade trees. Price, $9,500, on terms to suit purchaser.

Moderate taxes, good schools, the highly restricted character of the property insuring only most desirable neighbors, make this and other larger and smaller houses at just what you have pictured to yourself the real home to be.

"HOW THEY PROFIT"
Here is a typical letter:
"Vanderveer Crossings, Inc.:
"Gentlemen—On Nov. 14, 1906, I sold for a client one of your lots, 20x100 ft. 2 ins., for $3,500 spot cash, to Peter Olsen of 37th St. and Fort Hamilton Parkway, Brooklyn, who has since put a store and apartments for two families on the plot and sold it for $15,500, making a clear profit of $2,500 in 50 days. Yours sincerely, A. J. MURPHY, Real Estate Brok r. 164 Montague Street, Brooklyn."
It is interesting to add that the above 20-foot front lot, recently sold for $2,500, was sold by us to Mr. Murphy's client only a few years ago for the ridiculous sum of $450.
From $450 to $3,500 in a few years, with no trouble and trivial expense (which can remain as a charge to account) is a little better than 4 per cent. per annum in a bank.
Money invested in our lots is almost as get-at-able as money in a savings bank—and a good deal safer.
Send your name and address and let us show you what you can do for as little as $60 or $70 down and $12 or $15 monthly.

STRIKE THREATENED IN BUILDING TRADE

All Union Workers May Quit to Aid Strike of the Painters.

GOMPERS TAKES A HAND

Efforts to be Made To-day to Break Arbitration Agreement to Permit a Walkout.

The critical point in the strike of the Brotherhood of Painters on the arbitration contracts in violation of the arbitration plan will be reached to-day or to-morrow, when an effort will be made to get the other trades to strike on buildinge wbere non-union painters are employed.

National President Balhorn, of the Brotherhood Painters, came to this city yesterday in response to a call from the local unions, and had a conference at the Hotel Victoria with President Gompers, of the American Federation of Labor, add the local officers of the Brotherhood. Another conference will be held this afternoon, at which the painters will give Gompers a history of the trouble, and, accompanied by the local ond National officers, he will attend the meeting of the Consolidated Board of Business Agents early to-morrow morning and consult with tbe walking delegates of the unions in the other trades as to what may be done.

The unions in the other trades employed by members of the Building Trades Employers' Association are tied up with the arbitration agreement and cannot strike without violating its provisions.

It was agreed yesterday that the Walking Delegates of the Marble Industry, Plasterers' Union, Tile Layers' Union, Brotherhood of Carpenters, Upholsterers' Union, and Engineers' Union will meet this morning and go to the Plaza Hotel and one or two other arbitration contracts wbere, it is alleged, non-union painters are employed, and, after getting proofs of this, will go to the Building Trades Club and demand of the Secretary of the General Arbitration Board that the arbitration plan be raised on these buildings so thet the other trades may strike agoinst the non-union men. This arrangement resulted from a debate on the painters' strike at the meeting of the Central Fedeereted Union yesterday, where the orbitration plan was denounced. The subject arose first on a recommendation from the Executive Committee of the central body, in which it was declared thet the arbitration plan wos disrupting the unions, and that the other unions in the building trades should support the painters. This would mean that they would strike in sympathy. Tho recommendation was adopted, but the central body, under its charter from the American Federation of Labor, has no power to order strikes.

The floor was given to Victor Buhr of the Amalgamated Painters' Society, which has united with the Brotherhood of Painters in the strike for the new wage scale. Buhr declared that the arbitration plan so tied up the unions that they were deprived of their best weapon, the sympathetic strike. He asked if the arbitration plan was more important to the unions than tbe principle of trade unionism. Several other delegates attacked the arbitration plan, whereupon the Rev. William Carter of the Madison Avenue Reformed Church, one of the fraternal delegates, took the floor and warned the unions to be careful abont violating any contracts.

"If I understand it properly," he said, "the unions under the arbitration agreement are pledged not to violate it by striking. If the unions violate it by striking it will place them in a bad position before the public."

Several other delegates attacked the arbitration plan. Then Buhr made a plea for eid from the unions to win the strike. This resulted in the decision that the walking delegates of the trades mentioned will try to get the arbitration plan raised on all the buildings upon which strike breakers are put to work.

CAPSIZED IN A SQUALL.

Two Men Clinging to Upturned Boat Rescued by Fishermen.

EAST MORICHES, L. I., April 14.—Morris Joyce and Frank Smith, employes of the Witchogue House, while out in a small sailboat to-day, were caught in a sudden squall, and the boat turned bottom up. Both men climbed on to the hull and clung there an hour before they were rescued by two fishermen in a power boat.

Smith did not suffer greatly from the exposure, but Joyce, a much older man, is in a serious condition.

JEROME DENIES HEARING FROM JUROR

Says He Never Communicated with Pfaff in the Thaw Trial.

MAY RETAIN "ABE" LEVY

Thaw Thought to be Considering Him for Next Trial—Prisoner's Wife Not Admitted Yesterday.

Daniel O'Reilly was the only visitor received by Harry K. Thaw in the Tombs yesterday. The prisoner had been anxious to get hold of him on Saturday afternoon, but his message only reached Mr. O'Reilly's office after he had left for the day, and it was impossible to find him afterward.

None of the other counsel who have been defending Thaw in the trial called, and their absence at a time when he would naturally be most anxious for companionship confirmed the impression that there is likely to be a complete change in his legal advisers. It is believed that in whatever steps Thaw takes he will have the support of his family.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw visited the Tombs yesterday afternoon. She was not allowed to go upstairs to see her husband, but wrote him a long note. It was more than half an hour before the answer was brought down. It filled five or six sheets, and after reading it, Mrs. Thaw replied to the question about her husband's condition.

"He's very well. Things seem to be all right now."

If the Thaws have decided to retain different counsel for the next trial, and to allow the "unwritten law" and "dementia Americana" to revert to the Pacific Slope, it is expected that they will select counsel from among the members of the New York bar. Among the lawyers mentioned as likely to be selected is Abraham Levy. Mr. O'Reilly has been associated with him in many cases, notably in the defense of "Nan" Patterson. In the practical side of the criminal law he is recognized as an authority.

In Pittsburg it is believed that the Thaws will not neglect their own city in the search for competent counsel. From the first their family lawyer has maintained a watch over the defense, and hos been consulted upon many points, and particularly on the expenditure of money. It is thought probable that he will recommend retaining John Marron, who has a great reputation in Pittsburg as a criminal lawyer.

Prisoner's Wife Goes to Tombs.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw arrived at the Tombs yesterday afternoon alone. She evidently expected that she would be admitted as she had been on the last few Sundays. Warden Flynn explained, however, that as the trial was over there was no reason why he should make an exception to the rule against Sunday visits, and that he could not permit her to enter the prison.

"May I write a note?" she asked.

She jumped upon a clerk's high stool in the office and wrote a three or four page letter to her husband. This was sent upstairs with a package she had brought, and she talked to Deputy Warden Hanley while she waited for an answer.

She seemed in excellent spirits, and, perched on the high stool in the familiar blue costume, she looked more like a school girl than ever. The Deputy Warden told her that her husband was cheerful, and had attended the Episcopal service in the morning.

After half an hour Mrs. Thaw became impatient and sent up another note to the prisoner. This brought back an answer. It seemed satisfactory, and she prepared to depart. A reporter asked her to tell him something of the situation.

"Oh, no," she replied, "I mustn't say a word. They tell me that I must be more careful than ever about it."

"But you can tell me how your husband is now?" she was asked.

"He's very well. Things seem to be all right now."

"Will his lawyers be changed?"

"I really mustn't say a word," Mrs. Thaw answered.

"How are Mrs. William Thaw and the Countess?"

"Oh, they're very well," she replied, and then she ran out to her cab.

Thaw's Counsel Silent.

Neither Mr. Peabody nor Mr. Hartridge would discuss the situation yesterday. They refused to say whether they expected to continue as counsel for Thaw. With the exception of prepering an application for bail, there is no immediate need for counsel for the prisoner, and it appears likely that the consultation which wos to have been held to-day will now be postponed indefinitely.

Mr. Delmas has accepted an invitation from Theodore Noel, a Michigan millionaire, to spend a few days with him at his country house at Berrien Springs, Mich. There Mr. Delmas will take a complete rest after the strain of the long trial. He will then proceed to the Pacific Slope.

Four large automobiles were purchased at the automobile show held at Pittsburg last week by a member of the Thaw family. It was announced here last week that it was planned if Thaw obtained his release to send him on a trip to France with his wife, accompanied by only a valet and a maid.

The cars were ordered in Pittsburg on condition that they should be ready for delivery in Paris within six weeks, and it is understood that three of them were for Mrs. William Thaw and the fourth for William Thaw, her grandson.

Mr. Jerome denied in the strongest terms from his Lakeville house last night a story published yesterday morning that in the course of the trial Georgo Pfaff, Juror No. 2, had written letters to him. Mr. Pfaff was the strongest advocate for a conviction on the charge of murder in the first degree, and did not change his vote when the question of a compromise with the five who were in favor of an acquittal on the ground of insonity came up.

"You may say," said Mr. Jerome, "that I had no communication of eny kind with Mr. Pfaff in the course of the trial. I never set eyes on him to my knowledge until he appeared in court as a talesman, and I never spoke to him or received any letter from him while the trial was in progress. You may make my denial as strong as you like."

Pfaff Won't Discuss Charges.

Mr. Pfaff himself has observed complete silence as to the doings in the jury-room since he and the other eleven were discharged. Even yesterday, with this serious allegation against him, he refused to discuss his own actions. All he would say was:

"Mr. Jerome did not write to me during the trial and the only time he spoke to me was in the courtroom in full view of all."

He referred to a few jesting remarks which the District Attorney had made before the trial began.

It was also pointed out that Mr. Pfaff was the brother-in-law of James C. Young, Secretary and Treasurer of the Madison Square Garden Company. This appears to be true, but Mr. Young said yesterday:

"George Pfaff is my brother-in-law, but I have not seen him since Christmas—long before the trial began—and I have never to my knowledge discussed the tragedy with him."

Mr. Pfaff thought that the last time he had seen Mr. Young was in October. Occasionally Mrs. Young comes to see Mrs. Pfaff, but they have not met recently.

Just before Justice Fitzgerald discharged the jury on Friday, Wilbur F. Steele bent over and whispered to Deming B. Smith, the foreman. The court paused a moment to see if there was anything to be said, but as Mr. Smith made no attempt to speak, the Justice proceeded with his formal discharge. It was learned yesterday that Mr. Steele wished the foreman to read a few lines which had been drawn up on behalf of the jury thanking Justice Fitzgerald, Capt. Lynch and the other court officials for the courtesy they had shown the jurors.

CATCHES AN AUTO SCORCHER.

Bicycle Policeman Ends a Tarrytown Alderman's Trial of Fast Car.

Alderman Theodore H. Dinkel of Tarrytown dickered yesterday afternoon with Frederick Hatch, a broker, at the latter's country house at Woodmere, L. I., over the price of a fast auto he was buying. Alderman Dinkel explained that he wanted a fast machine to overtake New York motorists who broke the Tarrytown speed limit.

Alderman Dinkel bought the auto, which Hatch declared was a record breaker, and started for New York. He was accompanied by his two sons and his chauffeur, Joseph Foley. The party got as far as Jamaica when a tire burst. After repairs the auto made a new start, crossed the Astoria Ferry, and turned out of Ninety-eighth Street into Fifth Avenue. Then the chauffeur thought he would "try out" the machine and see what sort of speed it possessed.

When he got as far as 104th Street he was overhauled by Bicycle Policeman Ajax Whitman, who placed the chauffeur under arrest on a charge of exceeding the speed limit.

At the police station the Tarrytown Alderman explained that he had purchased the auto to catch speeders at Tarrytown. He was anxious to bail his chauffeur, but owned real estate only in Tarrytown.

Finally he offered his gold watch and chain and diamond rings as bail for his chauffeur, and Foley was released on his promise to appear in court this morning. The new auto catcher returned to Tarrytown slowly.

BOY DROWNS IN HARLEM MERE

Rescued After Slipping Off Float, He Dies in the Hospital.

William Berger, the 11-year-old son of John Berger of 127 East 112th Street, was drowned in the Harlem Mere, Central Park, yesterday afternoon. The mere is a small sheet of water just south of the entrance at 110th Street and Fifth Avenue. Young Berger with a number of companions was roller skating near the lake, and the boy got out on the float from which children sail miniature yachts. The float is shelving and before he could make an outcry he had slipped into the water. Although the boys who saw him fall shouted for help, it was some minutes before Policemen Ehler and Himmel heard the shouts and came running up. The boy was dragged out and an ambulance was called from the J. Hood Wright Hospital. The police and surgeon made efforts to revive the child, but he died a few minutes after the hospital was reached.

KNOCKS A POLICEMAN DOWN.

Donlon Wanted to Ride Free on B. R. T.—Locked Up After a Fight.

Because he thought the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company should transport him free over its lines, John Donlon of 200 Shepherd Avenue, Brooklyn, insulted Miss Bella McQuade, the ticket agent at the Alabama Avenue Station of the Fulton Street Elevated Road, yesterday afternoon, and when Policeman Blenk of the Liberty Avenue Station tried to arrest him he assaulted the patrolman.

Blank came to the station at the request of Miss McQuade, and found Donlon in front of the ticket window using rough language to the young woman. He ordered Donlon out of the station, but Donlon, instead of going, sent the officer to the floor with a blow over the right eye. The policeman grappled with the man, and finally regaining his feet brought him to terms with his night stick.

Donlon is locked up in the Liberty Avenue Station.

FLAMES SWEEP A TOWN.

Hundreds Made Homeless Opposite New Orleans by a Fire.

NEW ORLEANS, April 14.—Between five and six hundred persons were made homeless to-day by a fire which swept the town of Westweg, on the Mississippi River opposite New Orleans.

In all forty-two office buildings, including a Presbyterian church, the Town Hall, the Post Office, and some stores, were destroyed. Only a few cottages and the terminal buildings of the Texas & Pacific Railroad were left standing.

The loss is estimated at $50,000, with only about $4,000 insurance. The fire started in the rear of a grocery store. Its cause is unknown.

Charles L. Hutzler Dead.

BALTIMORE, April 14.—Charles L. Hutzler, a leading merchant of Baltimore and one of the oldest members of the firm of Putzler Brothers, dry goods merchants, died to-day of throat disease. He was 67 years old and was prominent in Jewish clubs and charities. His wife and four sons and two daughters survive. The sons are Messrs. George H., Edwin B., and Lewis B., and Lewis S. Hutzler, associated with their father and uncle in the firm of Hutzler Brothers, and Morton D. Hutzler, a member of the New York Stock Exchange. The daughters are Mrs. Isaac Strouse, Jr., and Mrs. Clarence J. Housman, whose husband is a member of the banking firm of A. A. Housman & Co., New York.

NEW FINANCIAL REVIEW.

This Morning's Issue an Extended and Improved Form of the Supplement.

The Weekly Financial Supplement of THE NEW YORK TIMES appears this morning in an improved and enlarged form. Originally part of the paper itself, designed to present the statistical features of the security market and the financial events of the week in convenient form, the supplement met with such general approbation from financiers that it was deemed advisable to enlorge its scope and confine its circulation in its amplified form to those of THE TIMES readers who are especially interested in financial affairs. A constantly growing demand has justified a further expansion, of which to-day's issue is the first example.

In its new form, The Financial and Quotation Review, besides enlargements of its old statistical and news departments, devotes added pages to special articles on current financial topics of interest to the investor, as well as to the professional Wall Street man, and brings out for the first time a number of special departments.

There are pages devoted especially to banking topics, a summary of railroad news, Government finance, correspondence from the principal financial centres, and reviews of other Government department reports, subjects having important bearing upon the business and monetary situation. In addition, there will be contributed articles from the pens of recognized leaders in the field of finance.

In the present issue ex-Secretary Shaw, who resigned from the Cabinet last month to become the head of the Carnegie Trust Company, has contributed his opinions of the measure of relief afforded by the new Aldrich currency law, with some comments on the recent smash in stocks. Edwin S. Schenck has written on the evolution of the Clearing House.

Contributed articles on financial subjects should be sent to the Financial editor, NEW YORK TIMES.

RAPID TRANSIT REPORT.

Commission Tells of Past Work and of Its Future Plans.

The Rapid Transit Commission has published the annual report of the body for 1906, containing a long, detailed account of the proceedings of the board and the difficulties it has encountered in planning new subways.

The report contains a history of the rapid transit movement in this city for the last thirty years. It also gives the history of the planning and building of the present Subway, and contains full details os to the legal and financial operations of the board. A full list of the franchises for subways that have been prepared is given, and in speaking of the possibility of these lines being built, the report says:

"Limitations upon the rapidity with which construction can henceforth be carried on will probably be of a financial nature. The resources of the City of New York, magnificent as they are, are not unlimited; and it is certain that if any large measure of relief is to be obtained these resources must be largely drawn on. The comprehensive scheme of this board has been fitly characterized by the court as 'the most stupendous scheme of municipal improvement and expenditure ever undertaken, and without a parallel in its ultimate bearing upon the destiny of the people of what we have reason for thinking will be the greatest city in the world.'"

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, April 14.—The western area of high pressure has reached the Middle Mississippi Valley much diminished in strength. It is being closely followed by a depression whose centre is now over the Dakotas. Light snow has fallen in the lake region, the Upper Ohio Valley, and the mountain regions of New York, Pennsylvania, and West Virginia. In all other portions of the country except California and Nevada, where local thunderstorms have occurred, the weather has been fair.

Steamers departing Monday for European ports will have fresh northwest winds and fair weather to the Grand Banks.

FORECAST FOR TO-DAY AND TUESDAY.

New England—Fair and colder Monday; Tuesday, increasing cloudiness; brisk northwest winds.

Eastern New York, Eastern Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Delaware, District of Columbia, and Maryland—Fair Monday and Tuesday; warmer Tuesday; fresh to brisk northwest winds, diminishing.

West Virginia and Western Pennsylvania—Cloudy and warmer Monday; showers Monday night or Tuesday, with rising temperature.

Western New York—Cloudy Monday, with slightly higher temperatures; Tuesday, fair; fresh northwest winds, becoming variable.

The temperature record for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from the thermometer at the local office of the United States Weather Bureau, is as follows:

	1906.	1907.		1906.	1907.
8 A. M.	43	40	4 P. M.	53	46
6 A. M.	44	40	6 P. M.	54	41
9 A. M.	48	43	9 P. M.	53	37
12 M.	49	47	11 P. M.	55	36

This thermometer is 108 feet above the street level. The average temperature yesterday was 42; for the corresponding date last year it waa 49; average on the corresponding date for the last twenty-five years, 48.

The temperature at 8 A. M. yesterday was 40; at 8 P. M. it was 38. Maximum temperature, 49 degrees at 1 P. M.; minimum, 36 degrees at 10 P. M. Humidity, 80 per cent. at 8 A. M.; 75 per cent. at 8 P. M.

QUAKE LEVELS MEXICAN CITIES

Chilpancingo and Chilapa Almost Destroyed—Other Cities Cut Off.

500 DEAD, SAYS A REPORT

Government Discredits Dispatch to Bank, but Admits Widespread Destruction.

EUROPE RECORDS SHOCKS

Albany Seismograph Shows a More Violent Disturbance Than That at San Francisco.

CHILPANCINGO, Mexico, April 15.—This city has been almost destroyed by one of the most serious earthquakes that have ever visited this section.

Up to this evening the known dead number eleven, and the badly injured twenty-seven. Among the dead is the wife of Postal Inspector Leopoldo Lopez Guerra, and the child of Jose Aleman, the Postmaster. Jose Lopez Martinez, Manager of the Federal Telegraph office, was struck on the head by a block of stone and badly injured.

A panic prevails everywhere and people are fleeing to the open country. The earth continues to rock at half-hour intervals, and many minor shocks are completing the work of destruction of the first earthquake.

All telegraph communication with the outside world ceased shortly after 11:50 o'clock last night, when the first shock was felt. The telegraph operators later installed temporary quarters in an open square.

Word has reached here that the town of Chilapa, forty-two kilometers to the northeastward, has also been destroyed. As yet no details have been received as to the dead and wounded, but it is feared that the number will be large.

This city, which is the capital of the State of Guerrero, four years ago was visited by an earthquake that killed and wounded many of its inhabitants and destroyed a large part of the town. The population is 7,498. The population of Chilapa is 15,000. That place is the home of the Bishop of the Catholic Church who administers the ecclesiastical affairs of the entire region. No word has been received from the Bishop's palace.

Fear for Another City.

Midway between Chilpancingo and Chilapa is the City of Tixtla, a prosperous and progressive community. As no word has been received from that place, it is feared that it also has been destroyed. Tixtla was in the direct line of the earthquake.

The following message was sent to the Federal Telegraph Office in Mexico City from Chilapa:

"Our boys are working in a public garden. A terrible panic prevails, as the earth continues to tremble at regular intervals. Send us tents that we may establish an office out in the country."

All communication with the west coast has been cut off since the first shock, and it is not known to what extent that region suffered. The nearest big town, Acapulco, which is 131 kilometers to the southwest of this place, has not reported.

The volcanos of Colima and Jorullo are in this region, and the people fear that they have become more active, and will destroy much property and many lives. Colima is along the coast to the northwest of this city. Jorullo is much nearer, almost due north, in the State of Michoacan.

The native inhabitants of this region are known as "pintos," because of the "spots" on their faces. They are noted for their hardy, warlike spirit and for their stoicism and fanaticism.

This city is ninety-seven kilometers from the nearest railroad line, and it will be impossible for the people to flee except on foot or on horseback.

A great number of Americans have been in the State prospecting for mines.

500 Lives Reported Lost.

CITY OF MEXICO, April 15.—The National Bank of Mexico has received a telegram saying that 500 lives were lost in the destruction of Chilpancingo and Chilapa. The telegram adds that both cities were completely destroyed. In Government circles the report is not credited. It is admitted that both cities were severely damaged, but it is not thought that the deaths will even approximate 500, owing to the fact that the houses are massive affairs, built of stone in order to resist earthquake shocks.

The Federal authorities here have been appealed to by the Governors of the districts of Bravos and Chilapa for tents, as the inhabitants in the stricken cities are now living in the open in dwellings of palm leaves and branches.

The Governor of the State of Guerrero has dispatched military engineers and troops to the destroyed district, and the work of rescue and sanitation is being carried on in a systematic manner.

There were no deaths in Mexico City from the earthquake, and beyond damaged plaster and cracked and fallen walls the property loss will be insignificant. Owing to the long duration of the shock this is considered most remarkable, and is only accounted for by the peculiar swell-like motion of the earthquake, which was regular and from east to west.

VIOLENT SHOCKS RECORDED.

Seismographs in America and Europe Show Remarkable Disturbance.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, April 15.—The strongest and longest earthquake shock recorded on the seismograph at the State Museum here since the instrument was installed began at 1:14 A. M. to-day, and continued more than two hours. The record was much more pronounced than that made by the earthquake which destroyed San Francisco a year ago.

In an official statement given out by State Geologist John M. Clarke, it is declared that "there is no doubt that the present disturbance belongs to the 'world shaking' variety."

"The first indication of the disturbance was received at 1:14½ o'clock this morning," the statement said. "At 1:28 A. M. the waves developed rapidly to extraordinary size, reaching an amplitude of over six inches, as traced by the pendulum and causing the recording arms to swing entirely off the cylinders on both the north-south and the east-west machines. The large waves lasted ten minutes, and the whole disturbance till about 3 A. M."

WASHINGTON, April 15.—A distant earthquake was recorded by the Weather Bureau's seismographs, commencing at 1:14:20 this morning. The duration of the quake was more than two hours. The records indicate an unusually violent disturbance, comparable in intensity with those at Valparaiso and Kingston.

BERLIN, April 15.—The seismographs at Hamburg, Potsdam, Goettingen, and Jena registered a severe earthquake shock this morning at a distance of 6,210 miles. The heaviest shock occurred at 8| A. M. The disturbance probably was somewhere in South or Central America.

VIENNA, April 15.—The meteorological stations in this city and at Trieste report a violent earthquake at a distance of 6,250 miles.

BUSSE IS INAUGURATED.

The First Republican Mayor in Chicago in Ten Years.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, April 15.—Fred A. Busse was installed as Mayor of Chicago at the meeting of the City Council to-night. He is the first Republican Mayor in ten years, and the first four-year-term Mayor in the history of the city.

Mayor Busse's inaugural message set a record for brevity, containing about 200 words, in which he pledged the new administration to the best interests of the public. The plans of the present administration are principally concerned with the rehabilitation of the local traction systems in acordance with the franchises approved at the last election.

Hopes of a comparatively speedy reorganization of the Union Traction Company into the Chicago Railway Company, with power to accept the ordinance for the North and West Side lines, were strengthened to-day. It was announced that the plan of reorganization is almost ready for presentation to holders of the various securities.

The work of completing the plan was taken up by the Chicago interests and Louis C. Krauthoff and George W. Wickersham, who arrived from New York in the morning. They represent J. P. Morgan and the other New York capitalists who are to furnish the money for the traction rehabilitation

WENT ALL MURPHY'S WAY.

Hardly a McClellan Head Showed at Tammany Society Election.

Charles F. Murphy, leader of Tammany Hall, is still the dominating factor in the Tamany Society. The McClellan contingent, headed by Maurice Featherson and Fire Commisioner Lantry, recently announced its intention of ousting Mr. Murphy, but last night a Murphy ticket for next year was elected without the slightest opposition. It was merely a re-election of old officers.

There was an unusual attendance at the election. All marched up to the Treasurer and paid their annual dues of a dollar apiece, so that they could cast their ballots. The Treasurer announced that so much money had not been taken in at one election in the last fifty years. Apparently all the money was Murphy money, judging from the way the election went. Neither Featherson nor Fire Commissioner Lantry appeared, and if any of their lieutenants did they probably sounded an alarm to run to cover when they saw how the tide was running.

Grand Sachem W. Bourke Cockran being away on his honeymoon, Sachem John J. Scannell presided. This ticket then slid through without encountering the slightest opposition.

Sachems—John F. Ahearn, William Dalton, Daniel F. Cohalan, John Fox, Asa Bird Gardiner, Randolph Guggenheimer, Louis F. Haffen, Patrick Keenan, Charles F. Murphy, Daniel F. McMahon, George W. Plunkitt, John J. Scannell, and Timothy D. Sullivan.
Secretary—Thomas F. Smith.
Treasurer—Joseph P. Day.
Sagamore—Bryan P. Henry.
Wiskinkie—John A. Boyle.

The Grand Sachem will be elected by the Sachems after their installation in May, if they choose to act. But they may not choose to act, and in that case Grand Sachem Cochran will hold over. This procedure has often been adopted in the past.

KILLED IN TROLLEY CRASH.

Motorman Sticks to His Post and Is Crushed—Passengers Injured.

Two street cars of the Public Service Corporation were in a rear-end collision on the trestle between West Hoboken and Weehawken at 7:30 o'clock last night, and the motorman of one car was killed. The passengers in the two cars were shaken up and about a dozen of them were cut by flying glass, but none was seriously injured. Both cars were bound for the Fourteenth Street Ferry, in Hoboken.

A car was at the east end of the trestle when the trolley pole pulled out, leaving the car in darkness, but it continued down the incline slowly to the other end of the trestle.

Hugo Hageman was the motorman of a car trailing behind, and evidently thought the disappearance of the lights ahead indicated that the car had crossed the trestle and reached the ground. He went across the trestle at good speed and crashed into the first car.

Hageman saw what was inevitable and had partly slowed down. He stuck to his post, and when the two platforms came together was crushed against the front of his car. Those in the forward car who had been on the rear platform saw the car coming, and all crowded inside, escaping injury. Hagsman lived in Willow Avenue, Hoboken.

WOMAN STARVED TO DEATH.

Homeless One Picked Up on the Bowery Had Not Eaten for Three Days.

Half an hour after being admitted to St. Vincent's Hospital last night a woman, who said she was Annie McDermott, 50 years old and homeless, died, probably of starvation.

Policeman Murphy found the woman unconscious at the Bowery and Houston Street. He summoned Dr. Strang, who managed to restore her to consciousness. She said that for three weeks, she had been unable to get work and for the last three days had eaten nothing. She died in the emergency ward.

POLICE DRAGNET OUT FOR ARMED ITALIANS

100 Arrests in Raids from the Battery to the Bronx and in Brooklyn.

SEQUEL TO SUNDAY'S CRIME

Every Cell in Headquarters Filled—In Other Stations, Too—Some Men Resisted.

The Police Department, aroused by the murder of one policeman and the probably mortal wounding of another by an Italian, set its whole machinery in motion last night to take into custody every Italian who could be found carrying concealed weapons. The dragnet was spread out over all of the principal Italian colonies in the buroughs, and early this morning more than 100 men were in police cells.

Nearly all of the detectives attached to Inspector McLaughlin's staff in the Detective Bureau were sent to the various Italian colonies in Manhattan and the Bronx, and at midnight nearly 100 Italians had been arrested on charges of carrying concealed weapons. The foreigners had either revolvers or stilettos in their pockets, and their weapons were taken to Headquarters and confiscated.

Following the report of the murder, which reached Commissioner Bingham's office yesterday afternoon, Inspector McLaughlin was summoned and he and the Commissioner formulated plans. All of the detectives available received orders to report at Headquarters early last night. They were sent out in squads of five to make the arrests.

The detectives went to saloons or restaurants that the Italians were known to frequent. Some of the detectives were disguised. They mingled with the crowds and those suspected of carrying weapons were picked out and their clothing searched. The detectives ran their hands about the men's hip pockets and then up and down their trousers.

Many Italians protested and resisted, but they were quickly overpowered. Following the finding of a weapon or a knife (and many of the latter were dangerous stilettos, their blades being several inches long) the Italians were lined up against a wall and held until the others in the place were searched. Many times the detectives were compelled to draw their revolvers and small clubs in order to prevent an outbreak.

All of the prisoners arrested in Manhattan were taken to Police Headquarters where the charges were made against them. The weapons found in their possession were placed on a long table and at midnight the array looked like an arsenal.

Before midnight all of the cells at Headquarters were filled with prisoners, and those arrested later were sent to near-by precincts. The foreigners were a bad-looking set of men, and according to the police, the evidence which was found in their possession is sufficient to send each of them to Blackwell's Island for six months.

Five men under eDtective Botti went to a saloon at 163 Mott Street. When the detectives started to search the men, several put up a fight. The detectives had difficulty in subduing them and were compelled to draw their own weapons. Six were made prisoners and the detectives confiscated five stilettos and one revolver.

While Detectives Dondero and Mondo were searching the crowds of Italians at Elizabeth and Houston Streets, Dondero began to question an old man. A man, who later proved to be a son of the man questioned, jumped at Dondero, drawing a knife with a four-inch blade from his pocket. Dondero drew his "billy," knocked the weapon from the Italian's hand, and took him to Headquarters. He was Antonio Leggettero of 207 Elizabeth Street.

All of the saloons and cafés in Mulberry Street and Elizabeth Street where members of the so-called "Black Hand" are to be found, and where their sympathizers meet, were searched by the detectives. Whenever arrests were made the detectives were obliged to hurry to the street with their prisoners to avoid violence at the hands of the crowds that assembled.

In Brooklyn, the Central Office men captured five armed Italians before midnight. All of these men were taken to the Central Office, in State street, and searched, and were then taken to the Adams Street Station for the night. Three revolvers and two knives were taken from the prisoners. One of the revolvers confiscated excited curiosity and admiration. It was a .44 Colt magazine gun of the latest model, mounted in silver.

Salvatore Governale, the Italian who shot and killed Patrolman Sechler, and seriously wounded Patrolman Sellick and another Italian named Charles Vincenzo on Sunday afternoon while fleeing from arrest, was committed to the Tombs yesterday morning, without bail, by Coroner Harburger, to await the inquest on April 23.

At St. Vincent's Hospital last night it was said that Patrolman Sellick had a very slight chance of recovery, although Dr. Bryant said that it was possible that the policeman's remarkable pluck might pull him through.

By advice of his counsel, Governale refused to answer all questions. He lives at 25 Cornelia Street and has been employed in an iron foundry in Fiftieth Street, Bayonne, N. J. He is unmarried, is twenty-five years old, and has a mother, four brothers, and two sisters living in the city.

A meeting of the officers and patrolmen of the Mercer Street Station (the Sixteenth Precinct) was held in the station house yesterday morning, and resolutions were adopted expressing deep sympathy for the death of Policeman George M. Sechler. Capt. Miles O'Reilly and all of the officers and men of the Mercer Street Station will contribute financially to aid the family of the policeman.

Commissioner Bingham, in discussing the death of Sechler, said that he was a brave man. "If I had the power," said the Commissioner, "I would have every man in the city searched for a revolver."

3-CENT FARE TOO LOW.

Cleveland Electric Railway Says It Is a Losing Venture.

CLEVELAND, April 15.—The Cleveland Electric Railway Company submitted a report to the City Council to-night stating that the operation of cars on Central and Quincy Avenues at a three-cent fare in accordance with the avowed policy of the city administration is a losing venture. These lines have been operated at the low rate following the expiration of the company's franchise, according to the ruling of the District and Supreme Courts of the United States.

The report stated in brief that the cost of carrying passengers on the lines indicated was in excess of 3 cents, and that the expense would not warrant a continuance of the test.

MRS. LEWIS-HILL'S GEMS SOLD

Total of $475,000 Realized at First Day's Sale.

Special Cablegram.
Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

LONDON, April 15.—The jewels left by Mrs. Lewis-Hill, widow of Sam Lewis, the money lender, sold to-day at Christie's for £94,800 ($475,000). The sensation of the sale came when the rope of pearls mentioned in my dispatch of Saturday was knocked down for £16,700; the pearl brilliant necklace brought £12,200, the tiara of brilliants £11,000.

Other notable items of the sale were a pearl rope of 183 gems, £7,300; a necklace of forty-five large pearls, £6,100; an emerald and brilliant brooch, £4,500; a pair of pearl earrings, £3,400; a necklace of 333 small pearls, £2,100; a brooch of brilliants, £1,820; a bar brooch of pearls and brilliants, £1,720; a muff chain of brilliants set in platinum, £1,450; a pair of bracelets of brilliants, £1,280; a tiara of brilliants, £1,200; a pair of earrings of bouton pearls, £1,180; a crescent brooch of brilliants, £1,040.

All the most important purchases were made by dealers, and though it was understood that several of them were buying on commission, it was impossible to ascertain for whom they bought. It was reported that the rope of pearls that brought the top price was going to America, but it was impossible to get confirmation of the report.

The sale of Mrs. Lewis-Hill's treasures continues through the week, but the most important of her jewels have already been sold. On Wednesday the silver plate will be disposed of, including a pair of candelabra weighing 443½ ounces.

WATER SHORT IN THE ENGINE

So the Morristown Fire Brigade Obligingly Pumps In a Supply.

Special to The New York Times.

MORRISTOWN, N. J., April 15.—When Engineer Peter Mowry ran his engine into Millburn last night at the Lackawanna station he discovered that there was not enough water in the boiler to last the engine out on its trip to Morristown. In fact, there was not enough to make sufficient steam to pull the engine up Summit Hill.

Mowry sat for a minute in his cab, wondering how he would be able to make the run. Then, telling his fireman he would soon be back, he disappeared. Soon the fire engines were heard coming toward the railroad station, with bells ringing wildly.

"Where's the fire?" yelled the firemen.

"It's this way," said Mowry. "My engine needs water to carry the passengers in these cars up to Summit and Morristown, and there ain't no water near the tracks, so I thought maybe you could run a line of hose up to her tank."

"Guess we can help you out," responded the Fire Chief.

A line of hose was stretched to the railroad station and water pumped into the engine tank.

DOG DYING OF GRIEF ON SHIP.

Bloodhound Mourns Loss of Capt. Staal of Steamer Kentucky.

"Mira," a bloodhound, is dying of a broken heart, so Capt. Orsted and the officers of the Scandinavian-American liner Kentucky declare, and the pressing question on board when the vessel reached her pier yesterday was what they could do for the animal. The dog was reared from a puppy by the late Capt. Staal and has been on the vessel ever since. The animal became greatly attached to the skipper, and never went ashore except to accompany his master. When Capt. Staal went to meals the dog waited for him outside the door, and when the Captain retired it was Mira's duty to guard his door.

On the last trip of the vessel to Copenhagen Capt. Staal was taken ill and on March 15 died. The dog missed her master and began a search of the vessel. From bridge to cabin and in every part of the vessel where the skipper had been accustomed to go the faithful animal hunted.

"It was just as though some one had told the dog that Capt. Staal was gone for good," said Capt. Orsted.

McCREA'S WALKING TRIP.

Pennsylvania Road President to Travel in England Afoot.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, April 15.—Discarding private cars and automobiles as being modes of conveyance which do not afford enough exercise, James McCrea, President of the Pennsylvania Railroad, is going to spend a vacation on foot. In less than a fortnight he will be somewhere in the British Isles with his sons, James K. and Archibald M., tramping from one place of interest to another on an energetic and healthful sight-seeing tour.

Mr. McCrea and his sons will sail from New York on Thursday on the Hamburg-American Line steamer Kaiserin Augusta Victoria. They plan to be back by the middle of next month, but may stay away longer.

FIVE DEAD IN WRECK.

Great Northern Officials Blame Wreckers for Derailment.

ST. PAUL, April 15.—Running at a speed of forty miles an hour on a straight track, the Great Northern westbound Oriental Limited, which left here for Pacific Coast points on Sunday morning, was derailed early to-day at Bartlett, N. D. Five persons were killed and a score or more injured. After the wreck a gas tank exploded and the train took fire, seven passenger coaches being destroyed.

It is believed that the rails had been tampered with. Officials of the road say that the track was in first-class condition a short time before the wreck.

Those killed were W. B. Jones, a mail clerk, and four unidentified foreigners, believed to be Greeks.

Mail Clerk Fodness entered the burning car three times to try to rescue Jones, and was severely burned about the head.

PERCY JANIS, ACTOR, VANISHES AT SEA

News Comes by Wireless to His Managers from the Minneapolis.

BROTHER OF ELSIE JANIS

Was to Play In "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" in London—Washed Overboard It's Thought.

Many theatrical people were disturbed late yesterday afternoon by news which reached the office of Liebler & Co. in a wireless telegraph message addressed to George M. Welty. The message read:

To Geo. M. Welty,
Liebler & Co., 1,402 Broadway.
Percy Janis disappeared. Probably fell overboard during night. Send some one to take his place by Majestic. Company send deep regrets. HUGH FORD.

The message was sent from the Atlantic Transport liner Minneapolis, via the Cunarder Carmania, to the wireless station at Halifax, Nova Scotia. Percy Janis, who is a brother of Elsie Janis, the musical comedy star, was a member of the company which is to produce "Mrs. Wiggs of the Cabbage Patch" at Terry's Theatre, London. He sailed with most of the other members of the organization on the Minneapolis last Saturday morning. He was cast for the rôle of Chris Hazy, the lame boy in the play, and had distinguished himself in the two preliminary performances of the company given out of town on April 10 and 11.

Mrs. Janis and her family, who are living now at the Hotel Marie Antoinette, were naturally overcome by the news. The only information they had was that sent to them from the office of the managers, Liebler & Co., under whose direction Elsie Janis closed her season in "The Vanderbilt Cup" on Saturday night. Every means was tried to reach the Minneapolis by wireless, but there seemed little chance of success with the vessel midway in her voyage.

Percy Janis left for England in high spirits, much elated at his first opportunity to play a genuine rôle, and in anything but a morose frame of mind. His family entertained no idea that his disappearance and probable death could be otherwise than accidental. The weather has been rough for the last few days, which increases the probability that the explanation of his being washed overboard may be correct.

The message sent by the manager of the company, notifying his superiors and asking for another man to be sent on the Majestic, which sails on Wednesday, must be regarded as authoritative. Mrs. Janis tried bravely to hope that there had been some mistake, explaining that the young fellow had been commended most carefully to the care of other and older members of the company.

The young actor, whose correct family name is Bierbower, was 22 years old. He was born in Indianapolis and had been on the stage about four years. He had hitherto always played with his sister, Elsie, except during an engagement in "The Strollers." He appeared with Elsie Janis in "The Little Duchess" and for two seasons was seen as the "Hotel Clerk" in "The Vanderbilt Cup." He was popular with all his associates and gave promise of becoming a good player.

At the offices of Liebler & Co. the news of Percy Janis's disappearance was considered to be final. The company which is to support Madge Carr Cook in London, has been singularly unfortunate in organizing. Most of the rôles were changed once or twice while the company was being formed, and the management congratulated itself when the organization was finally complete and the trial American performances had been satisfactorily given.

"Just before Mr. Ford left I 'joshed' him about his company," said one of the Liebler representatives. "I asked him if he were sure that he had the company all assembled and told him to be sure to lose none of them on the way. I never dreamed that such a thing as this could actually occur."

CRAZED MAN FLAGS TRAIN.

Switchman Reported Tracks Torn Up Near White Plains, but They Weren't.

New York Central passenger train No. 318 was speeding along just south of North White Plains Station on Sunday afternoon when the waving of a red flag ahead called for the emergency brakes, and the train came to a stop so quickly as to bring the passengers to their feet. When the crew got to the man who had flagged the train, they were startled by the information that a short distance ahead the tracks were torn up.

The man with the flag was Bernard Cereligh, a switchman employed at the Wakefield station, and was known to the trainmen. His story was not doubted at first, but a careful examination ahead failed to disclose any tampering with the rails.

The man was taken to White Plains and lodged in jail. His brother said yesterday that Bernard had been acting queerly. The prisoner will have a hearing this morning and will probably be put in the care of physicians for observation.

THIRD STOCK EXCHANGE.

New Department of the Produce Exchange Is Opened.

The members of the Produce Exchange gathered in force yesterday morning to watch the opening of the stock-trading department which had been in process of organization for several months. The general business of the Exchange was practically at a standstill while the members crowded around the space on the Bowling Green side of the big trading floor to watch the opening of the stock market.

Andrew J. Toomey, Chairman of the general committee on securities, formally started the ball rolling at 10 o'clock by a call for quotations. The traders quoted prices for about one-fifth of the list. The bid and asked prices were, however, widely at variance for the most part, and actual selling during the day was limited to 2,700 shares, all in the mining list. This trading was confined to four stocks, of which one sold 2,000 shares, one 500, and two others 100 each.

TRACKMAN SAVED FLYER.

Another Attempt to Wreck 18-Hour Pennsylvania Train at Canton.

Special to The New York Times.

CANTON, O., April 15.—A bold attempt to wreck the 18-hour flyer on the Pennsylvania Railroad was frustrated on Sunday night by a track walker. The train wreckers had placed a number of bent rails upon the track near this city, sufficient to cause a terrible wreck. The track walker removed the obstruction a few minutes before the flyer thunderer by. He said he saw several men concealed in the woods near by run away while he was removing the bent rails. He was unable to give a description of them.

The Pennsylvania officials kept the news quiet expecting to run down the would-be wreckers, but so far they have failed to obtain even the remotest clew. The news became known to-night through the activity of railroad detectives.

A fast Pennsylvania train was derailed by train-wreckers near Hudson west of here two weeks ago. No one was injured as the train was running slowly.

ANOTHER FIRE AT McGILL.

Medical College in Flames Early This Morning.

MONTREAL, Tuesday, April 16.—The medical building of the McGill University is on fire. It is the largest of the group of structures which comprise the university.

It is probable that the entire medical building will be destroyed. The loss will reach $500,000. There was no one in the building when the fire started.

The engineering building, given by Sir William McDonald at a cost of $750,000, was destroyed by fire last week.

AMATEUR FINDS A COMET.

University Telescope Verifies a Back-Yard Discovery in Wisconsin.

MADISON, Wis., April 15.—While standing in his back yard looking through a telescope, J. E. Mellish, an amateur astronomer at Cottage Grove, Wis., discovered a new comet on the night of April 13. His find was verified last night by Prof. G. C. Comstock and A. S. Flint of the University of Wisconsin Observatory.

ROCK FALLS IN TUNNEL.

One Man Dead, One Dying, and Another Hurt in Jersey City.

One Polish laborer late last night was killed, another is dying in the Jersey City Hospital, and a third escaped with slight bruises through the sudden fall of a large rock in the tunnel which the Lackawanna Railroad is constructing adjacent to that in present use under Bergen Hill. The rock fell as the night shift entered the tunnel after a blast.

LYNCHERS KILL EACH OTHER.

Were Firing After Negro Who Had Broken Away from Them.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, April 15.—A score or more of white men were taking a negro, charged with assault on a white woman, from the jail at Bunkie, La., last night, with the intention of lynching him, when the man broke away from them and, in the excitement, while the would-be lynchers were firing after the fugitive three of them were accidentally wounded, one fatally.

The negro made his escape and another mob is hunting for him.

BEAT A YEAR-OLD BABY.

Father Gets Six Months in Prison—Mother Found Child Unconscious.

YONKERS, N. Y., April 15.—John Volk was tried yesterday and quickly sentenced to six months in the penitentiary and a fine of $50 for beating in an unmerciful manner a thirteen-months-old child. The beating took place on Sunday, when Mrs. Volk was at church. On her return she found the child on the floor unconscious, its face and head covered with blood. She summoned Dr. Bohm and a police officer, and caused her husband's arrest.

BURGLAR WAS A DETECTIVE.

Dr. Thomas Thought Guard on His Roof Was a Thief and Called Help.

Crouched behind a chimney on the roof of the home of Dr. Allan M. Thomas, at 35 West Fifty-fourth Street, last night, waiting for burglars, Detective Charles McDonald of the East Fifty-first Street Station was found by four policemen, who had been sent out when two servant girls in Dr. Thomas's house reported to Police Headquarters that there was a man on the roof.

As it was, Detective McDonald called to the policemen, who got to the roof, in time to save himself. He had been detailed by Capt. Lantry to stay on the roofs of the houses.

AUTO TURNS UPSIDE DOWN.

Bookmaker Burke, Two Friends, and Chauffeur Hurt or Badly Shaken Up.

An automobile returning from the Aqueduct track late yesterday afternoon, in which were "Eddie" Burke, the bookmaker; Leo Mann, Leo Schwartz, and the chauffeur, George Dutton, lost a wheel on Thompson Avenue two miles out of Long Island City. After a side leap the machine turned turtle, throwing the occupants clear of the wreckage.

Leo Schwartz had a wrist broken and his knee injured, while Chauffeur Dutton had several ribs fractured. Both were taken in an automobile, that had come up behind, to St. John's Hospital, in Long Island City. Burke and Mann, though shaken up, were able to continue their trip in the machine of a friend.

BIG SQUADRON GATHERS.

Fourteen Battleships in Hampton Roads—Two Foreign Cruisers Arrive.

Special to The New York Times.

NORFOLK, Va., April 15.—Fourteen American battleships and the cruisers Brooklyn, Tacoma, and Washington are to-night anchored in Hampton Roads, awaiting the other vessels of the North Atlantic Squadron, which will receive the foreign warships at the Jamestown Exposition. Headed by the Louisiana, the flagship of Admiral Evans, the battleships steamed through the Virginia Capes and came to anchor opposite the Chamberlin Hotel.

The big vessels are in from the Caribbean Sea, where the Winter manoeuvres have been held. The cruisers, colliers, and torpedo boats and destroyers will soon arrive, and on April 26, when President Roosevelt opens the exposition, the United States will have forty-three war vessels of all classes in the Roads.

The cruiser Presidente Sarmiente of the Argentine Republic arrived to-day, following the German cruiser Bremen. The observer at Cape Henry mistook the Sarmiente for a Russian cruiser.

ROOSEVELT FOR A PEACE TREATY

President Urges International Arbitration in a Letter to Conference Here.

WANTS RIGHTEOUS PEACE

No Nation Can Bind Itself to Accept It Otherwise, He Declares.

OPENED BY CARNEGIE

Secretary Root, Gov. Hughes, and Mayor McClellan the Other Speakers at the Afternoon Session.

President Roosevelt's sentiments toward international peace are not altogether in accord with those of Andrew Carnegie, it developed at the opening session of the first National Arbitration and Peace Conference, held yesterday afternoon in Carnegie Hall. The President in a letter came out for peace, not at any price, but with righteousness, and later Mr. Carnegie, in his speech, said the two things were inseparable, and asked the audience to imagine the state of mind of a man who held otherwise.

In his letter the President decried disarmament as impractical, warned against flamboyant utterances, reviewed the many achievements of this country in the interests of peace, declared that the second Hague Conference could not accomplish all that the peace advocates hoped for, though it would be a step in the right direction, and suggested the limiting of the size of warships as a most practical means of diminishing the cost of naval armaments. He said he hoped to see an international treaty for arbitration, and considered this matter the most important that would come up at the conference. His message contained the following passage:

"First and foremost I beseech you to remember that, though it is our bounden duty to work for peace, yet it is even more our duty to work for righteousness and justice. It is 'righteousness that exalteth a nation,' and, though nominally peace is the handmaid of righteousness, yet, if they are ever at odds, it is righteousness whose cause we must espouse."

Mr. Carnegie, speaking at the close of the meeting, interpolated the following in his prepared speech:

"We often hear justice contrasted with arbitration. Arbitration is the essence of justice. What is the first principle of justice? Junius tells us the first principle of justice is that men shall not judge in their own cause. When a man refuses to submit his dispute to arbitration, he is unjust. We hear righteousness contrasted with peace. There can be no divorce between peace and righteousness. Imagine the condition of a man's mind when he insists that there can be. The man who assumes that he is right and insists in judging his own cause has not the proper sense of either justice or righteousness. It is the man who offers to submit his cause to an impartial tribunal that embraces 'that righteousness that exalteth a nation.' What could be more nearly perfect righteousness than 'Peace on earth, good-will toward men'"?

At the evening session Mr. Carnegie was still belligerent. He took issue with Prof. Hugo Munsterberg, who asserted that Germany's army was not a burden on her people, to the very apparent embarrassment of the professor.

A few minutes later Mr. Carnegie had something to say about "that man Stead," because Mr. Stead had stopped short in the middle of a sentence, his allotted time being up. The burden of Mr. Carnegie's remarks on this occasion was that Mr. Stead would talk all night if they would let him, and that, as he had been talking ever since he landed, it was thought well to limit him.

THE AFTERNOON SESSION.

Mayor, Gov. Hughes, Secretary Root, and Mr. Carnegie Speak.

The first regular deliberative session of the Peace Congress was held yesterday afternoon, after a reception to the delegates at the City Club. Carnegie Hall was filled from orchestra to topmost gallery, the majority of the audience being women and elderly men. The platform was occupied by the delegates and their friends, as were the rows of boxes. Andrew Carnegie called the meeting to order, and immediately introduced Mayor McClellan, who made a brief address of welcome, in which he said in part:

The Mayor's Address.

"I am exceedingly gratified to have this opportunity of meeting so many of you who have done, and are doing and will continue to do, so much for the purpose which you have met to further. That a movement for universal peace is considered seriously, that practical men believe that, in God's good time and in God's own way, it may come to fruition, is because of a new spirit that influences mankind.

"I am one of those who believe that the world was better yesterday than it was the day before, is better to-day than it was yesterday, and with God's blessing, will be better to-morrow than it is to-day. Mortal man is by instinct a fighting animal. Were he not so he would never have survived in the fierce struggle for existence, and would never have reached his present state of civilization. But fighting animal though he is, he realizes the advantages of peace, and as the world grows better he becomes more willing to hesitate before sacrificing peace for war. You can no more secure universal peace by resolution than you can make mankind perfect by act of Congress.

"It is not so much a matter of world importance what those taking part in international conferences agree to do or not to do, as it is whether or not after adjournment they really try to keep the peace.

"There is no Government on earth that is not influenced more or less by public opinion. If Governments are to be made to appreciate thoroughly the advantages of peace, then the peoples of the earth must be taught to appreciate its blessings. If the nations sincerely desire peace there is scarcely a difference that can arise among them that cannot be adjusted by peaceful arbitration. Your duty is to convince the world that man has a higher, nobler mission than to be forever at his brother's throat; that war should be resorted to only as a last desperate remedy for injustice and oppression. The task which you have set yourselves is to cultivate a spirit of sober common sense among men, which will cause them to think twice before going to extremes, and to hesitate before glorifying the war spirit.

"The people of this city have always been among the first to take up arms in defense of the flag when it has been in danger. But they believe that our country can best be served by a national policy so just and so righteous that the flag will never be assailed. Through me, their Mayor, they wish you godspeed upon your mission, and bid you welcome to their city."

The Mayor's speech was received with applause. Mr. Carnegie wasted no time, but announced that the Secretary would read a letter from the President. The letter was as follows:

President Roosevelt's Letter.

"White House, Washington, D. C., April 5, 1907.

"My Dear Mr. Carnegie:

"I much regret my inability to be present with you. Mr. Root will speak to you at length, and no man in the country is better fitted than he to address you on the subject you have so much at heart, for no man has in keener or more practical fashion, or with a nobler disinterestedness of purpose, used the National power to further what I believe to be the National purpose of bringing nearer the day when the peace of righteousness, the peace of justice, shall obtain among nations.

"In this letter of mine I can do little more than wish you and your association godspeed in your efforts. My sympathy with the purpose you have at heart is both strong and real, and by right of it I shall make to you some suggestions as to the practical method for accomplishing the ends we, all of us, have in view. First and foremost, I beseech you to remember that though it is our bounden duty to work for peace, yet it is even more our duty to work for righteousness and justice. It is "Righteousness that exalteth a nation," and though normally peace is the handmaid of righteousness, yet, if they are ever at odds, it is righteousness whose cause we must espouse. In the second place, I again earnestly ask that all good and earnest men who believe strongly in this cause, but who have not themselves to bear the responsibility of the soldier, the Nation's honor shall not, by insisting upon the impossible, put off the day when the possible can be accomplished. The peoples of the world have advanced unequally along the road that leads to justice and fair dealing, one with another, (exactly as there has been unequal progress in securing such justice by each within its own borders,) and the road stretches far ahead even of the most advanced. Hurry and not good, would result if the most advanced nations, those in which most freedom for the individual is combined with most efficiency in securing orderly justice as between individuals, should by agreement disarm and place themselves at the mercy of other peoples less advanced, of other peoples still in the stage of militarism or military despotism. Anything in the nature of general disarmament would do harm, and not good, if it left the civilized and peace-loving peoples, those with the highest standards of municipal and international obligation and duty, unable to check the other peoples who have no such standards, who acknowledged no such obligations.

"Finally, it behooves all of us to remember, and especially those of us who either make or listen to speeches, that there are few more mischievous things than the custom of uttering or applauding sentiments which represent mere oratory, and which are not, and cannot be, and have not been, translated from words into deeds. An impassioned oration about peace which includes an impassioned demand for something which the man who makes the demand either knows, or ought to know, cannot, as a matter of fact, be done, represents not gain, but loss, for the cause of peace, for even the noblest cause is marred by advocacy which is either insincere or foolish.

"These warnings that I have uttered do not mean that I believe we can do nothing to advance the cause of international peace. On the contrary, I believe that we can do much to advance it, provided only we act with sanity, with self-restraint, with power; which must be the prime qualities in the achievement of any reform. The nineteenth century saw, on the whole, a real and great advance in the standard of international conduct, but as among civilized nations and by strong nations toward weaker and more backward peoples. The twentieth century will, I believe, witness a much greater advance in the same direction. The United States has a right to speak on behalf of such a cause, and to ask that its course during the half dozen opening years of the century be accepted as a guarantee of the truth of its professions. During these six years we can conscientiously say that, without sacrificing our own rights, we have yet scrupulously respected the rights of all other peoples. With the great military nations of the world, alike in Europe and in that newest Asia, which is also the oldest, we have preserved a mutually self-respecting and kindly friendship. In the Philippine Islands we are training a people in the difficult art of self-government, with more success than those best acquainted with the facts had dared to hope. We are doing this because we have acted in a spirit of genuine disinterestedness of genuine and single-minded purpose to benefit the islanders—and, I may add, in a spirit wholly untainted by that silly sentimentality which is often more dangerous to both the subject and the object than downright iniquity.

Our Attitude Toward Cuba.

"In Panama we are successfully performing what is to be the greatest engineering feat of the ages, and while we are assuming the whole burden of the work, we have explicitly pledged ourselves that the use is to be free for all mankind. In the islands of the Caribbean we have interfered not as conquerors, but solely to avert the need of conquest. The United States Army is at this moment in Cuba, not as an act of war, but to restore Cuba to the position of a self-governing republic. With Santo Domingo we have just negotiated a treaty especially designed to prevent the need of any interference either by us or by any foreign nation with the internal affairs of the island, while at the same time securing to honest creditors their debts and to the Government of the islands an assured income, and giving to the islanders themselves the chance, if only they will take advantage of it, to achieve the internal peace they so sorely need. Mr. Root's trip through South America marked the knitting together in the bonds of self-respecting friendship of all the republics of this continent; it marked a step toward the creation among them of a community of public feeling which will tell for justice and peace throughout the Western Hemisphere. By the joint good offices of Mexico and ourselves, we averted one war in Central America, and did what we could to avert another, although we failed. We have more than once, while avoiding officious international meddling, shown our readiness to help other nations secure peace among themselves. A difficulty which we had with our friendly neighbor to the south of us, we solved by referring it to arbitration at The Hague. A difficulty which we had with our friendly neighbor to the north of us we solved by the agreement of a joint commission composed of representatives of the two peoples in interest. We try to avoid meddling in affairs that are not our concern, and yet to have our views heard where they will avail on behalf of fair-dealing and against cruelty and oppression. We have concluded certain arbitration treaties. I only regret that we have not concluded a larger number.

"Our representatives will go to the second Peace Conference at The Hague instructed to help in every practicable way to bring some steps nearer completion the great work which the first conference began. It is idle to expect that a task so tremendous can be settled by one or two conferences, and those who demand the impossible from such a conference not only prepare acute disappointment for themselves, but by arousing exaggerated and baseless hopes, which are certain to be disappointed, play the game of the very men who wish the conferences to accomplish nothing. It is not possible that the conference should go more than a certain distance further in the right direction. Yet I believe that it can make real progress on the road toward international justice, peace, and fair dealing. One of the questions, although not to my mind one of the most important, which will be brought before the conference will be that of the limitation of armaments. The United States, owing to its peculiar position, has a regular army so small as to be infinitesimal when compared to that of any other first-class power. But the circumstances which enable this to be so are peculiar to our case, and do not warrant us in assuming the offensive attitude of schoolmasters toward other nations. We are no longer enlarging our navy. We are simply keeping up its strength, very moderate, indeed, when compared with our wealth, population, and coast line; for the addition of one battleship a year barely enables us to make good the units which become obsolete. The most practicable step in diminishing the burden of expense caused by the increasing size of naval armaments would, I believe, be an agreement limiting the size of all ships hereafter to be built; but hitherto it has not proved possible to get other nations to agree with us on this point.

"More important than reducing the expense of the implements of war is the question of reducing the possible causes of war, which can most effectually be done by substituting other methods than war for the settlement of disputes. Of those other methods, the most important of which is now attainable, is arbitration. I do not believe that in the world as it actually is it is possible for any nation to agree to arbitrate all difficulties which may arise between itself and other nations, but I do believe that there can be at this time a very large increase in the classes of cases which it is agreed shall be arbitrated, and that provision can be made for greater facility and certainty of arbitration.

"I hope to see adopted a general arbitration treaty among the nations, and I hope to see The Hague Court greatly increased in power and permanency, and the Judges in particular made permanent and given adequate salaries, so as to make it increasingly probable that in each case that may come before them they will decide between the nations, great or small, exactly as a Judge within our own limits decides between the individuals, great or small, who come before him. Doubtless many other matters will be taken up at The Hague, but it seems to me that this of a general arbitration treaty is perhaps the most important.

"Again wishing you all good fortune in your work, sincerely yours,

"THEODORE ROOSEVELT."

Throughout the reading of the President's letter the great audience frequently applauded. At the close the applause was prolonged. Mr. Carnegie then introduced Secretary of State "Eli-hu" Root, as Mr. Carnegie pronounced it, with a broad "i" and a broad "u." He said that Mr. Root had been further north and further south than any other Secretary of State, and had become, not only the President's right hand, but did some head work as well, and had a great future before him.

Mr. Root said that in all countries there were two distinct and apparently inconsistent motives of National conduct, the ethical, altruistic, and human impulse and the utilitarian and practical motive. He continued in part:

Secretary Root's Speech.

"It is natural that the hard and practical motive shall be uppermost in the men engaged in the conduct of government; they are endowed with limited and definite powers and charged with specific trusts for the benefit of their own people; their duties are to protect and advance the interests of their own country, and those duties relate, in the main, to the material interests of their countrymen; their specific powers are given to them for that specific purpose; they have no warrant of attorney to express or give effect to the benevolent or humanitarian impulses of their constituents; under constitutional government, as a rule, such expression is not conferred by law upon public officers, but is reserved to the people. In the discharge of their international duties Governmental officers have to deal with a world of selfish competition and ever-present possibility of aggression and inquiry, which compel them to think first and chiefly of the interest of their own country as a lawyer argues the case of his client. They are constrained by the rules of conduct between nations which the experience of centuries has shown to be necessary to the peace of the world. Among the first of these is that the Government of each nation shall attend to its own business with the internal affairs of every other nation.

"It is natural that the altruistic and humanitarian view, broader and less immediately practical, shall be taken by students and thinkers, by teachers and philosophers, by men who, not burdened by the necessity of putting theories into practice, are at liberty to look upon the world as it ought to be and to urge mankind on toward acceptance of their ideals. These men are masters of their own power; they have a warrant from all whom their eloquence, their persuasion, their reasoning, or the inherent soundness of their ideas bring into agreement with them, to press their views upon the world and insist upon conformity.

Theory Opposed to Practice.

"It is inevitable that the men who are directed by these two widely differing impulses should sometimes be impatient of each other. The humanitarian is repelled by the hardness of the practical man. The practical administrator is distressed by the urgency of the theorist, who, ignorant of real conditions, urges him to a course of action which he knows cannot possibly be taken, or, if it were taken under existing conditions, would result only in evil.

"The American people are practical, material, strenuous in business, eager for wealth; energetic in production, and venturous in commerce; insistent upon their rights, proud of their country, jealous of its power and its prestige; but there is a stream of idealism in the American nature which saves our Nation from the grossness of sordid materialism and makes it responsive to every appeal in behalf of liberty and righteousness, of peace with justice and of human brotherhood the world over. No American Government could truly represent its people if it did not sympathize heartily with the purposes which this congress meets to promote; and the American Government of to-day does sympathize heartily with those purposes. In behalf of the Government I give you the kindly and appreciative greeting of the people of the United States and welcome you as spiritual kindred of those Americans of great heart and clear intelligence who in times past, striving for ordered liberty and the peace of justice in this land, have conferred inestimable benefits upon all mankind, and whose memory and example are our most precious possessions.

"The thoughts of all men who hope for the peace of the world are now turned toward the Second Peace Conference so soon to meet at The Hague. It is cheering to note the difference between the attitude of the world toward this conference about to meet and the way in which the world looked upon the First Conference at The Hague eight years ago.

"Upon the eve of the Second Conference, whose very possibility demonstrates the success and approves the wisdom of the First, it seems to me that all men who love their fellow-men and who hope for the rule of righteousness and peace on earth, should feel a deep sentiment of gratitude toward that sovereign whose noble character led him to call together the First Conference and an equally deep sympathy with him in the hard and difficult task in which he is now engaged of establishing Constitutional Government in his own dominions. The Second Conference is about to meet amid universal recognition that it is of practical significance; it commands respect; its possibilities are the subject of solicitude; the resolutions which it may reach are anticipated as of probable potency in the affairs of nations; it is not regarded as an occasion for mere academic discussion but finds its place among the agencies by which the world is governed. I cannot doubt that it will accomplish much for the benefit of mankind; that in many things it will bring the practice of nations into closer conformity with these great principles of conduct to which nations have accorded such ready assent in theory, but such reluctant compliance when their particular interests are involved. The First Conference relegated to a future conference the consideration of three broad general questions affecting the conduct of nations toward each other: First, the rights and duties of neutrals; second, the inviolability of private property in naval warfare; and third, the bombardment of towns, villages, and ports by a naval force. It is understood that all these subjects shall be considered at the Second Conference. The First Conference also adopted two resolutions relating to naval and military armament.

"The first was:

"The conference is of opinion that the restriction of military charges, which are at present a heavy burden on the world, is extremely desirable for the increase of the material and moral welfare of mankind.

"The second was:

"The conference expresses the wish that the Governments, taking into consideration the proposals made at the conference, may examine the possibility of an agreement as to the limitation of armed forces by land and sea and of war budgets.

"The Government of the United States has been of the opinion that the subject matter of these resolutions ought to be further considered and discussed in the Second Conference; that the subject is in the nature of unfinished business and cannot be ignored, but must be dealt with; that there ought to be at least an earnest effort to reach or to make progress toward reaching some agreement under which the enormous expenditure of money and the enormous withdrawal of men from productive industry for warlike purposes may be reduced or arrested or retarded.

The Advance of Civilization.

"Long-continued and persistent effort is always necessary to bring mankind into conformity with great ideals; every great advance that civilization has made on its road from savagery has been upon stepping-stones of failure, and a good fight bravely lost for a sound principle is always a victory.

"The Government of the United States has also considered that the Second Hague Conference might well agree in putting some limitation upon the use of force for the collection of ordinary contract debts due by one Government to the citizens of another.

"It has long been the established policy of the United States not to use its army and navy for the collection of such debts. We have not considered the use of force for such a purpose consistent with that respect for the independent sovereignty of other members of the family of nations which is the most important principle of international law and the chief protection of weak nations against oppression. It seems to us that the practice is injurious in its general effect upon relations of nations and upon welfare of weak and disordered States.

"In the general field of arbitration we are surely justified in hoping for a substantial advance, both as to scope and effectiveness. It has seemed to me that the great obstacles to the universal adoption of arbitration is not the unwillingness of civilized nations to submit their demands to the decision of an impartial tribunal; it is rather an apprehension that the tribunal selected will not be impartial.

"What we need for the further development of arbitration is the substitution of judicial action for diplomatic action, the substitution of judicial sense of responsibility for diplomatic sense of responsibility. We need for arbitration judges who will be interested only in the question appearing upon the record before them. Plainly this end is to be attained by the establishment of a court of permanent judges who will have no other occupation and no other interest but the exercise of the judicial faculty under the sanction of that high sense of responsibility.

"Let me add a few words of warning concerning your anticipations of what the Second Peace Conference is to do. Do not expect too much for it.

"It is an essential characteristic of such a conference that it shall deal not with matters upon which the nations differ, but with matters upon which the nations agree. The moment an attempt is made to give such a conference any coercive effect, the moment any number of nations endeavor to use the conference for the purpose of compelling any other nation to do what it deems inconsistent with its interests, that moment the conference fails. Such a conference is an agency of peace, not the peace of conquest, but the peace of agreement; not enforced agreement, but willing and cheerful agreement. So far as the nations can go together in such an agreement, the conference can go, and no further.

"Many lovers of their kind will be sadly disappointed because The Hague Conference of 1907 does not realize their dreams and usher in 'the parliament of man, the federation of the world.' But let them take heart; a forward step will be taken, an advance will be made toward the reign of peace and justice and righteousness among men, and that advance will go just so far as the character of the great mass of civilized men permits. There lies the true measure of possibility and the true origin of reforming force. Arbitration and mediation, treaties and conventions, peace resolutions, declarations of principle, speeches and writings, are as naught unless they truly represent and find a response in the hearts and minds of the multitude of the men, whose desires and impulses determine the issue of peace and war.

"The end toward which this assemblage strives—the peace of the world—will be attained just as rapidly as the millions of the earth's peoples learn to love peace and abhor war; to love justice and hate wrongdoing; to be considerate in their judgment and kindly in feeling toward aliens as toward their own friends and neighbors, and to desire that their own countries shall regard the rights of others rather than be grasping and over-reaching. The path to universal peace is not through reason or intellectual appreciation, but through the development of peace-loving and peace-keeping character among men. The greatest benefit of the Peace Conference of 1907 will be, as was that of the Peace Conference of 1899, in the fact of the conference itself; in its powerful influence molding the characters of men; in the spectacle of all the great powers of the earth meeting in the name of peace, and exalting as worthy of honor and desire, national self-control, considerate judgment, and willingness to do justice." [Great applause.]

When Mr. Carnegie reminded those present that there were two kinds of politicians, those who sought office and those whom the office sought, and introduced Gov. Hughes, the applause was more loud and more prolonged than it had been at any time previous. So long did the hand-clapping continue that Mr. Carnegie shouted: "Have mercy on him; have mercy on the Governor." The answer to this was a cheer, the first of the day.

Gov. Hughes's Address.

Mr. Hughes began by saying it was fitting that the congress should be held in this State, representing to such a degree the activities of peace, and in a city whose citizens had done so much for the cause. Then he spoke in praise of Mr. Roosevelt:

"You will not think it amiss if I claim for this roll of honor the foremost citizen of the Nation, whose Federal activities have not obscured his relationship to his native State and the lustre of whose fame as President of the Republic has been heightened by his service as pacificator. And New York has also given to the Nation the eminent public servant who has addressed you, the keeper of our foreign interests in whose wise diplomacy every citizen is assured of the astute and jealous defense of our peaceful policies. We may also claim by right of his adoption the presiding genius of this congress, whose personal interest and generous benefactions have contributed so notably to the progress of this world-movement."

After speaking of the New Yorkers who had attended the first Hague Conference, he continued in part:

"There are few, if any, to plead the cause of war in general, however it may be defended in particular. Statesmen and soldiers alike condemn it, and against its monstrous cruelties and wastefulness commerce and sentiment are allied. The necessity of war as a last defense of liberty and honor is admitted only to be deprecated, and in the desire to prevent armed strife there is almost complete unanimity. There may still be those who believe in the beneficent effects of the discipline of war and who shrink from contemplating a society enervated by exclusive devotion to the pursuits of peace. Undoubtedly benefits have been conferred by war. Against the dark background of ruin, desolation, and death, the elemental virtues of humanity have stood out in bold relief. And aside from the important and beneficial results of certain wars, the world has largely learned its lessons of courage and fortitude; of the supremacy of duty and the sacred obligations of honor from those who, in fierce but heroic struggle, have revealed the noblest qualities of humanity. 'He maketh the wrath of man to praise Him.'

"But while we justly appraise these consequences of past conflicts, we also know well their cost, and we keenly appreciate the frightful evils and the enormous wastes which have been incident to the evolution of the race through strife. We rejoice that the currents of progress lead to peace and that the time will come, although it may be distant, when war will be unthinkable.

"We can no longer look to war for the development of either National or individual character. The heroics of war have been replaced by mathematical calculations. If it was ever anything else, it is now unmitigated horror exhibiting chiefly fiendish aspects of ingenuity and scientific skill in destruction. Under our modern conditions of civilization the supposed beneficent results of war in the development of courage and stamina must in any conceivable event be shared by so few of our teeming populations that even the most sanguinary must realize that the time has gone by when by any stretch of imagination it can be regarded as a general disciplinary agent. And in the controversies of peace and in the bloodless struggles for the maintenance of truth and justice in our personal and civic relations must be found the arena of the future in which character may find severer tests than ever were afforded by historic battlefield.

"In working for the interests of peace regard may well be had to the influences which have thus far proved so successful. The end is not to be sought through coercion, or by the vain attempt to compel peace by force, but by extending to the utmost provisions for deliberation and for conciliatory measures.

"The security of peace lies in the desire of the people for peace. Protection against war can best be found in the reiterated expression of that desire throughout the nations of the earth, and by convening their representatives in frequent assemblies. Provision for stated meetings of

The first horizontal piano was made by Christofori, an Italian, in 1709. In its evolution is seen the Grand piano of to-day.

The first vertical piano was made by Hawkins, an Englishman, in 1800, and from it was developed the modern upright.

To perfect the first has taken almost 200 years, and for the other over 100 years.

For almost 50 of those years during the period of piano evolution Kranich & Bach have been leaders among the piano makers of America—where the best pianos are acknowledged to be made.

To-day among their other exclusive improvements Kranich & Bach Grands are fitted with the marvelous "ISOTONIC" Pedal and Uprights contain the Spiral Spring Adjustment and have earned for these instruments the title

SUPREME IN THE CLASS OF HIGHEST GRADE

Kranich & Bach pianos guarantee the highest gratification because they are not only distinctive but exclusive in the possession of features that assure the perfection of artistic appearance, tone quality and greatest durability, and our convenient monthly instalment terms place these superb instruments within the limits of a modest income.

A Help for Stenographers

Not a Substitute

THE Stenographer who does not understand what an Edison Commercial System is, looks upon it with suspicion. She thinks because it eliminates shorthand, it eliminates her. On the contrary, it enables her to do more and better work with less effort and thus makes her more valuable to her employer.

The Edison Business Phonograph, used in connection with the Edison Commercial System, is merely a business short-cut. It lightens the Stenographer's burden by dividing the work more equally. It makes business more smooth, more swift and more accurate.

ROOSEVELT FOR PEACE TREATY

the Peace Conference with their opportunities for interchanges of official opinion, the perfecting of plans for submissions to arbitration, and the improvement of the machinery of the international court indicate the lines along which substantial progress may be made.

"The people of the State of New York, cordial in their welcome to the delegates to this congress, will watch its deliberations with sympathetic interest, earnestly desirous that through these meetings the united sentiment of the United States may find effective expression."

Mr. Carnegie's Address.

Mr. Carnegie made the last speech of the session. He said, in part:

"We believe the psychological moment approaches when a decided step forward can be made. Personally, I am a convert to the League of Peace idea—the formation of an international police, never for aggression, always for protection, to the peace of the civilized world. It requires only the agreement of a sufficient number of nations to establish this. Since the civilized world is now united by electric bonds into one body in constant and instant communication, it is largely interdependent and rapidly becomig more so. War now involves the interests of all, and therefore one nation has no longer a right to break the peace without reference to others. Nations hereafter should be asked to remember this, and not to resort to war, but to settle their disputes peacefully.

"Leaving out of sight material interests, the savagery of war, from a moral and religious point of view, cries aloud to civilized man and rouees him to the firm resolve that it shall disgrace our civilization no longer. War never settties who is right, but who is wrong. Might, not right, eonquers.

"Before resorting to force it would be well to begin by proclaiming non-intercourse with the offending nation. No exchange of products, no loans, no military or naval supplies, no mails—these restrictions would serve ae a solemn warning and probably prove efective. Force should always be the last resort, but it should be the last."

Then, efter reviewing the work of the first Hague Conference, Mr. Carnegie said it had proved that international peace was far from being a mere dream, and that it lay in the power of one man to form a League of Peace composed of different nations, at the next meeting of The Hague Tribunal. He continued:

"Perhaps our President may yet have that part to play. He seems born for great rôics in the world drama. He it was who breathed the breath of life into The Hague Conference by sending five leading powers to it for the settlement of their disputes; who closed the war between Russia and Japan. Would that the great peacemaker of the future might be Theodore Roosevelt! Man of many triumphs, this last would life him to the highest place in history. He le a bold man who ventures to forecast or limit the horoscope of Theodore Roosevelt.

Kaiser's Influence for Peace.

"At this moment, however, it is not in his hands but in those of the Emperor of Germany, alone of all men, that the power to abolish war seems to rest. His invitation to form a union of nations for this specific purpose would result in more than six nations gladly responding to his call. And, as in the temporary league of nations in China, so in this grander league, a German General would again rightfully command the allied forces. Much has been written and said of the Emperor as a menace to the peace of Europe, but, I think, unjustly. Let me remind you, he has been nearly, twenty years on the throne, and, so far, is guiltless of the shedding of blood. No International war can be charged to him. His sin hereafter may be one of omission, since having been intrueted with power to abolish war, he failed to rise to this transcendent duty. Le us watch this possible man of destiny, however, and hope that a vision of his true mission may be revealed to him. A higher no man ever hed, if ever one even approached it in beneficence. Were that destiny revealed I, for one, believe he would fulfill it. I cannot see how a mortal man could resist the divine call to perform a service so glorious. There are no victories like those of peace."

It was at the close of his speech that Mr. Carnegie interpolated the remarks about righteousness which apparently referred to the President's letter.

One man in the audience occupied a seat at the reporters' table. He had the misfortune to arrive late, and the only seat available was on the extreme end. It transpired that he was very deaf, and before the proceedings began he brought out a pocket telephone arrangement, consisting of a black box, a lot of wire, and a receiver. He amused the audience by putting the box directly beneath the speaker's desk and stringing the wire to his seat.

In the session one men fainted. He was George Richardson of 328 West Fifty-seventh Street. As he was standing in one of the side aisles, he was carried from the hall without disturbing the rest of the audience. He was taken to an anteroom, where he was revived by a physician, after which he went home.

THE EVENING MEETING.

Carnegie Contradicts Munsterberg and Cuts Stead Short.

The evening session, the second of the congress, was remarkable for several things. William Jennings Bryan was present and received an ovation when he appeared on the platform. Probably second in importance was the assertion of Prof. Hugo Munsterberg that Germany was as peaceful a nation as there was on the face of the earth, and that the American railroads had killed more people than war had. He said, too, that Germany's army was not a burden to her people, and to this utterance Mr. Carnegie, when the professor had concluded, took violent exception.

There was also a passage at arms between Mr. Carnegie and William T. Stead of London, which showed that while Mr. Stead is recognized as a peace advocate by those at the head of the present movement, he is regarded as an overactive one.

The season opened with the taking of a flashlight picture of those on the platform the "heads of the peace movement in two countries," Mr. Carnegie and the Baron d'Estournelles standing in the centre of the stage. Mr. Carnegie then introduced the Baron as an "international man."

Suffering from a bsd cold, the Baron could not be heard clearly. He began in French, es is his custom, and then changed to English. He said that "L. I. U." Root, as he pronounced it, had said all he had intended to say, and he declared that while it was true that Europe had created a new world, the new world wes now to pay its debts and regenerate Europe.

Baron de Constant's Speech.

Baron d'Estournelles de Constant continued in part:

"We ell expect a great deal from the coming Hague Conference, but what does a 'great deal' mean? Perpetual, universal peace, diearmament? No; nothing, alae! of that kind. Progress goes only step by step; all what we want for the preeent time is a new etep forward, knowing that many other steps will be the work of the future; so many that we cannot even foresee them.

"If we expect too much from the coming conference, its work will appear as a failure, as a fiasco, even if it is a real progress. We must see clearly, not what we would like to do, but what can be done, and do it. Other generations, other conferences will follow with new aims, new success.

"For the present yeer the Hague Conference can take up, besides the regulation of private property and other special questions, first, development of arbitration; second, general affirmation of the necessity for all nations not to increase their armaments, and, third, organization of conciliation.

"I do not speak of another branch of its activity—the amelioration of the conditions of war. I believe only in amelioration of peace. I believe the worse war appears, the better it is. When we try to 'humanize war,' as we say, we simply dissimulate its horrors.

Arbitration the solution.

"The development of international justice is easy. Arbitration must be applied to as many casee as possible and become more and more the normal solution. hTat is the principal the most urgent progress to realize.

"The limitation of armaments will follow as a consequence of the progress of arbitration, but it is not useless to discuss the question, though it may not come at The Hague Conference. The more the people understand that the burdens of armed peace are voluntary burdens, the more they will feel the necessity of a better organization to gt rid of them. But it would be the greatest of illusions to believe that the coming Hague Conference may settle the question of limtation of armaments. All that it can do will be to insiet upon the necessity of preparing for the soution.

"As for the conciliation, this is entirely new. It is very well to settle by arbitration the difficulties when they arise; it would be still better to prevent them beforo they arise. But this requires a careful and complex organization in all countries, beginning by the most civilized and the most liberal of them. Until now admirable efforts have been directed toward that end, nnmely, the aetion of the interparliamentary Union and other international essociations or administrtions; but these efforts want to be united and strengthened by public opinion as well as by the Governments.

"If The Hague Conference practically generalizes arbitration, advises limitation of armaments, and paves the way for international conciliation its work will be a progress as great as was the work of the First Conference.

"I declare that I feel eure of the success of the coming Hague Conference; I believe in the irresistible force of puolic opinion educated as it is tow snd as it will be more and more every day. After a manifestation like this, after such a powerful affirmation of your devotion to the service of civilization, it is impossible not to believe in the future, with American help."

Mr. Carnegie epoke in praise of Oscar S. Straus, whom he introduced next. Mr. Straus devoted his time to praise of the recipient of the Nobel Peace Prize and to a contention that as eoon as the natione determined that they wanted peace, disarmament would follow as a natural consequence.

Mr. Straus said in part:

Secretary Straus's Speech.

"On the 10th of December last the committee eleeted by the Norwegian Storthing, under the will of Alfred Bernhard Nobel, for the distribution of the Peace Prize, 'to be awarded to the person who shall have most or best promoted the fraternity of nations and the abolishment or iminution of standing armies and the formntion and increase of peace congresses,' awarded its prize to Theodore Roosevelt, President of the United States. The peoplo throughout this country and from one end of the world to the other applaudingly approved the selection. They recognized that he first, among Presidents, Kings, and Emperors, opened the doors of The Hague Tribunal; that he, through his tectful initiative and mediation, brought about peace between Japan and Russia, and that he was the first to summon the second great peace congress, and in the interest of international good-will resigned the high privilege to the Czar of Russia. Thrice did he deserve the gratitude of the peace-loving world and thrice justified the award of the Norwegian Storthing.

"Fully as important as peace among nations is peace within nations. People who are subjected to unreasonable restrictions upon 'life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness,' and who are compelled to live under such conditions that they cannot earn their daily bread, beeome revolutionary. He who had intervened and brought about an equitable adjustment in the greatest industrial etruggle of modern times—the anthracite coal strike—dedicated the Nobel Peace Prize to the promotion oi industrial peace, and by an act of Congress, approved March 2 last, this Foundation for the Promotion of Industrial Peace was made perpetual, with the purpose of aiding the industrial forces to arrive at a peaceful adjustment of their reciprocal rights on a basis of humanity and justice. In Theodore Roosevelt are united the historical foresight of a Jefferson with the humane consideration of a Lincoln for the welfare of the masses. He is ever as watchful to protect the poor man as well as the rich man in his rights as he is to restrain them from commiting wrong.

International Morality.

"Equally important, if not more so, than the limitations of armaments is to raise the standards of international morality. Let the nations exact the same standard from one another as they exact from their own subjects, substitute international morality for international expediency, and they will have instead of the arbitrament of war the arbitrament of law. The first step to this end is to enlarge and expand the laws of neutral obligations. Why should a nation be permitted to go to war to collect a debt at the mouth of a cannon when that same nation will not allow its own suojects to collect debts from one another with swords and pistols? The Drago Doctrine is in the interest of international morality. The casuistry of international pettifogism has whittled down the principles of international law. Neutral rights have been expanded in the interest of greed, and neutral obligations have been cramped and distorted so that as the law stands now neutral nations may not sell ships of war nnd arms to belligerents, but the subjects of neutral nations may. Neutral nations may not grant loans and subsidies to belligerents, but the banker subjects of neutral nations may.

"The true end of every great and free people should be self-respecting peace. Probably no other great nation of the world is so anxious for peace as we are. These are the sentiments of President Roosevelt in his message to the Fifty-seventh Congress. The argument that war will kill war is about as sane as to claim that contagion will cure disease. The best guarantee for peace is peace, and the very fact that behind the world's diplomacy stand ever open the doors of The Hague Tribunal, whose permanent mission—the peaceful adjustment of international differences—cannot fail to have an ever-increasing voice in the Chancelleries of nations and in elevating the international morality of the civilized nations of the world."

Prof. Munsterberg was the next speaker, and his address was received with much applause, the speaker being frequently interrupted. The burden of his talk was that Germany had been much misrepresented, and that the German Emperor was one of the most peaceful sovereigns of the world. Referring to the peace movement, he said in part:

Prof. Munsterberg's Address.

"To support a movement ought to mean, first of all, to remove from it all misunderstandings and all illusions, inasmuch as every illusion must ultimately work as an obstacle to real progress. I therefore feel it as my duty to point first to some mistaken nrguments by which the missionaries of the peace movement too often weaken their influenee on the German Nation. I know, of course, that every word of this kind must be unpopular; yet I say it frankly at once: the German Armv is not felt by the nation as a disagreeable burden. On the contrary, the years in the army constitute a national school time which keeps body and soul in strength and vigor. The years in the army are a time of pride for the overwhelming mass of the German people. In the same way, it is not true that the material sacrifice has becomo too exorbitant. Germany is prosperous to-day and the expenses of the army are felt by the nation hardly more than fire insurance is felt by a good householder. Nor does the time lost through the years of service much impair the national economy in a country whose population grows so rapidly. And even if it ever came to war, the mere question of loss of property and life would not count overmuch. Disease and even recklessness kill many more in the midst of hopeful life. American railroads have brought more avoidable injury and death than American cannons, and the progress of German pathology through the work of Virchow, Koch, Behring, &c., has saved more livee than the avoidance of the last wars could have done.

"Such materialistic arguments must remain ever ineffective if the eore of the German nation is to be reached. For the best Germans it is entirely a moral question, as it was with Kant. To the German war seems like a disease which threatens life, but with Schiller, he feels that life is not the greatest of all goods, and that the greatest of all evils is unrighteousnse. If these idealistic convictions of the German soul were better understood the friends of peace would be much better able to put the lever on the right epot instead of losing ground by useless appeals to merely utilitarian motives.

Germany—A Friend of Peace.

"But just because war and peace are for the soul of the German nation first of all an ethical problem, it is utterly absurd to be suspicious of German motives and to look to Germany as a posible source of danger to the peace of the world. Mr. President, I do not hesitate to claim that there is no firmer bulwark of peace than the good will and sincerity of the whole German nation, and there is no more reckless and more inexcusable menace to peace than the foolish denunciation of German motives which abounde in the newepapers and assemblies of many lands, and of America not least. Unfair rumors are easily started, and denials follow slowly and clumsily; Mr. President, we need a simplified denying board. I said the central motive of Germany's desire not to disturb the peace ie her strong will for righteousness, but let us not forget that even if that were lacking there is nothing which might spur the German mind to an avoidable war.

"Whoever has the hallucination of secret disturbing plans brooding in Germany falsifies history and endangers the future.

"It does not follow that every one in Germany is enthusiastic overevery scheme of arbitration, although the movement for international arbitration has a daily growing body of warm supporters in Germany. There lurks still the instinctive feeling in some German quarters that it is impossible to give an international court the same degree of impartiality which we expect from a civil Judge; the interests of all nations are too much interwoven; the Judge is always to a certain degree a party. The forcing of the iesue to arbitration sometimes suggests, therefore, the suspioion of selfish politics. Not everybody desires, moreover, for patriotic conflicts the aris of wrangling attorneys and of dissenting experts who may have to decide whether or not there was a national brainstorm going on. The Germans feel, therefore, that there is one way still better than to arbitrate in quarrels, namely, to avoid quarrels from the start.

"The spirit of this new Germany which longs to work and not to quarrel, has found its highest symbol in the genius on the empire's throne. How did the prejudices of the world denounce him as the war lord of our time, and how has he shown in firmness and strength that his reign is the most powerful influence for peace and international friendship! This country knows the story; this country knows how the Emperor sent here his brother and his friends, sent scholars and artists, sent sporting yachts and museum treasures, and the only warship to go to the peaceful celebration of Jamestown. It is high time to drown the wicked prejudices if the world could see at last the true spirit of Germany, freed from all willful distortion, a mighty step forward would be secured in your holy movement. Yes, if a sculptor were to create to-day a statue of the Goddess of Peace, he might safely choose as his model fair Germania, with the Emperor's crown on her head, with a pure sword in her hand, and with mild eyes calmly looking on a serious yet happy nation of laborers who work for the eternal good of peaoeful civilization."

When the profeesor had concluded and the applause had ceased, Mr. Carnegie reiterated his statement of the afternoon that it was possible for one man to bring about world-wide peace and that that one man might be the German Emperor. In the afternoon he had hoped it would be President Roosevelt. Continuing, Mr. Carnegie said:

Carnegie's Reply to Munsterberg.

"I must take exception to the Professor's statement that the armies of Germany are not a burden on her people. I would like to take him to the mills at Pittsburg and have him ask the thousands of Germans there why they left their German homes and came to this country. [Applause.] When I started in business I had a German partner. I have had many German partners, many of whom are millionaires now. I have said to them: 'Why did you leave Germany?' And the reply has always been: 'I have two boys in my family and I would not have them in the barracks.'

"It is said that we are taking the best blood out of Germany—more and more every year. That is perfectly true, and the German Army is responsible for it. It is too late for the professor to teach me anything on that subject. Against his theory I give you facts."

Mr. Carnegie then introduced Dr. Rickards, founder of the first peace society in this city. As the ironmaster sat down Prof. Munsterberg, who had the next chair, leaned over and talked to him rather excitedly. The professor was red in the face and evidently very ill at ease, having no chance to reply to Mr. Car-

Raincoats for Men

$15.00 to $35.00

Should it rain every day—or even if it never rain—you can find splendid use for one of these coats. Because they are Top Coats, as well.

Unlike the average "Raincoat," these garments are not made of dreary fabrics—neither are they fashioned along dismal lines.

Instead, they reveal an inherent style and quality very unlike others of their kind. Shown in varied models and fabrics to suit all tastes—and at prices neither too high nor too low.

We promise many surprises for the man who affects to believe that a Raincoat cannot be presentable as well as dependable.

negie. The latter shook his head at all the professor said and shrugged his shoulders.

Founder of First Peace Society.

Dr. Riekards, although a German, differed from Prof. Muusterberg and said soldiers were never implements of peace and that a soldier who did not like fighting was almost unknown. He said that "if this National Congress had any sense at all," it would instruct the authorities at Washington to have the delegates to The Hague lead and not follow, and try and persuade the English delegates, the only ones opposed to peace, to drop their opposition.

He said, too, that President Roosevelt had failed to bring about peace between Russia and Japan, and it was not until he had called upon the German Emperor and the latter had used his good offices that an agreement was finally reached.

Mr. Stead was next introduced, and he spoke, from preference, from the rear of the platform. He told the audience that he had been allowed ten minutes, and then talked very fast. He said he represented no Government; never had, and hoped he never would. He spoke for the people, and was going to join hands with his countrymen and try to make the next Hague Conference as successful as the first, which had succeeded simply because the United States and Great Britain stood side by side.

He was glad to have heard Prof. Munsterberg and agreed with much that he said. Nevertheless, twelve months ago every Frenchman looked at his paper in the morning fearing that the "peace-loving Emperor" had launched his indomitable army across the French frontier.

He said the word "disarmament" sould never be used at a peace conference. No Government in the world, especially his own, was going to run its head into a stone wall, not even to the extent of disarming one soldier. He suggested, however, that an agreement limiting armaments to their present maximum for five years might be reached between the nations.

Just then some one pulled Mr. Stead's coat tails and he sat down, exclaiming, "My time is up!"

"Go on!" shouted the audience, and there was long and loud applause and cries of "Stead!" Mr. Carnegie finally made himself heard.

"That man Stead could keep you here an hour. He has been speaking ever since he landed, and some of us, careful of his health, have been thoughtful enough to limit him."

There were more cries for "Stead!" and the editor got in a word:

"I always obey the decisions of the Chair, but I will say to Mr. Carnegie that he shouldn't play it so low down on me as to limit my time of speaking and then put it down to my health. All I have to say is that if you want to hear more from me I'll wait till the other speakers are through and then talk as long as you want.

Mr. Carnegie, when the tremendous applause had subsided, said it was best to have a little variety, and introduced Sir Robert Cranston, who spoke very briefly, as did "Maartens Maartens," the Dutch author. These two were followed by Sir Robert Ball, who spoke first of the Darwinian theory.

Sir Robert Ball's Address.

Sir Robert Ball said in part:

"Do you, my friends, suppose that all your five million ancestors were estimable and worthy men of peace, or, rather, shall we say creatures of peace, diffusing nothing but beneficent love and kindness all around them; creatures who after a long life devoted to the pursuit of every virtue at last closed their eyes in their beds amid the affectionate sobs of a family circle?

"Shall I tell you the truth about your ancestors or mine? It is just this: Out of every thousand of them nine hundred and ninety-nine passed their lives in trying to kill other creatures or trying to avoid being killed themselves. Battle and murder, treachery and assassination, sudden and often cruel death cut short their lives. The close of their careers was anything but the beautiful scene I endeavored to indicate. They did not die peaceably in their beds. I cannot indeed say they died in their boots. They did not wear boots. If they had done so they would have wanted two pairs at the same time. Such was, I have no doubt, the fate of nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand of my ancestors. I have the profoundest respect and admiration for them all, for all—that is to say, except the odd one of the thousand, who was evidently some poor, mean-spirited creature.

"War by day and war by night has been incessant for all those millions of generations. What has been the result of that war? The result has been the survival of the fittest, the creation of man, rational man himself. No one in this room would have been as intelligent as a jolly-fish if it had not been for that warfare, incessantly waged for hundreds of millions of years.

"War, stern, ruthless war—war where no quarter is given. War where the weak are exterminated, hideously cruel war. War with no mitigating spark of chivalry—in a word, natural war, which has been essential to the evolution from which man has ascended.

"The warfare of civilized man is conducted according to the principles of chivalry. The non-combatants are not to be slaughtered. Their weakness is their protection. Civilized man for his warfare picks out all his strongest and best men, exposes them to all the risks of conflict while the weaker man is protected. Thus the race is not improved, it is deteriorated by warfare as conducted by civilized man. The conclusion, now, is obvious. By the natural warfare the human race has been created. The chivalrous warfare is conducted on principles quite wrong from the doctrine of the survival of the fittest. If, therefore, civilized man now conducts war it is against nature. The human race must pay the penalty. The moral law forbids us to purchase future improvement of the human race at the appalling price demanded by natural warfare. With no less force does the policy of nations demand that chivalrous war must cease, as by its means the human race will infallibly deteriorate."

It was anticipated that after this Mr. Stead would get a chance. It was very late, however, and the audience was tired. Mr. Carnegie introduced Mr. Bryan, who spoke a few words, mentioning that he had to speak again on Wednesday, and then gave way, as he thought, to Mr. Stead.

It was not to be, however, for the Secretary was introduced next and told of the messages received from foreign countries. There were telegrams from the King of Italy, the President of the Swiss Confederacy, the King of Norway, President Diaz, and many others.

After this there were loud cries for Stead, but they died out when the editor bowed several times and started to put on his overcoat. Impartial observers expressed the opinion that Mr. Carnegie had won the day, but expressed their intention of watching Mr. Stead in future.

TO-DAY'S PROGRAMME.

Five Regular Sessions Scheduled—Three Receptions.

This will be the busiest day for the delegates attending the Peace Congress. Five regular sessions are scheduled, as well as a conference and three receptions. If any of the delegates succeed in attending all the arranged functions they will be kept very busy indeed.

There will be a regular session devoted to "The Relation of Women to the Peace Movement" at Carnegie Hall at 10:30 o'clock, Mrs. Anna G. Spencer presiding. Mrs. Julia Ward Howe and Mrs. May Wright Sewall will be guests of honor, and a programme of music, to be rendered by the St. Cecilia Society and the Wednesday Morning Singing Club, has been arranged. Among the speakers will be Mrs. Lucia A. Mead, Mrs. Ellen M. Henrotin, Miss Mary E. Wooley, Mrs. Frederick Nathan, Miss Jane Addams, Sir Edward Elgar, and Mr. William Archer.

At 3 o'clock there will be another session at the Hotel Astor, addressed by Baron d'Estournelles Constant, Oscar S. Straus, James W. Van Cleve, Nahum Bachelder, John Barrett, Edwin Ginn, and William McCarroll. The subject for the meeting is "Commercial and Industrial Aspects of the Peace Movement."

At 4 o'clock in Carnegie Hall there will be a young people's meeting addressed by W. T. Stead, Dr. Nathan C. Schaeffer, Baron d'Esteurnelles Constant, Señorita Huldobro of Chile, Dr. James Walsh, Prof. Henry T. Bailey, and Rabbi Stephen S. Wise.

The Columbia and Yale Glee Clubs will be present at the evening session at Carnegie Hall at 8:15 o'clock. It will be a university meeting and will be addressed by President Eliot of Harvard, Dr. John Rhys, Pro-Chancellor of the University of Oxford; the Rev. E. S. Roberts, Miss Jane Addams, Dr. Felix Adler, Edwin D. Mead, and President Edmund J. James of the University of Illinois.

Another evening session will be held in Cooper Union, presided over by James Duncan of the Federation of Labor. The subject of the meeting is "Organized Labor in Relation to the Peace Movement." Algernon S. Crapsey of Rochester and W. T. Stead will address the meeting, as will John B. Lennon, James O'Connell, Dennis A. Haynes, Frank K. Foster, Daniel J. Keefe, John F. Tobin, Joseph Valentine, and James J. Murphy.

There will be a conference of student delegates at Columbia University at 10:30 o'clock, a reception at the Barnard Club, Carnegie Hall Building, at 1; another reception at Sherry's from 2 to 4 o'clock, and a third reception, held by President Nicholas Murray Butler and Mrs. Butler, in Earl Hall, Columbia University, from 4 to 6 o'clock.

ITALY'S PLAN REJECTED.

Powers Opposed to Concrete Proposal for Limiting Armaments.

ROME, April 15.—The proposition of the Italian Foreign Minister, Signor Tittoni, regarding the discussion of the limitation of armaments at The Hague Peace Conference, intended to avoid hurting the susceptibilities of powers not in favor of the original proposition, was, in brief, that a concrete proposition for the limitation of armaments should be communicated in advance to all the powers, to be discussed after the programme presented by Russia had been voted by the conference, with the understanding that the powers might either reject the proposition or recommend it for the consideration of the powers.

Great Britain and other powers have declined to accept the proposition. Great Britain not being desirous of placing herself in the position of having her proposition the only one voted upon, and, therefore, the only one rejected.

Germany also rejected Signor Tittoni's proposition, which is considered in official circles here to be most strange in view of the fact that the Italian Foreign Minister and the German Imperial Chancellor, Prince von Buelow, at their recent meet at Rapolla, had agreed that Italy and Germany should act in unison at The Hague. It is reported that this apparent change in Germany's attitude was due to the fact that Emperor William was "not willing to have a sword of Damocles, in the form of the question of the limitation of armaments, constantly dangling over his head."

Austria and Russia take the same view of the Italian proposition as Germany does.

DISDAIN PEACE CONGRESS.

Kaiser's Representatives Prefer to Study Pittsburg's Resources.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 15.—At a banquet at the German Club of Pittsburg to-night Baron von Moeller, German Minister of State, special guest of the club, created some enthusiasm by making the following remark:

"I feel that my time is better employed in looking into the vast industrial resources of Pittsburg than in taking part in a theoretical discussion on peace at New York."

It is discovered to-night that all other members of Kaiser Wilhelm's official family who came to Pittsburg for the dedication, and who it was thought might go to New York to take part in the Peace Congress, are still in Pittsburg, giving no thought to the congress.

DAUGHTERS FOR PEACE.

Hobson Delegated to Carry Resolutions to the Conference Here.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The Continental Congress of the Daughters of the American Revolution unanimously adopted a resolution to-day in favor of international peace. Representative Richmond P. Hobson of Alabama, who addressed the convention in behalf of peace, was delegated as the special envoy to present the resolution to the Peace Congress in New York City.

The resolution reads in part:

Resolved, That the President General is hereby authorized to appoint a commission to present to the Peace Congress at New York a copy of the resolutions, and also to present to Mr. Andrew Carnegie the great peace flag, tendered to him as an appreciation of his services to the cause of peace.

That the Continental Congress advocates the proposition in regard to the ten nations contributing to the cause of peace about one-tenth of 1 per cent. of the sum devoted to war, and indorse as well the peace pilgrimage recently suggested by William T. Stead of London.

On behalf of the Continental Congress, Mrs. McLean, President General, said it was an unusual honor for any woman's organization to be invited to participate in a movement looking to universal peace among the nations of the earth.

New De Forest Wireless Plant Starts.

The Royal Mail steamship Tagus arrived at Southampton yesterday. She was the first passenger vessel sent to England equipped with the De Forest wireless apparatus since the establishment of the new De Forest station at Hartland Point. The company report that the Tagus got into wireless communication with the Hartland Point station when 600 miles at sea, and that messages were received and sent until the vessel reached Southampton.

New Fireboats to be Launched To-day.

The new fireboats Thomas Willett and James Duane will be launched this afternoon at the yards of Alexander Miller & Brother at Newburg. Mayor McClellan will attend the launching, going to Newburg in his automobile with ex-Fire Commissioners O'Brien and Hayes. Deputy Commissioner Wise of Brooklyn will take another automobile party to the ceremonies. The fireboat New Yorker will give an exhibition immediately after the launching.

CALL FOR POLICE IN POLICE SITE ROW

Plan to Build In Fine Brooklyn Section Stirs Property Owners.

SITE NEAR PARK PLAZA

Grout, Boody, and Others Fight the Scheme, and McGowan Hints It Will Be Killed.

There was a tumultuous hearing, which seemed for a time likely to break into a row, in the Brooklyn Borough Hall yesterday over Deputy Police Commissioner O'Keeffe's proposal to put the new Brooklyn police headquarters at Flatbush Avenue and Sterling Place, in one of the sections of residential Brooklyn. A dozen men tried to talk at the same time, there were yells and derisive cries, and after some one shouted "Call a patrol wagon!" Commissioner O'Keeffe jumped up on the platform and begged the debaters to calm themselves.

The hearing was before the committee appointed by the Board of Estimate, composed of Controller Metz, President McGowan of the Aldermen, and Public Works Commissioner Desmond Dunne of Brooklyn. Several hundred men, who either favored or opposed Mr. O'Keeffe's plan, were crowded into the room when the hearing began. It soon developed that the opposition to the scheme was made up largely of prominent residents and property owners of the Park Slope, where it is proposed to locate the headquarters, while many of those favoring the plan were from Bath Beach, Canarsie, Ridgewood, and other neighborhoods far removed from the Park Slope.

Among the opponents of the idea were ex-Controller Edward M. Grout, ex-Mayor David A. Boody, William N. Dykman, President of the Riding and Driving Club; ex-President Frank L. Babbott of the Board of Education; Prof. Franklin W. Hooper of the Brooklyn Institute, and Judson G. Wall, President of the Prospect Heights Citizens' Association.

The opposition suggested that it would be better to house the police with the Department of Health in the new building which is to be erected on the Flatbush Avenue extension, near Fulton Street, where many car lines converge.

Commissioner O'Keeffe had read off a list of the names of those who favored the plan, when ex-Controller Grout pointed out that most of these men lived far from the site under consideration. At this three or four men sprang to their feet and began firing volleys of questions at Mr. Grout. One wanted to know why the ex-Controller had said it would take two and one-half years to erect the building and that Commissioner O'Keeffe would then be out of office. Mr. Grout replied that he had been merely quoting Mr. O'Keeffe himself. Several others tried to make themselves heard at the same time.

It was at this point that Mr. O'Keeffe sprang upon the platform and calmed the rising storm.

Mr. Boody, who was one of the leaders of the opposition, said that no more objectionable plan could have been thought of.

"When the extensive plans for improvement are carried out," said he, "the Prospect Park Plaza will be one of the finest, if not the most beautiful, in the world. Here will be the $2,500,000 Central Library, the splendid building of the Brooklyn Institute of Arts and Sciences, the impressive Memorial Arch, and other beautiful and imposing structures. Yet it is proposed to destroy the harmony and beauty of things which would prevail there, locating at the very entrance to the plaza this Police Headquarters building.

"Near to the entrance where handcuffed criminals will be brought will stand two public schools and the Institute for Homeless Children. However beautiful this building may be made, it will still be a place to which criminals are brought."

Thomas P. Peters, who also spoke in favor of the scheme, tried to convince the committee that not more than a shadow of the building would be seen from the park entrance.

"Very likely not more than a shadow of what it is proposed to make it, when the Board of Estimate gets through with it," said President McGowan, dryly.

One man who spoke in favor of the plan said he represented a $10,000,000 syndicate which was preparing to spend that much money improving property in the neighborhood. He subsided when Mr. Grout asserted that the corporation the man said he represented possessed neither the property in question nor the money to buy it.

It is expected that the committee will report on the hearing to the Board of Estimate on Friday.

McCARREN TELLS BINGHAM

Just what Senator Patrick Henry McCarren would do if he were Police Commissioner was told by him yesterday in a talk on police conditions to a group of visitors at Democratic headquarters in Brooklyn. He asserted that while Commissioner Bingham and his men were devoting their chief efforts to the spectacular work of ferreting out poolrooms and other gambling places and the suppression of liquor selling out of hours, innocent citizens were being knocked on the head by thugs, their homes were being invaded by thieves, and their lives were unsafe in the public streets.

"Let 'em gamble and let 'em drink, if they want to," said McCarren, "but make the city a safe place for its people to live in.

"The Commissioner did not need the recently enacted law to empower him to restore efficiency to the force," he added. "If I was Commissioner, with all the power he has had, I am sure I would enforce discipline. If I could not, I would conclude that there was something the matter with me and quit the job."

BINGHAM GETS READY FOR THAT SHAKE-UP

And Hereafter Baseball Leagues Will Have to Police Their Own Grounds.

THREAT TO STOP GAMES

New Detective List Drawn Up, So When Reform Bill Is Signed the Axe May Fall Quickly.

Police Commissioner Bingham got back yesterday from somewhere. He would not tell where he spent his week's vacation, but most likely the State of New Jersey had him. It had been expected that Gov. Hughes would have signed the Commissioner's Reform bill yesterday, and that the same day would see the most radical shake-up the department has ever known. The new bill gives the Commissioner power to drop any police official he may regard as being worthy of dismissal.

Gov. Hughes having postponed signing the bill a few days for a possible hearing as to its merits, Commissioner Bingham wouldn't talk about the coming shake-up definitely.

"Oh, I won't say anything as to any shake-up until the bill is signed, if it is signed," he declared yesterday. "I don't know when any hearing on it will be had."

Commissioner Bingham admitted that an order had been sent out calling for the names and qualifications of all men in the department who can speak several languages, who have had training in law or any of the other professions, or who may be fitted by education or experience to do some special line of work. It is taken for granted that he wants this information to help him in the selection of men to take the places of those who are to be ousted from the Detective Department in the coming reorganization. He will consult a list made of the most boyish looking and smaller policemen in making these selections.

"As for trouble at the Polo Grounds which you boys mention," the Commissioner went on, "I will not give those baseball people any policemen inside the grounds, and if the men behind the game do not make full provision for protecting the public, why, I'll have the games stopped, that's all. The department, which is a public institution, will not do police work for private citizens and corporations. The police have been withdrawn from the interior of the Grand Central Station, and from Madison Square Garden, when there is a private function there, and they will not do inside police work for baseball people. I told them so a year ago, that they might have time to attend to the matter."

Roundsman Michael J. O'Grady of the Information Bureau and Policeman Thomas G. Clark of the Bureau of Repairs and Supplies were ousted from their easy berths yesterday because of complaints of disrespectful treatment of visitors. Deputy Commissioner Bugher sent them to distant precincts to do patrol duty.

Another piece of reform work done by Mr. Bugher was to rummage around in the basement until he found a bag of old badges and shields. They should have been destroyed when they went out of use. That they weren't explains the occasional arrest of persons using old shields and posing as policemen and detectives. The find may cause one or two more Headquarters policemen to go back to patrol duty.

Inspector Schmittberger was worked up yesterday about a story that the four hundred and odd Traffic Squad policemen had been shaken down for $5 apiece to pay for a "vindication dinner" at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel for Inspector Schmittberger. He said it was a lie. As for the dinner, the men of the Traffic Squad will give their usual annual dinner at the Waldorf-Astoria in May on the night of the regular parade, and that was all. Inspector Schmittberger said he didn't need any vindication.

J. B. STEWART RESIGNS.

COLONIAL PREMIERS MEET IN LONDON

Premier Campbell-Bannerman Reminds Them That Their Powers Are Limited.

NO DECISIONS BINDING

Laurier and Deakin Voice the View That Every Community Knows What Is Best for Itself.

LONDON, April 15.—The fourth conference between the Premiers of Great Britain's self-governing colonies and the British Colonial Secretary was opened this morning at the Colonial Office, under the Presidency of the Earl of Elgin, Secretary of State for the Colonies. Reporters are not admitted to the conference, so the public will have to be content with strictly censored official summaries of each day's proceedings until a Blue Book on the conference is issued, months after its final adjournment.

The Premiers present included Dr. Jameson of Cape Colony, Gen. Louis Botha, Premier of the Transvaal; Alfred Deakin, the Australian Premier; Sir Joseph G. Ward, Premier of New Zealand; Frederick R. Moor, Premier of Natal, and Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Premier of Canada. Premier Sir Robert Bond of Newfoundland will arrive in the middle of the week. The Premiers were accompanied by their advisers. A number of British Cabinet Ministers attended teh morning session.

Premier Campbell-Bannerman opened the proceedings with a speech of welcome, in which he outlined the subjects for discussion, such as preferential trade between the colonies and Great Britain and among the colonies themselves, a project providing for a permanent Council, Imperial defense schemes, and emigration with rubber questions, such as penny postage, naturalization, and patent laws.

Tho Premier earnestly expressed the hope that the deliberations would have useful results. This was not a conference between the Premiers and the Colonial Secretary, he said, but between them and the members of the Government, which was a very different matter. He hoped an agreement might be reached on the points under discussion, but if there were differences between the Premiers and the Government they would agree to differ in a perfectly friendly manner.

They had no power to arrive at any binding decisions, for the Imperial Government could not go behind the declared opinions of the country and Parliament, but subject to this limitation there were many matters of great moment in which there was room for arrangements of mutual advantage.

Speaking for himself, his colleagues, and the British public, the Premier regretted that Joseph Chamberlain was unable to be present and participate actively in public affairs.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier made a brief reply. He said he recognized the difficulties besetting the Premiers, and that public opinion here might not run in the same groove as in the Colonies. "But we are all agreed," he continued, "on the desirability of the proper and permanent recognition of the principle that every community knows what is best for itself."

Alfred Deakin spoke in a similar vein, but advocated publicity for most of the proceedings. He said the greatest risk the conference could run was that of being ignored and misunderstood, and he regretted that previous conferences had failed in their full effect in the antipodes.

Dr. Jameson made a vigorous speech in which he said he hoped that South Africa would be consolidated and represented at the next conference by one Premier. He expected lasting results from this conference leading to further unity, not merely from the sentimental standpoint, but in the practical and material interest of the component parts of the empire.

Other Premiers having spoken a telegram of sympathy was sent to Mr. Chamberlain, expressing the hope that he would be speedily restored to public life. After this the conferes discussed the procedure and then adjourned. Meetings will be held three times a week, and they are expected to last at least a month.

TO CUT POSTAGE TO CANADA.

Big Reduction by Britain in Rate on Magazines and Newspapers.

LONDON, April 15.—The postage on newspapers, magazines, and trade journals between Great Britain and Canada will be reduced to 2 cents per pound on May 1, instead of the present charge of 8 cents, thus putting Great Britain in a more favorable postal position toward Canada in respect to these classes of publications than any other country.

In making the announcement in the House of Commons to-day Postmaster General Buxton said the concession must not be regarded as a precedent for a reduction in other cases. It was based on the very special and peculiar position occupied by Canada, geographical and otherwise, by which British newspapers, &c., were unable to obtain a footing in Canada.

The arrangement, Mr. Buxton added, was experimental and was limited at present to four years.

TAFT TO PORTO RICANS.

Tells Them Difficulties Stand in Way of American Citizenship.

SAN JUAN, Porto Rico, April 15.—Secretary of War Taft, who arrived here yesterday on board the Government yacht Mayflower, spent the day in consultation with various heads of departments inquiring minutely as to details in an effort to ascertain the reasons for the grievances of the people. Among others he conferred with Surgeon General Robert M. O'Reilly relative to the building now being used as a military hospital.

The Supreme Court and the Executive Council entertained the Secretary at luncheon. In a speech of welcom Chief Justice Quinones expressed the hope that the Porto Rican children now growing up would receive from the United States the great honor of American citizenship.

Secretary Taft made a brief reply, in which he said Porto Rico was free from many of the difficulties existing in the Philippines and Cuba, and he called attention to the fact that trade with the United States had brought prosperity and contentment to the islands. Referring to citizenship, he said:

"I beg of you to think of those things which you do have; let me call your attention to them. You have what is desired by the Philippines and Cuba, namely, the unsurpassed markets of the United States. What I am saying is not intended to oppose citizenship, but there are difficulties in the way of securing the passage of such laws through Congress."

LIMOGES POTTERY CRISIS.

Conditions Which Cause Trouble with American Customs Authorities.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

PARIS, April 15.—Stories published in some Paris papers represent that Limoges, famous for its pottery manufactures, is on the verge of an industrial crisis, owing to the action of the American Customs in holding up between 3,000 and 4,000 crates of ware in consequence of undervaluation by exporters.

The crisis, if crisis there be, is one which has been developing in the past ten years, during the course of which the Federal Customs authorities have been continually at odds with exporting firms, like Havilands, regarding the valuation of goods. A Treasury official a few years ago was specially detailed to investigate. The result showed that the question was a very difficult and complex one, owing, principally, to the extremely slight difference between what is known in the trade as first and second-class wares, which is frequently puzzling to experts. The manufacturers are hoping that the evidence submitted to the Customs authorities will clear away the difficulty.

The Treasury officials here say they have not had any recent instructions in the matter, and that the new developments reported are not the outcome of the reports sent through Paris.

SUTTON LEAVES FRANCE.

Billiard Champion, Expelled, Goes to Amsterdam.

Special Cablegram.

Copyright, 1907, by THE NEW YORK TIMES Co.

PARIS, April 15.—George Sutton, the American holder of the world's championship at the 18-inch-balk-line billiard game, left Paris this morning for Amsterdam as a result of the polite but undeniable invitation of the French authorities to quit the country.

Sutton has been playing at a well-known establishment on the Boulevards where a certain number of professors of the cue play games upon which the public bets—which comes under the French gambling laws prohibiting games of chance.

Inquiries made to-day disclosed a curious state of affairs. All exponents of the games in these establishments have incurred a greater or less number of convictions. When French citizens among them reach a certain limit of number of convictions they become liable to imprisonment, while non-French players in similar cases are expelled.

In the case of Sutton he was warned some time ago what was in store for him if he continued to play his spectacular game of chance.

DENOUNCES KING LEOPOLD.

Radical Leader in Belgian Chamber Roused by Mines Decree.

BRUSSELS, April 15.—Paul Janson, the Radical leader in the Chamber of Deputies, in an interview to-day indignantly denounced the action of King Leopold in withdrawing by royal decree the Government bill concerning the hours of labor in the mines, which, he said, the country regarded as an insult to Parliament and the nation. A dissolution of Parliament, M. Janson added, was thereby rendered necessary, but before being dissolved Parliament ought to demand an apology for the attack on its dignity.

King Leopold's return is expected to mark the beginning of a new phase in the struggle between the monarch and Parliament over the question of the annexation of the Congo Free State by Belgium. The King is ulaiterably opposed to annexation, and for the time being seems complete master of the situation. His refusal to permit the Congo administration, of which he is the absolute, untrammeled monarch, to furnish information concerning the finances of his African State to the parliamentary commission of the country of which he is the constitutional King practically checkmates the Parliament.

Public opinion in Belgium is divided as to the advisability of annexing the Congo.

Notes of Foreign News.

HAMBURG, April 15.—Director Ballin of the Hamburg-American Line to-day declared in behalf of the Harbor Traffic Union that the union was ready to resume negotiations with the locked-out longshoremen, provided not only those but all local longshoremen desisted from participation in the May day celebration.

TANGIER, April 15.—The Sultan's uncle, Moulay Lamine, commander of the Moorish forces at Casablanca, is dead. The arrival of a French warship at Casablanca had the effect of tranquillizing the inhabitants of the town, but it is still dangerous for Europeans to go outside the walls.

GIBRALTAR, April 15.—The British steamer Andalusia, from Swansea for Barcelona, foundered on Saturday off the Spanish coast. Her Captain, first officer, and a sailor were picked up and brought here. All the rest of the crew are believed to have been drowned. The Andalusia was of 1,212 tons net, 287 feet long; had 34.5 feet beam, and was 24.6 feet deep. She was owned by the Iberian Steamship Company, Limited.

LILLE, France, April 15.—The greatest interest was aroused in the Law Faculty this afternoon by the opening of a course of thirty lectures on the subject of "American Law and American Institutions." The lecturer, Charles F. Beach, Jr., of New York, received a most cordial reception. He will stay here until the end of July, after which he will lecture before the Paris Faculty and later will deliver lectures in Southern France.

PARIS, April 15.—In view of the strong representations made in behalf of the population of Orleans and the threatened debate in the Chamber of Deputies against the order to the military not to participate in the Jean d'Arc festivities, Premier Clemenceau has modified his instructions to the authorities and has consented to permit the garrison of Orleans to take part in the celebrations and processions on a more important scale than usual, on condition that the clergy join in the ceremonies as simple citizens.

PIUS X. CREATES SEVEN CARDINALS

Also Appoints a Number of Archbishops and Bishops at Secret Consistory.

DENOUNCES FRENCH RULERS

But Loves "That Most Noble Nation," France—New Cardinal Once a Newspaper Man.

ROME, April 15.—Pope Pius X. held a Secret Consistory this morning in the Vatican and created seven Cardinals, as follows: Mgr. Cavallari, Patriarch of Venice; Mgr. Rinaldini, Papal Nuncio to Spain; Mgr. Lorenzelli, ex-Papal Nuncio at Paris; Mgr. Lualdi, Archbishop of Palermo; Mgr. Mercier, Archbishop of Malines; Mgr. Maffi, Archbishop of Pisa, and Mgr. Aguirre y Garcia, Bishop of Burgos, Spain. Archbishops and Bishops appointed included Mgr. Albert Guertin, Bishop of Manchester, N. H.; Mgr. James Davis, Bishop of Davenport, Iowa; Mgr. Emanuele Ruiz y Rodriguez, Bishop of Pinar del Rio, Cuba, and the Rigbt Rev. William A. Jones, Bishop of Porto Rico. Cardinal Martinelli was appointed Chamberlain of the Sacred College.

The Pope, in an allocution delivered to the Sacred College, referred to the struggle in France, which he said was particularly painful to him, as he loved that "most noble nation."

"Its sorrows and joys," he went on, "I consider as my own instead of being those of her French rulers, who, after arbitrarily denouncing the Concordat, violently despoiling the Church, and failing to recognize the ancient and true glory of the country, tried to uproot the remains of religion by committing all kinds of excesses, even those most repugnant to French politeness, violating with the gravest offense every public and private law and custom. In so doing they calumniated the episcopacy and clergy, tried to separate them from the Holy See, and purposely utilized the national institutions to further their anti-religious war, so as to be able to accuse the Holy See of being in opposition to French popular institutions, which in reality were always recognized and respected."

The Pope made no reference to the Montagnini affair.

The creation of seven new Cardinals makes a total membership of sixty-two in the Sacred College. There are thirty-seven Italians and twenty-five foreigners. Fifty years ago the Italian element had a majority of forty-nine. For several weeks it was feared that the Pope was about to allow the Italian element another member, but at the last moment he listened to counsel and appointed the Bishop of Burgos, Spain, a Cardinal.

In the group of prelates raised to the Cardinalate is a practical newspaper man, one who when he was not burdened with the carea of a Bishopric knew the joy of getting something for his papers that others were sure not to get, and of having in the paper he owned and edited "beats" and "scoops." He is Cardinal Maffi, who will this week leave the famous Primatial See of Tuscany and remain at Rome as one of the councilors of Piux X. Pietro Maffi is not yet 50 years old. He is a Lombard by birth. About this time last year the City of Pisa celebrated the silver jubilee of his ordination. Before he was a priest he was a newspaper man, wrote for local papers, and was correspondent for Roman dailies and several foreign dailies.

As he grew older his mind leaned toward the sciences. After his ordination he was Professor of Physics and the Natural Sciences at Pisa Seminary. He built an observatory at Pisa, and later reorganized the Vatican Observatory, which was regarded as a monumental task. While at the seminary in Pisa he owned and edited Il Ticino, a weekly paper. On the death of Mgr. Capponi he was appointed to the See of Tuscany. This was the last episcopal nomination of Leo XIII. Cardinal Maffi has presided over several big meetings of scientists from all parts of the world. In addition to his work as a theologian, physicist, and newspaper man, the Cardinal has written several novels. One of them, "The Village Hawks," is said to be his best effort in this line.

BONILLA ON THE PRINCETON.

Honduran President Taken to Mexico —Conference with Bacon.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—Dispatches were received at the Navy Department to-day from Commander Doyle, the senior naval officer in Pacific waters, in the vicinity of Central America, saying that the gunboat Princeton left Amapala on Saturday with President Bonilla of Honduras on board. It waa said that the Princeton is proceeding to Acapulco, Mexico, and that President Bonilla would be left at Salina Cruz, Mexico. 1lis departure is in compliance with an agreement entered into between President Zelaya of Nicaragua and President Figuera of Salvador, that the Honduran President shall quit Central America.

Commander Doyle reported the arrival of the gunboat Boston, which is to relieve the Chicago. The terms of tho surrender to Nicaraguan forces of the Honduran port of Amapala are being carried out peacefully. The plan for a general conference to consider the relations of the Central American States in the future is being received with satisfaction.

Ministers Calvo of Costa Rica, and Mejia of Salvador, conferred to-day with Acting Secretary of State Bacon concerning conditions in Central America.

New Plan for Cuban Army.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—The General Staff has transmitted to Gov. Magoon a complete project for the creation and maintennnce of a standing army for Cuba, composed entirely of native troops, and numbering about 12,000 men. The adoption of this project involves the abandonment of the original plan for the increase of the Cuban rural guard.

FOOD RUSHED TO STARVING.

500,000 Pounds of Potatoes for Chinese —Steamboats on Upper Grand Canal.

SHANGHAI, April 15.—The sum of $5,000, received from the United States by the Famine Relief Committee to-day, was used to purchase half a million pounds of dried potatoes, which were rushed to the front.

A dispatch was received to-day from a Chinese official, offering to put, for the first time in history, steamboats above the locks on the Grand Canal, thus cutting down the time of the transportation of food to the famine districts from thirty to eight days.

Further particulars of the distress existing show that people are eating the green scum from the ponds, white clay, and the hulls of rice. A farmer who fell at the city gates from weakness due to lack of food lay on the road for twenty-four hours, and then died. Two villagers on reaching their doorsteps fell dead from starvation.

The Relief Committee was able to secure enough milk for one depot to feed 100 babies until the harvest, with the result that about 100 more lives have been saved. The committee, however, has been compelled to leave about 400 other babies in that district to die.

HAD PRISONERS BUTCHERED.

Russian Officials Under Charges Said to Have Prepared Fake Mutiny.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 15.—The mutiny in the prison at Riga April 13, when thirty-three prisoners attacked and overcame the Superintendent and Wardens, necessitating th esummoning of troops, who fired on the mutineers, killing seven and wounding twelve of them, was the subject of an interpellation in the lower house of Parliament to-day.

Deputy Ozol of Riga asserted that he had information to the effect that the affair was deliberately arranged by the prison authorities in order to dispose of several prisoners who had been tortured in order to obtain confessions from them, which resulted in an official investigation of the affair and the commencement of proceedings against the guilty persons. The Deputy insisted that the prisoners made no attempt to escape, as nleged by the prison authorities at Riga.

Another interpellation of the Government to-day concerned the alleged torturing of a prisoner confined in the jail at Astrakhan, as a result of which the man is said to have deliberately burned himself to death.

TAKE LAW IN OWN HANDS.

Workmen at Lodz Driving Out the Terrorist Agitators.

LODZ, Russian Poland, April 15.—During the last four weeks over one hundred workmen have been killed or wounded here as the result of labor feuds. The Government has failed to protect those who are willing to work, and the latter have taken matters into their own hands and are violently expelling the Terrorist, Anarchist, and Socialist agitators, whom they hold responsible for tho ruin of the industries of Lodz.

As the Jews form over 80 per cent. of the Socialists, there is some apprehension that the incensed workmen may engage in an anti-Semitic outbreak.

Plot to Murder Father Petroff.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 15.—Information has come to the leaders of the Constitutional Democratic Party that an attempt is being planned for the killing of Father Petroff, the noted St. Petersburg labor leader and Constitutional Democratic Deputy, who is at present imprisoned in a monastery, as soon as he is released. Suspicious individuals have recently joined the monastery where Petroff is confined. The members of the Black Hundred are anxious, at all costs, to keep Petroff out of the Dumn.

Nebogatoff Serving His Sentence.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 15.—Rear Admiral Nebogatoff, who commanded the Russian Third Pacific Squadron, which surrendered at the battle of the Sea of Japan, who was tried by court-martial and sentenced to death, but whose sentence was commuted to ten years' imprisonment in a fortress, has begun to serve his term in the Fortress of St. Peter and St. Paul. He was allowed to choose the time for the commencement of his sentence, has been assigned to a comfortably furnished room, and will be allowed to have a special diet.

Hope for Russian Suffragettes.

ST. PETERSBURG, April 15.—Prince Paul Dolgorukoff received a delegation this evening from the "Feminists," who pleaded that the Constitutional Democrats take up the question of woman suffrage in the House. V. A. Maklakoff and other Constitutional Democrats informed the delegation in earnest and courteous addresses that the party would champion the cause of woman legislation to this end would be introduced when feasible.

MANCHURIA AGAIN IN CHINA'S CONTROL

All Russian and Japanese Troops Withdrawn Except Railway Guards.

REPLACED BY CELESTIALS

Hsu-Shih-Chang to be Viceroy—Japanese Railroad Director Promises Fair Play to All Nations.

PEKING, April 15.—The Russian and Japanese troops have now completely evacuated Manchuria, according to the terms of the treaty of Portsmouth, only retaining a certain number of railway guards. All military movements have ceased, and the Manchurian towns, &c., which were under Russian and Japanese control have been returned to the Chinese authorities.

Since the handing over of Mukden to the Chinese the evacuation of Manchuria by the Japanese had been going on gradually, the Chinese local authorities stepping in and taking over the administration of the places evacuated by the Japanese. Chinese troops had already departed from Heilungkiang to replace the garrisons of the towns evacuated by the Russians.

It is intended to have a considerable number of disciplined Chinese troops in the three Manchurian provinces, and it is understood that the administration of Manchuria will be reorganized, after which a definite statement will be made regarding the distribution of the troops.

China's note to Japan, expressing her hearty appreciation of the complete withdrawal of the Japanese troops from Manchuria, gives emphatic assurances that the Chinese Government will shortly proceed with the reorganization of the administration of the Manchurian provinces. It is understood that special powers will be given to Hsu-Shih-Chang, President of the Board of Public Safety and a Grand Councilor, who has been selected to be first Viceroy of Manchuria.

TOKIO, April 15.—The work of withdrawing the Japanese troops from Manchuria was completed April 8, and China has therefore expressed her hearty appreciation of the fact in a note to the Japanese Government. Baron Goto, to the management of whose company the Manchurian Railroad was transferred April 1, in an interview to-dny, said:

"The last vestige of war in Manchuria has now been removed. Fair play is my guiding principle. In promoting the peaceful development of Manchuria, through which our railway runs, national differences will be entirely ignored. Manchuria will be made a field for the fair competition of all nations."

ST. PETERSBURG, April 15.—The expiration of the eighteen months' limit for the evacuation of Manchuria by the Russian and Japanese troops was marked by the nomination to-day of Russian Consuls at Kirin and Tsitsihar, the last two towns in Manchuria to pass from Russian hands to the Chinese civil administration. The evacuation of the Russian troops was completed March 21, almost a month ahead of the specified date.

An official of the Foreign Office, commenting to-day on Russia's premature withdrawal, said:

"It is a complete justification of Russia's good faith in fulfilling the treaty. It was insinuated when the treaty was signed that Russia never would abandon Manchuria, but would find some means of evading her obligations. But the expiration of the stipulated period finds not a single soldier of the Russian military establishment left in Manchuria.

"The railroad guards, approximately 8,000 men, as provided for by the treaty, are commanded by Gen. Chicagoff, and are attached to the Ministry of Railroads, and not to the War Ministry. The functions of the guards are confined strictly to the railroad. The policing of the country and the repression of the Chinese bandits have been turned over to the Chinese troops."

Great Japanese Battleship Launched.

KURE, Japan, April 15.—The battleship Aki was launched here this morning in the presence of a representative of the Japanese Emperor and Vice Admiral Sir Arthur William Moore, Commander in Chief of the British Eastern Fleet. It is said that the Aki will be fitted with turbine engines. The Aki is of 19,000 tons, has an armored belt five to nine inches thick, and will carry four twelve-inch, twelve ten-inch, and twelve four and seven-tenths-inch guns.

HARPERS BOOKS

THE CRUISE OF THE "SHINING LIGHT"
By Norman Duncan

A story of love and mystery, of childhood and manhood, of humor and pathos. A story one cannot forget—the sort of book that can be read aloud. The people of the book are real people—the boy Dannie, old Nick Top, who brings the boy up to be a gentleman, after the rules of Lord Chesterfield, and the girl Judith, whom Dannie loves from childhood.

A novel full of the same fine, manly, religious feeling which marked the author's earlier success, Dr. Luke of the Labrador. A story that holds one as the great old-time novels hold and demands more than a single reading.

THE MYSTICS
By Katherine Cecil Thurston

A new novel—a story of romance and mystery in London by the author of The Masquerader. Scene follows scene with the same persistent excitement and breathless fascination.

CHRISTIAN SCIENCE
By Mark Twain

The keenest and most searching exposition of Christian Science that has yet been made. It is the result of years of painstaking investigation, and is written with an honestness of purpose and delightfulness of humor which make it, while instructive, also deeply entertaining.

KATHERINE
By E. Temple Thurston

In the very morning of life Katherine finds that she has only two more years to live, and reckless of all, she grasps at the romance and love which have never come to her empty life. The story hangs on the brink of tragedy.

TIBERIUS SMITH
By Hugh Pendexter

A story of rollicking humor, not fine spun, but healthful, delightful, funny. The Brooklyn Eagle says: "Never before did a book show so many curious and astonishing situations. The ingenuity is endless. And it is always funny!"

SHOT DOWN AGED MAN.

Roumanian Soldiers Suppressed Peasant Revolt by Massacres.

BUCHAREST, April 15.—The Adeverul publishes some dreadful particulars concerning the measures made use of recently in the suppression of the peasant revolt. It appears that at Viatu, when the soldiers appeared, the peasants fled to the forests, leaving behind them only some helpless old men. The soldiers arrested twenty-five of these, including the Burgomaster named Constantinesou, who was 82 years of age.

They were all executed under martial law. Constantinescu's grandson, a boy of 14, was compelled to witness the execution.

Similar wholesale shootings occurred at other villages, and it is recited that at Cincalmare fifty men, including the Archpriest Maracine and his secretary, were shot down. Large numbers of the individuals thus executed were completely innocent of participation in the riots.

TRUTH AND QUALITY

appeal to the Well-Informed in every walk of life and are essential to permanent success and creditable standing, therefore we wish to call the attention of all who would enjoy good health, with its blessings, to the fact that it involves the question of right living with all the term implies. With proper knowledge of what is best each hour of recreation, of enjoyment, of contemplation and of effort may be made to contribute to that end and the use of medicines dispensed with generally to great advantage, but as in many instances a simple, wholesome remedy may be invaluable if taken at the proper time, the California Fig Syrup Co. feels that it is alike important to present truthfully the subject and to supply the one perfect laxative remedy which has won the appoval of physicians and the world-wide acceptance of the Well-Informed because of the excellence of the combination, known to all, and the original method of manufacture, which is known to the California Fig Syrup Co. only.

This valuable remedy has been long and favorably known under the name of—Syrup of Figs—and has attained to world-wide acceptance as the most excellent of family laxatives, and as its pure laxative principles, obtained from Senna, are well known to physicians and the Well-Informed of the world to be the best of natural laxatives, we have adopted the more elaborate name of—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as more fully descriptive of the remedy, but doubtless it will always be called for by the shorter name of Syrup of Figs—and to get its beneficial effects always note, when purchasing, the full name of the Company—California Fig Syrup Co.—plainly printed on the front of every package, whether you simply call for—Syrup of Figs—or by the full name—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—as—Syrup of Figs and Elixir of Senna—is the one laxative remedy manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. and the same heretofore known by the name—Syrup of Figs—which has given satisfaction to millions. The genuine is for sale by all leading druggists throughout the United States in original packages of one size only, the regular price of which is fifty cents per bottle.

Every bottle is sold under the general guarantee of the Company, filed with the Secretary of Agriculture, at Washington, D. C., that the remedy is not adulterated or misbranded within the meaning of the Food and Drugs Act, June 30th, 1906.

PLAN TO GET THAW RELEASED ON BAIL

The Application May Be Made to Some Justice Outside This County.

O'REILLY ACTING FOR HIM

Seems to be the Lawyer in Charge Now—Juror Steele Visits Delmas at His Office.

Nothing is settled yet about the counsel who will appear for Harry K. Thaw when he again faces a jury on the charge of having murdered Stanford White. It was announced yesterday morning that the prisoner would issue a statement upon this point in the afternoon, but after seeing Mr. Peabody twice, he merely announced that neither he nor his family had authorized any statements since Saturday.

The only information on the present status of the case had to be drawn from the movements of the lawyers themselves

It was deemed significant that Daniel O'Reilly was the only lawyer beside Mr. Peabody to call on Thaw yesterday, and that he took a step which would naturally be the part of the attorney of record.

Mr. O'Reilly went to Clerk Penny of the Criminal Branch of the Supreme Court and requested him to lock up in the safe of the court all the exhibits produced at the trial. He explained afterward that he did this because Justice Fitzgerald was out of town, and something had to be done to ensure the safety of these documents. They could; for the most part, if destroyed be supplied by secondary evidence, but it was much better to have the originals at hand.

Until Mr. Jerome comes back from Lakeville no steps will be taken to get Thaw admitted to bail. The District Attorney wishes to talk the matter over with Mr. O'Reilly. It was learned yesterday that if, as Mr. Jerome has announced, the application is to be strenuously opposed, the defence will not hesitate to go out of the County of New York to find a complaisant judge.

Naturally Justice Fitzgerald would be the man to whom the request would be made, and, failing him, some other Supreme Court Justice of the County of New York. But any Supreme Court Justice of the State has equal jurisdiction in this matter, and Mr. O'Reilly will apply to whomever he thinks is most likely to listen to his argument.

All sorts of fancy sums have been mentioned as the figure at which bail, if granted, may be fixed, and as much as $1,000,000 has been talked of. The Thaw family do not anticipate that any such enormous deposit will be required. They received an unexpected offer of help in this matter yesterday. A man who said he was Samuel Fein, a cloak manufacturer of 441 Broadway, called at the Tombs and proffered his services as a surety on the bond.

Wilbur F. Steele, Juror No. 9, who was one of the five who stood out for the acquittal of Thaw on the ground of insanity, called on Mr. Delmas at his office in the Equitable Building yesterday and had a long conversation with him. He said afterward that he had merely gone to pay his respects, and that he would not have done so if he had not known that Mr. Delmas was finally out of the case.

Mr. Steele is a powerful advocate of the insanity theory, and has no faith in the "unwritten law" defense. Apparently referring to the fact that Mr. Delmas in his closing address ignored the question of the mental status of the defendant on the night of June 25 and laid all his stress upon the "unwritten law," he said:

"I was talking over with Mr. Delmas several points in connection with the case."

"Have you retained Mr. Delmas for any purpose?" he was asked.

"I won't say whether I have or I have not," he replied.

"Has your visit anything to do with your trouble in the jury room with Pfaff?" was the next question.

"I'm not afraid of Pfaff," said Mr. Steele, indignantly. "All the jurors were straight, and my life is open to investigation."

Mr. Delmas explained that he had known Mr. Steele's brother-in-law in California, and refused to state whether he had been retained in any capacity by the late juror.

"Are you out of the Thaw case?" he was asked.

"I refuse to discuss that matter in any way," he answered.

It is understood, however, that there is no likelihood whatever of Mr. Delmas appearing again for Thaw. Even if the defendant wished to retain him, the constant quarrels between counsel and the interference at the most critical moments of Thaw himself have decided Mr. Delmas to have nothing more to do with the case.

He will not return to California. He announced yesterday that he had rented offices in the new building of the American Realty Company for five years and that he would work up a practice in this city.

Mr. Hartridge would not discuss yesterday his own status in the case. It is known that because of the time he has had to devote to this criminal trial his regular civil law business has been neglected, and he prefers to attend to that part of his practice. It is even doubtful whether he is or is not still the counsel of record. During the trial Thaw wrote a note to Daniel O'Reilly making him counsel of record instead of Mr. Hartridge, but no action was taken upon it.

Mr. Peabody has a stronger hold upon the case in that he is a strong personal friend of the defendant, and all through the court proceedings shared with Mr. O'Reilly the task of explaining to Thaw the legal effect of the points which came up. However the shuffle comes out, he will be retained again.

Evelyn Nesbit Thaw, Mrs. William Thaw, and the Countess of Yarmouth visited the Tombs yesterday. To Mr. Peabody the defendant gave a walking cane made of various kinds of skin, with a handle mounted with pearls. It was sent to Thaw by F. R. Moore of Yuma, Ariz., and on the package was the inscription, "We all vote for acquittal. Wells Fargo Boys."

Howard Nesbit made affidavit at Pittsburg yesterday, denying that in his letter to Thaw, which was published on Sunday in THE TIMES, he had written the sentence:

"Perhaps I was wrong in coming here, (New York,) but my parents are responsible for that."

He swore that that had been interpolated, and said that he made the assertion voluntarily to clear his parents of the implied charge of having instigated him to appear as a witness against Thaw.

THAW'S MOTHER GOING HOME.

To Confer with Old Family Lawyers About Her Son's Next Trial.

Special to The New York Times.

PITTSBURG, April 15.—There is every reason to believe that Roger O'Mara, acting for Mrs. William Thaw, this afternoon retained Attorney John Marron as counsel for Harry K. Thaw in his next trial. Further than to admit that Attorney Marron is exactly the type of lawyer that the Thaws want, Mr. O'Mara will not talk. Mr. Marron is equally reticent.

Mrs. William Thaw is expected here within a fortnight for an important conference with several old friends of the late William Thaw, among them several lawyers, including D. T. Watson. At the written suggestion of Mrs. Thaw these lawyers had a conference last Saturday, when the affairs of the Thaw family were discussed. It was decided to inform Mrs. Thaw that if she wished to free her son it would be necessary to retain an entirely new set of lawyers and to make the fight solely on a plea that Thaw was insane when he shot White. The defendant himself must keep his hands out of the case, the lawyers say.

Preparations are being made at the new home of Mrs. William Thaw, adjoining Lyndhurst, for her return to this city.

RIGHT TO PUNISH PRESS.

Supreme Court Says ex-Senator Patterson Must Pay Fine for Contempt.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—A decision that freedom of the press is not so broad as to permit criticism of courts in such fashion as to interfere with the administration of justice was handed down by the United States Supreme Court to-day. The Court declined to overturn the action of the Colorado Supreme Court in fining ex-Senator Thomas M. Patterson $1,000, holding that it had no jurisdiction. Justice Holmes handed down the decision. Justices Harlan and Brewer dissented.

The proceedings against Mr. Patterson grew out of the Colorado Supreme Court's decisions in election cases following the acrimonious State campaign of 1904. Mr. Patterson is the principal owner of the Denver Times and the Rocky Mountain News, both Denver daily papers, and the contempt proceeding was on account of strictures on those decisions published in the two papers, in which the charge was inferred to have been made that the court was subservient to the corporation interests of the State.

When called upon to answer, Mr. Patterson pleaded the truth of the allegations made by the papers. The court imposed a fine of $1,000. Mr. Patterson provailed upon Justice Brewer to issue a writ of error, bringing the case to the Federal Supreme Court.

In his opinion Justice Holmes said:

"When a case is finished, courts are subject to the same criticism as other people, but the propriety and necessity of preventing interference with the courts of justice by premature statement, argument or intimidation hardly can be denied."

In his dissenting opinion Justice Harlan said:

"The public welfare cannot override constitutional privileges, and if the right of free speech and of a free press are in their essence attributes of national citizenship, then neither Congress nor any State since the adoption of the Fourteenth Amendment can, by legislation or judicial action, impair or abridge them. In my judgment the action of the court below was in violation of the right of free speech and a free press as guaranteed by the Constitution."

CHANLERS MUST PAY TAX.

Federal Supreme Court Upholds Levy on Mrs. Delano's Estate.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—A decision that the heirs of Mrs. Laura Astor Delano must pay a transfer tax on the estate under the New York law was handed down by the United States Supreme Court to-day. Winthrop Chanler and other heirs of the late Mrs. Delano brought the action against Controller Kelsey.

Mrs. Delano devised to members of the Astor family about $4,000,000 worth of property left her by her father, William B. Astor, under directions given by him before his death and before the transfer tax law was enacted. The question thus presented was whether the tax law, in imposing a tax under these conditions, is constitutional. The State courts sustained the law, and the Federal Supreme Court upheld them in that course.

The opinion was handed down by Justice Day. He found Mrs. Delano's will to be the culminating act in devising the property, and therefore held the law to be applicable. Justice Holmes delivered a dissenting opinion, in which Justice Moody concurred.

Rides and Then Plays Tennis with Jusserand, Garfield, and Pinchot.

WASHINGTON, April 15.—President Roosevelt, availing himself of the agreeable weather conditions, took more than his usual amount of out-of-door exercise to-day. In the morning he went riding for two hours and in the afternoon he joined in a tennis game for an almost equal length of time.

Accompanying the President on his ride were his son, Theodore, Jr., and Capt. Fitzhugh Lee, one of the military aides at the White House. They went out in the suburbs, where they spent some time in taking the hurdles, at which the President and his son are very proficient.

Ambassador Jusserand, Secretary Garfield, and Gifford Pinchot joined with the President in his tennis diversion on the rear of the Presidential offices.

Steamboat Inspectors Here Carry Their Quarrel to Washington.

It became known yesterday that the strained relations that had existed for more than a year between Theodore T. Merserian and Henry M. Seeley, both United States Steamboat Inspectors, had culminated last Saturday in a letter sent by Merserian to the Secretary of Commerce and Labor, in which he is said to have told the Secretary that he, Merserian, or Seeley must "get out."

Seeley is local Inspector of hulls and Merserian is local Inspector of boilers. Both are under the general supervision of Capt. Ira Harris, Supervising Inspector. The trouble in the first instance grew out of the question of the relative authority of the two subordinates.

National Safe Deposit Election.

The annual election of officers of the National Safe Deposit Company of New York was held yesterday. The following were elected: J. Lynch Pendergast, President; Theodore W.
